A few hundred such families are constantly furnishing the raw material, partly through the Sunday-school, to the pastor, out of which to build up the church. This material for church building is useless, except in very rare cases, one in a hundred, and then is never good, but difficult to work, and of poor or uncertain durability. The social and psychical constitution reads, that in most cases, before a child is the half of two years old—indeed, before the half of one year—his self-will is fixed, scarcely to be surrendered. A partial and conditional yielding is the utmost that may be looked for. Indeed, a partial, hesitating, compromising and conditional yielding is the most that parents generally look for, which is no obedience at all.

I emphasize obedience, for, be it known, that obedience is Christianity, and Christianity is obedience the world ever. Everything that is called doctrines in Bible religion is implied in and grows out of obedience. A child is required to obey his parents; an older person is required to obey God; or, the child obeys God in obeying his parents. Obedience is the opposite of self-will, with its dozen synonyms.

I have a letter before me from a young father and mother, with their first-born between one and two years old. It reads: "We are trying to rear our baby right, and I am glad to be able to say that he is as good and obedient a child as I ever saw. He hardly knows what crying is, and has no idea of disobedience. Some of my friends think I am very presumptuous in supposing that a baby has any idea about obedience, or any other idea, for that matter, higher than a calf."

Among that man's friends the fools are certainly not all dead. Give me enough of that sort of parents, and I will make a contract with bond and security, beginning ten years hence, to double or treble the church every year; and in the little space of fifty or a hundred years I will shatter the devil's kingdom to its foundation. I will take care of all such little outside agencies as missions, church extension, Sunday-schools, and the like. I will make it well-nigh impracticable for a sane man or woman to go away from church unconverted. I will merely give the gospel a fair chance. In that case no pastor shall dare to report his church "doing very well," with more people out of the church than in it! Now, more than nine-tenths of the preaching is appropriated to undoing the stupid blunders of cradle-life. Why not begin at the natural beginning? We do it in everything else.

Old heads do not grow on young shoulders. You can not teach a young child theology. You can not tell him about Christ, about atonement, about salvation by faith; but you can teach him, however young, all these things in their rudiments. The child himself is but rudimentary. To say that a child is an unintellectual beast until he grows to a mythical "period of accountability," is to talk unwisely. A child is an individual manhood.

There is, at least, one important precept of Scripture that is most singularly and most scrupulously kept by most mothers—in the letter, if not in the spirit: "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit to them." See how promptly it is done.

The baby a week old begins to whimper, is restive, wants something; is patted on the back—trotted; no, light the candle. Oh, that's what he wanted; and the demand is satisfied. And the mother is reminded that lighting the candle was what baby wanted last night. Don't blow the lamp out till baby goes to sleep, for he is sure to cry. Baby can't talk, but he can give orders, and in very peremptory tone, too, and require obedience. And the mother obeys as promptly as ever did any other slave. It is easily seen who rules in this government. And so in a score of instances through the day. If obedience be slow, he'll kick and squall the louder.

Only a few days ago; the family were preparing to go to church; buggies ready; two trips must be made, unless Sissy, a girl of five years, would consent to ride with some one else than her father. The mother says, "Oh, you know she won't ride with anyone else," and the two trips had to be made. And the almost criminal injustice to that child was not even noticed!

Surely, surely, no class of persons is so uniformly wronged, abused, deprived of rights, maltreated and injured, as the helpless infant! When will public attention, church attention, or some attention be directed to this important branch of domestic, social and political economy? When will the church wake up to this branch of plain Bible teaching? When will we make some religious use of a great and all-controlling law of nature we all know and understand so well, viz: the earlier habits are formed, the more lasting they are?

We had better follow the lead of our English brethren in this branch of pastoral-theology, and form Mothers' Unions everywhere. This could certainly be done to great advantage. A few women of the enterprising, godly sort could associate, have a few rules, inform themselves, teach each other, fill mothers with the importance of the measure, and the ease with which it can be carried forward, and the unmistakable results. Or, perhaps, better still, engraft the measure on one or more of the female church societies already a-working. In the first place, it will relieve childhood-life of nine-tenths of all the great volume of distress it now endures, growing out of ill-temper in its various forms; and, secondly, it will build the church, after a few years, more than all the pulpit preaching is now doing it. Will our godly women turn some prayerful thoughts in this direction?

Mississippi W. C. T. U. Convention.

The recent convention of the Mississippi prohibition women at Brookhaven was one of marked progress and interest. Reports showed an advance all along the line, and an intensified purpose to count all W. C. T. U. work doubtful that meets the approval of the non-combatants in this warfare for the home. The women are learning, too, that sharp sallies of the enemy mean somebody hurt in that camp, a masked battery uncovered, or, at least, that they are a foe worthy of Damascus blades. They sound no retreat, judging from their resolutions, among which are the following:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God, in his infinite love, has blessed our organization in the world, nation, and State; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we renew our consecration to him, and endeavor to serve him better by wearing the Christian armor more faithfully.

Resolved, That we reaffirm our loyalty to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which exacts only payment of dues and the total abstinence pledge.

Resolved, That while local option has been of service in the preliminary struggle against alcohol, we believe it to be ineffectual as a temperance measure, false in principle, and a compromise with the liquor traffic; therefore, we align ourselves squarely with the Methodist General Conference at St. Louis, with the Mississippi Baptist State Convention and other bodies which have declared for prohibition of the saloon, and that we will join our brother prohibitionists in asking for legislation that will protect the State in its homes.

Resolved, That we will continue our efforts in the next Legislature to secure a Scientific Temperance Instruction law passed.

Resolved, That we rejoice in our State White Ribbon, and feel that its bold, brave stand for the right, and its advanced thought, are educative and uplifting.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop gave two grand addresses in the Methodist Church, of which President Fitzhugh and others, qualified to speak, said they had heard on Mississippi soil but one speaker who could rank with her—our Senator Lamar; that in her were combined all the elements of a great orator, whom the halls of Congress would seldom match.

Dr. D. C. Kelley's sermon, on Sunday, was one of remarkable power, just fitted to the needs of the W. C. T. U. today, setting forth the fact that there are times in the experiences of Christian soldiers when no conductor of power must stand between that soul and God; alone with God, when the foe may be even those of our own households, we must let the Father use us for his purposes.

The convention was greatly indebted to President Fitzhugh and his faculty for a musical recital and other courtesies. The musical director of Whitworth College prepared music of a very high order for all the services of the convention; and it is safe to say that nowhere else in the State is musical culture carried to such genuinely artistic finish as at Whitworth.

Quite an amount was pledged for White Ribbon, and headquarters to be established at Jackson. The next convention is to meet at Corinth. Mrs. M. J. Quinche, of Oxford, was elected vice-president in place of Mrs. M. M. Snell, who resigned on account of severe family affliction. No other change was made in the State Executive Committee. Mrs. S. T. Clark, Mrs. Fred Wright, Miss Belle Kearney and Mrs. H. B. Kells were elected delegates to the National Convention to meet in Boston in November.

Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

A FEW FACTS AND FIGURES.

The first annual meeting of the Central Committee of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society was held in Chestnut Street Methodist Church at Louisville, Ky., April 9-11, 1891. Though very interesting, it was strictly a business meeting, at which appropriations were made to twenty parsonages scattered through fifteen Conferences. The sum of appropriations in donations was $4,175; in loans, $1,350—total amount, $5,525. Reports showed an improvement all along the line. Seventy-five adult and thirteen juvenile auxiliaries were added during the year, but a number of dead societies were taken from the roll, leaving the whole number of adult auxiliaries only 400; juvenile, 72—total 472. This is a small band, but a brave, energetic one that has achieved large results. During the last four years parsonages averaging more than one a week have been helped by the society. A permanent loan fund of about $3,000 has been raised; 912 have been added to Sabbath-schools. Since its organization the society has published and distributed 1,378,000 pages of missionary reading matter calculated to produce in the reader deeper spirituality and a more earnest desire for the salvation of souls. This literature has been sought and commended by other denominations. Much good has been done by the Visiting Committees of the adult and the little Bible readers of the juvenile auxiliaries that can not be computed. The report of the year closing March 31, 1891, included in the above, gives an increase in dues of $139.94, showing the lopping off of dead auxiliaries no real loss. There was a total increase in funds received by the General and Conference Boards of $2,184.25. The whole amount received by the Boards was $6,750 03. The amount of special donations for local work reported by the auxiliaries, $3,727.34; whole amount raised by the society during the year, $10,477.37. The Boards helped during the year 27 parsonages. Auxiliaries report 34 helped with the special donations raised by them for local work. The whole helped by the society during the year, 61—9 more than one a week. At this rate, if the work does not increase, and each year has shown a decided, though small, increase, it will not be many years before every charge will be supplied with a comfortable preacher's home, besides much other good being done. But it must be kept in mind that the indirect work done by this stir about parsonages is even greater than the work reported; for there are few charges in the church that have not been aroused to their duty in this matter. One hundred and eighty have been added to Sunday-schools by the auxiliaries, and the society has published and distributed during the year 522,000 pages of missionary reading matter.

The Central Committee determined not to lessen its efforts to secure parsonages, which it deems an important feature of home work, but to stress more than heretofore other forms of home mission work rapidly seeking attention; bringing with them a widespread interest and funds to meet the demand. But the work to be done is great. If the world is to be brought to Christ there must be no idlers in Zion. There is no time for frivolity, no time for foolish disputation. Each woman in the church should ask herself, What can I do to save a soul? What can I do to gather in the little ones growing up in the ways of sin? There must be personal work—the individual for the individual—if we carry out our aims in a Christ-like way; but there must be organization if we would have strength, definite aim and constancy. We need to encourage one another, to keep each the other in mind of the great work before us. While new and always we emphasize the fact that we desire heartily to co-operate with every good work for Christ, that we would have no one to slacken, but rather increase her zeal for foreign missions as the Lord commands, we feel called of God to press home to the hearts of our women the need for Christian effort on their part for the salvation of the Christless multitude around them, to urge the necessity for general organization that the work may be definitely and steadfastly carried on, and that those who are only moralizing or sentimentalizing on the subject may be induced to fall into line with others and prove their love, not "in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." Let the women of the church organize auxiliaries to the Parsonage and Home Mission Society and go to work with zeal and love for God and their own land. Christianity and true patriotism demand it.

Bible Women in Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: Your notice of Mrs. Weems' visit to your city, and the generous offer of the pastor and good people of Carondelet Street Church "to employ an additional Bible woman for work in the City of Mexico," stirs a desire to exhort a little along that line. I will say, first of all, that a few moments after the ADVOCATE came with this notice, the pastor of our new place of worship in the city came in, and when I told him Mrs. Weems would now employ a Bible woman for his church, he sprang out of his seat, and exclaimed: "God grant it, and may his blessings be upon those good people!"

Next to the preaching of the Word, I regard this as the most effective work that can be done in Mexico. The success and stability of our work in San Andrea Church in this city is more largely attributable to the labors of a Bible woman employed by the Sunday-school in Greenville, Texas, than to any other human instrumentality.

And at this time there is a revival going on in Toluca, that is largely attributable to the labors of the Bible woman who is employed by friends in Livingston, Ala. The last report I had from this meeting there had been forty conversions and additions to the church. This is largely and mainly due to the labors of the Bible woman.

Of course, I do not mean to detract in the least from the efforts and the influence of the faithful men in these pulpits, but there is a vast and a most important work to be done for the cause of Christ in Mexico that only the women can do; and no one more fully realizes this fact than do the preachers themselves. And may the good example given by the Christian ministers and people of your city be followed by many others!

An Appeal.

Our church-house in this place is very old and dilapidated, and we are sorely in need of a new one; to which fact I am sure all can testify who attended our late District Conference. We feel that the time has come for us to "rise up and build for the Lord," and we do most earnestly desire and pray that everyone who may chance to read this card may be constrained by the Spirit of the Master to send us a free-will offering to help us build a new Methodist Church in Lexington, Miss., for his honor and glory. Our church here is small and weak, or we would not resort to this method, since there are so many appeals made through the papers. After this thought was suggested (by the Spirit, I trust) I hesitated; but, mentioning it in the presence of two of the good brethren, they both said, "Write it; we will each give you a dollar." So I was emboldened to make the attempt. If I fail, I fail. I rest it all with God; it is for him. I can only pray that he may move upon the hearts of all who may read this to respond as they may feel able, remembering that giving blesses twice—the donor and the receiver—and that the more we give the more we will have; for God invariably blesses and multiplies that which is left, thereby verifying his own precept that, "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Contributions to any amount will be gladly received and may be sent to me, and I will keep list of names and amounts and report same to this paper. Now, dear friends, please observe the "Golden Rule," and also remember that "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House on Thursday, May 7, 1891; Hon. Enoch L. Fancher, LL.D., president, in the chair. Religious exercises were conducted by the Rev. W. J. R. Taylor, D. D.

The Committee on Versions presented a memorial minute concerning the Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D., LL.D., a member of the committee, which was adopted by the Board.

The Rev. T. Aston-Binns, of London, delegate from the British and Foreign Bible Society, was introduced, and made a brief address.

Grants of books were made for gratuitous distribution to the value of about $8,819, including consignments to the Society's La Plata Agency and to the Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church for Western Africa.

Announcement was made of the arrangements for observing the seventy-fifth anniversary of the society; of Dr. Chambers' Historical Discourse, to be preached in the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church, corner of Fifth Avenue and Forty-Eighth street, on the evening of Sunday, May 10, and of the public meeting to be held in Chickering Hall on the evening of May 13, to be addressed by Dr. Phillips Brooks, of Boston, and others.

The issues from the Bible House during the month of April were 95,192 volumes.

Write, Brethren, Write.

Our preachers should write more to our Conference organ. It would give more life to our paper. We all want to hear from the preachers and their fields of labor; short reports and short articles on different subjects. Brethren should write whether they know anything or not. We like to know what they think about repentance, faith, regeneration, terminism, and these questions about which we all know nothing, such as, "Was Adam and Solomon saved?" "Who was Melchizedek?" "What is conscience?" "Where is heaven?" etc. If every preacher would write something every month, short and to the point, it would soon double the circulation of our paper. A little impersonal controversy adds interest to a paper, and Dr. Carter has more sense than to publish the hard things we might say about each other. I know this to be so, for I have tried him. So you may write without any fear of your dangerous bombshells ever being heard or felt.

When to Pay Missionary Money.

Ours is an agricultural country, and the staples produced for revenue are mainly rice, cotton and sugar, which are not marketed until the Fall. Evidently, then, it is a mistake to call upon the people for missionary money in the Spring, when all the seed for a crop even may not have been planted yet. The time to call for money for missionary purposes must be when the Lord has blessed the people with the harvest. We read in Leviticus xxvii, 30, "And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord." The people can't reverse the order of nature, and make the "land yield its seed," or "the tree its fruit," before its time. And neither April, nor May either, is the time for harvest. And if the people, instead of "bringing all the tithes into the storehouse" when they harvest "the seed of the land" and gather "the fruit of the tree," should undertake to store them away and keep them until the next planting-time, the Lord would not be pleased with that. And if the people pay all their tithes when due at the harvest, how can they pay them out of season—the time of planting?

The Missionary Board had better conform to the order of nature's God, and call for money to Christianize the heathen when the good Lord blesses the people with the harvest. He knows when to give that, and how much; and when the harvest time comes, he expects all the people to "bring their tithes into the storehouse" then, not before nor after, but at the time of harvest.

Is It True?

Is it "true that there is not a great deal of really enthusiastic proclamation of the good news"? Is it "true that really good preachers are few and far between"? Is it true, as I once heard Doctor Tillett say, "that seven-tenths of what now passes for preaching is not preaching at all"? Is it really true that a man who has felt the pleasing sense of sins forgiven and the load of guilt rolled off his soul, and the unspeakable glory of God's love shed abroad in his heart, and has heard the voice of the Son of God saying to his consciousness, "Go preach the glorious gospel of the blessed God," and has felt the thrill of the Holy Spirit's burning presence, and has felt the crushing burden, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," can become so base a traitor to God and man and to his own soul in pandering to public opinion that the blood-stained, soul-saving message sinks into "indifferent preaching"? If it is really true, alas! But let us be more charitable than this, for it may be that the above opinions have been drawn from, and those conclusions reached, by hearing only famous preachers deliver themselves. It might be that if a little more of the "dedgling's" burden were heard, a different estimate would be formed and hope would dare to sprout. Will you, Mr. Editor, or some one else on top of the wall, please give us the cursed causes for so much of this "indifferent preaching?"

Meeting at Aberdeen.

Rev. Sam P. Jones and Rev. Geo. S. Inge concluded their great meeting here on Sunday night, April 26. Prof. E. O. Excell managed the large choir with great acceptability. Five preachers were present during the meeting, and did good work. Among the ministers was Dr. W. R. Lambuth, of Japan, who left a baptism of missionary fire with us. The preaching of Bros. Jones and Inge was most effective—indeed, it was a benediction to see these two men of God working together. It was our pleasure to meet Bro. Inge converted under Bro. Jones' ministry about six years ago in Corinth, Miss. We are proud of both of them. The meeting was more extensive and intensive than last year. New developments are visible every day. We give you some of the immediate results: A large class united with the church last Sunday; others will join next Sunday; the membership of the churches are more consecrated than ever; all of the prayer meetings, Sunday-schools and other interests of the church much better attended. Public sentiment is stronger for Christianity and the church than we have ever seen it. Rejoice with us and come see us. Praise the Lord!

J. A. BOWEN.

The heart of man is his worst foe before it be regenerated, and the world afterwards: it is the seat of principle and the foundation of actions. The throne of God is, and the eye of the Christian ought to be, principally fixed upon it. The keeping of the heart is a work that is never done till life is ended. Heart-neglect is a leak in the bottom of the heavenly influence, however rich, abiding in that soul. The mind is to the heart as the door to the house; what comes into the heart, comes in through the understanding, and truths sometimes go no further than the entry, and never penetrate into the heart.—Flavel.

CAPTIVITY OF ISRAEL.

II. Kings xvii, 6-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Because ye have forsaken the Lord, he hath also forsaken you."—II. Chron. xxiv, 20.

TOPICAL OUTLINE.—I. Disobedience to God's Law. II. Rejection of His Warnings. III. Israel's Final Doom.

MEMORY VERSES.—16-18.

TIME.—About 730 B. C.

INTRODUCTORY.

The writer of the Book of Kings had a wonderfully clear insight into what is called the "philosophy of history." He, no doubt, had been an eye-witness of many of the disintegrating influences that Israel had allowed to come upon himself; he had seen the proud Assyrian as he came down, laden with the spoils of a hundred victories, to gain fresh laurels; he fully appreciated the fact that the Assyrian kingdom was great and powerful and destined to destroy all else in its wild race for supremacy. Yet, though fully conscious of these things, he was not blind to the primal cause of his nation's decline; while mindful of the enemy without, he did not forget the one within. And so when he began to tell the sad story of the decline of Israel's greatness, he did not waste time and breath in meaningless generalities, but, with unerring discernment, probed straight to the bottom of the matter. He was confronted by a treacherous effect, which must have had a cause. That cause he found in that word, small in size, but immense in portents—sin.

I.—DISOBEDIENCE.

The sixth verse gives briefly the historical statement of Israel's captivity by the king of Assyria. This king was not Shalmaneser, as we might be led to infer from the third verse; rather, as the inscriptions tell us, it was Sargon, his successor. This must have been a dark page for the sacred historian to pen; but, when made, he had the satisfaction of knowing that his own skirts were clear in the matter, and that Jehovah, too, was fully vindicated. A statement so full of meaning, and carrying with it such a measure of sadness, must have some explanation. Painful is the task of that chronicler who is compelled to record the downfall of his own people! All decline has its origin in sin; sin is eternally downward; hence the figure of the bottomless pit. You see an individual in a degraded state; look back a few months or years and discover a seed of sin sown in the heart and allowed to grow. Read the obituaries of the world's great nations, and were the causes of national decease tabulated, you would find an overwhelming majority in the column headed "Constitutional Wickedness." The epitome of Rome's decline and fall was written long before Gibbon's genius saw the light. Just as individual sin brings hidden destruction upon the individual; so national iniquity and wickedness will but issue in decadence of national virtue and the swift downfall of any country's greatness.

Let us recapitulate Israel's sins. In the first place, the prophet made the charge of ingratitude. How long a train follows this baseness! These people are not only reminded of their transgressions, but they are told against whom the sin was committed. The goodness and mercy of God is contrasted with their lack of faith, and their defection from his true worship. They were sinning against the Lord which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt; he that had been their guide and guard during long years of wilderness life; he that had rained upon them heavenly manna and a living stream from the dry rock; God, their sole protector in the land of the heathen, who had brought them out from the bondage of Egypt into a land flowing with milk and honey—this was the being against whom they had sinned so long and so grievously. Was there no conscience in all Israel to rise up and cry aloud against such flagrant wickedness? Yet is the position of the sinner of to-day more honorable? No sin against infinite mercy and unfailing love assuredly is but an enticement of the crime.

The children of Israel not only passed the worship of the true God, but embraced that of false ones. They shared other gods and walked in the statutes of the heathen. Could it have been otherwise? To answer the question, ask one like unto it: Is it otherwise to day? Man will worship; if he relinquishes his hold on a pure form, he grasps after an impure one. The moment a man loses religion, he embraces irreligion. Not long ago we had Jehu loudly boasting, "Come, see my zeal for the Lord." With more truth could these Israelites have cried out, "Come, see our zeal for Baal." Oh! how zealous men can become in the service of Satan! For a time secret sins suffice to satisfy this ambition, but soon the cover is removed. At first these perverse children did all secretly; but familiarity made them bolder and more shameless, and they were soon building heathen altars and "high places" in all their cities. Contract was still "multiplying transgression." One temple for God's worship, but a hundred and one for idols!—and all this in face of the direct commandment, "Ye shall not do this." Where was he that, amid the thunders and lightning flashes of Sinai's mount, declared, "I am a jealous God; before me none other shalt thou have"?

II.—REJECTION OF WARNING.

"Yet the Lord testified against Israel." That monosyllable "yet!" How much it means to the sinner! How much it might have meant to Israel! "Yet," In spite of continual wickedness; in spite of continual rejection of his calls to repentance, and overtures of mercy; "yet," the Lord sent prophets to invite, seers to warn and promises to encourage. Blessed truth that, in spite of our sins, God still holds out pardon and life! Fearful fact that, in spite of divine compassion, men still reject mercy and go down in death!

The long-suffering of Jehovah is wholly nullified by the conduct of men. After all the religious instruction, means of grace, faithful ministers, and influences of the Holy Spirit, men are lost! Why? Simply for lack of cooperating with God's plan. Search the universe in vain to find another reason. So Israel; though so long blessed with favoring influences; though so long beckoned by mercy with wide-extended arms; "notwithstanding, they would not hear." They did not accept the message as it came. They did not believe all it contained; they mistook long-suffering for inability to punish. Like sinners of the time, they conjectured that God was supremely indifferent as to how affairs went on in his kingdom. Prolonged immunity from penalty makes us forget that judgment is sure to come. Well, after unbelief comes naturally the casting off of all restraints; why should Israel not reject the statutes and violate the covenant of a God whose being had been denied? Verily, the man that has not God in his thoughts is not going to exercise himself as to what the Bible teaches! "They followed after vanity, and became vain." What an awful truism! A man's ideal always determines his character. The heart of the man that fellows after gold will assume the hardness and coldness and lifelessness of the metal; he that pursues the things of earth that perish, will himself become a perishing thing of earth! No wonder we are exhorted to set our affections on things above, for where our treasure is there will our heart be also. Reader, what are you following after? Answer honestly; for know well that the goal of your temporal strivings will determine your eternal destiny!

What some are pleased to call "the irony of fate" is but the workings of the law of retributive justice. Israel felt its penalty; he had betrayed Jehovah's worship and drowned it in the vortex of superstitious and idolatrous abomination, and in retribution they were given over to the heathen. Now, bereft of country, robbed of all the privileges of the sanctuary, no more prophets, no more priests, no calls to mercy, no offers of pardon; in such a condition they wandered from sea to sea, from north to east, overtaken by that most awful of all calamities—the famine, not of bread nor of water, for sustaining their bodies, but of food for their souls, the bread of life and the water of life—the famine of God's Word. Carried into captivity, destroyed as a nation, and, so far as we know, utterly lost to the world; such was the inglorious end of those who would have no inheritance with David. These were the pupils of Jeroboam, who made Israel to sin. They followed their leader to perfection. Their history of two and a half centuries shows what nations can accomplish by banishing religious truth from their halls of justice and legislative assemblies.

If God is not in our Constitution, let the Liberty Bell cease her gladsome peal and learn to mourn forth one that soon must come—the requiem of a nation's death.

What will be known as the Bayou Rapides Navigation Company was organized here to-day, and the charter of same regularly filed. The capital stock of the new organization was fixed at $50,000. The object of the company is to make Bayou Rapides navigable and furnish water for waterworks and water power for manufacturing purposes. This is one of the most important undertakings ever brought before the people of this town, as it will furnish an abundance of water and make the above stream navigable for thirty-five miles west of Alexandria, and also give an outlet for the finest timber in the State, bringing it to the doors of the manufactories. Messrs. Welch and Marie, immigration agents here, are issuing 20,000 illustrated pamphlets, giving a full description of Alexandria, Rapides parish, and the country between here and New Iberia and the Atchafalaya. The pamphlets are to be distributed in the Eastern and Western States.

Mr. John E. Hanna, of Monroe, has a valuable literary relic in the shape of a Bible printed in London in 1599.

A cabbage weighing 24 pounds was on exhibition in Amite City last week. It was produced on Captain J. B. Brewer's Frenier Farm.

Hammond's strawberry shipments at the close of April aggregated about 9,000 crates. At the low valuation of $2 per crate, Hammond's big revenue from berries is a patent fact.

Baton Rouge has a Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle. The officers are Messrs. Alvan E. Read, president; C. E. Ives, vice-president; and Mrs. C. E. Ives, secretary and treasurer.

The Confederate veterans of Mississippi are preparing to celebrate the unveiling of the Confederate monument at Jackson, June 3, in a right royal manner. It promises to be a big affair in every way.

Engineers surveyed a connecting branch from the M. and O. railroad just north of Enterprise to intersect the Q. and C. on what is known as Leach's Farm last Tuesday. We understand the branch road will be built immediately.—Clarke County Times.

The condition of the tomato and bean crops continues very good in the vicinity of Crystal Springs, and if good rains are had soon, large crops are anticipated and heavier crops than last year. A few growers have tomatoes nearly full grown. Two small shipments of beans have been made. Recent cold nights did no apparent damage.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., Editor.

Thursday, May 21, 1891.

Briefs.

Our question last week, "What is the matter with Methodism in New Orleans?" seems to have waked up some sleepers and called their attention to the fact that Methodism does exist here. We read in a certain history, which is too little read, that a great city was probed to the conscience by one simple question. Our question was intended to arrest the attention of Methodists and others in this city, and get them to look at what we are doing and what we are not doing. We believe it will accomplish that very thing.

The Richmond Advocate, in a plea for the Advocates, says: "There is no minister among us of average mind and moderate research without convictions of the immediate and remote value to the church and to the country of a membership instructed through the religious press. As the pastor widens his reading, augments his circle of observation and watches the springs of influence, he measures the mighty leverage of a sanctified type. The neglect to command so influential an instrument and auxiliary to the pulpit is hurtful to the church and cruel to the parishioners.

Most of the utterances employed by men in administering comfort to the afflicted nauseate by their insipidity. Repeatedly we felt inclined to exclaim with Job: "Miserable comforters are ye all!" To bind up the broken-hearted can be effectually accomplished only by the Holy Ghost. He is the Comforter. He himself declares: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." He is the living water to the thirsty, supplies the aching void which the world can not fill. He is oil poured on tempestuous billows. "Let not your heart be troubled. You believe in God, believe also in me." Thus misgiving and fear subside. He comforts us by witnessing with our spirits that we are the children of God. No delusion. Our consciousness is transfused with peace, transcending all understanding. In losses and bereavements he refers us gently to God's promises. Ere we're aware of it, we're led to say: "Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me."

The Philadelphia Times has been looking into the public-school question, and is of the opinion that the public delusion, fostered and kept aflame by Northern partisan organs, that the popular school system receives but scant support and encouragement in Southern States, has received its quietus from the census of 1890. The idea, says the Times, turns out to be not only a myth, but a "positive wrong to a great and progressive section of the Union." From the figures quoted by the Times, it appears that Mississippi has made a gain of 47.90 per cent. in public-school enrollment in the past decade. Louisiana has gained 53.52 per cent.; Texas, 133.15 per cent.; North Carolina, 27.08; South Carolina, 50.89; Virginia, 55.06, West Virginia, 34.42. Not a single Northern State, adds the Times, shows anything like that rate of increase. On the contrary, New Hampshire sustains a loss of 7.51 per cent., Maine, 7.38; and Vermont, one of 10.42 per cent. In the line of growth in public-school enrollment Connecticut has 6.68 per cent. gain; Massachusetts, 17,33; New York, 1.38; Ohio, 5.98; Pennsylvania, 1.59; Iowa, 15.88.

Editorial Correspondence.

I find that Wilmington is "no mean city." It has over twenty thousand inhabitants, more than one-half of whom are negroes. It has a large export trade as well as inland trade. It is closely connected with all the country by various systems of railroads, and in reach of all the world by means of steamers and sailing vessels; being situated only a short distance from the sea and communicating with it by never-failing deep water. As the geography would say, "It is regularly laid out with broad streets intersecting each other at right angles," and contains many handsome residences and stately churches and imposing public buildings.

Methodism was planted here about 1800, and now has two very fine houses of worship, besides some smaller and less pretentious ones. I find that the ashes of one of my ancestors, Rev. George Dougharty, reposes under the pulpit of Grace Church, of this city. The churches here are well equipped, and are doing good work. Grace Church has an exceptionally fine "peal of bells" and a large well-trained choir of good voices and instruments. With all the prejudices and arguments against musical instruments in church worship, I can not help thinking that they add much to the solemnity and joyousness and inspiriting power of the service. Perhaps not very many of my readers will agree with me; but I do not see how anybody can consent for the devil to have exclusive use of any instrument of music, nor how anybody can read the 150th Psalm and object to the use of musical instruments in the church services!

Like all the cities of North Carolina which I have seen, Wilmington has adorned all its streets and public parks with beautiful shade trees, which makes the general appearance very pleasing to the eye, and in summer affords a grateful shelter from the heat and dust. This is one advantage a small city can have over a large one, where the houses are packed so close together as to forbid the planting of trees. This city has its street cars, electric lights, waterworks, banks, schools, manufactories, etc.

Our Board of Missions held its sessions in the lecture-room of Grace Church. There was a good attendance from the first. Some, however, on account of "wrecks" did not put in appearance until the second day. The whole business of the Board was carefully and thoughtfully considered. The special needs of each mission field were brought before the Board by the secretaries and the Bishops in charge, and, as far as it had the means, the Board made provision for the supply of those necessities. Bishop Wilson and Dr. Lambuth, both fresh from our Eastern missions, gave some thrilling accounts of the progress of our work among the teeming millions of China and Japan. Evidently the Lord is blessing our efforts in those countries; but in regard to reinforcing the workers by sending forth other helpers in that inviting region, the Board found itself completely hampered by a lack of means. And so of all our other fields: the harvest is ripe, but the reapers are few. God has answered the prayer of the church, and thrown open the world for the entrance of the gospel; but the church has not responded with the means to send the laborers. It came out in the Board that the only way to hold the positions we now occupy is to advance to other positions, and that can not be done unless the church at home, out of her abundance, shall supply more liberal means. Not to advance means to retrograde and finally to abandon. Our missionaries, being on the ground, see the necessities, and are clamorous for help. The Board, being in direct communication with the missionaries, has a better view of the situation than the church at large, and is most solicitous that the men and women at the front shall be reinforced. The church occupies a plane far below either, and, not seeing the case as it really is, has not come up to the help of the Board as it should have done, and the consequence is, the Board is confronted with the absolute necessity of cutting off supplies. This is a sad case. That a great church of over one million communicants should fail to respond to the demands of its own obligation to supply the gospel to those who are appealing to it for the gospel, is a most humiliating fact, and should prostrate everyone of us in the dust before God. It is time to cry aloud and show our people the full meaning of this sin of neglect.

All our missions are in a growing condition, and the men and women who are working them stand bravely at their posts and, with faith in God, are doing the work of self-denying heroes and heroines. Souls are being enlightened and brought to a saving knowledge of the truth in every mission, and the work is enlarging in every direction; but the Board did not find itself in a condition to enter at once the opening doors. The cry of the awakened heathen for the gospel and the piteous appeal of the faithful missionaries for help will waste themselves upon the atmosphere of a church rich in this world's goods and indifferent to that cry and that appeal! Sordid selfishness and consuming covetousness have blunted the sensibilities and obscured the spiritual vision of the church, and thus caused it to "withhold that which is meet" for the propagation of its own schemes of evangelization. With such a condition of affairs facing it, the Board did what it could to meet the exigencies of the case. The assessment on the church for the next year is $350,000. This does not seem to be a large amount when we consider the numbers and circumstances of the membership. It is most true that many of our people are poor; but very many are in good financial circumstances, and not a few are very rich, as the world counts riches, and an assessment of thirty cents per member can not be excessive. The appropriations to carry on our missionary operations for the next year will not exceed $260,000; so that there is a large margin left to test the liberality of the church, even upon the low basis of thirty cents per member.

If our pastors everywhere will co-operate heartily and enthusiastically with the field secretaries and the Board, there will be little trouble in raising the full assessment placed upon the church, and, with that amount raised, all our appropriations will be met and leave a handsome balance to begin the operations of another year. Let every pastor secure thirty cents from each member, and the thing will be done.

I can not close this correspondence without a notice of the superb hospitality extended to the members of the Board by the church and citizens of Wilmington. Their doors were thrown wide open and their boards were loaded with everything inviting and their Christian fellowship was refreshing to the soul. The Sabbath was, indeed, a day of high enjoyment to all. God was honored and the people edified by the preaching of the Word, and the beautiful sunshine and the gentle breeze from the sea made the day "as one of the days of heaven upon earth." Monday was a "red-letter day" with those members of the Board who stayed over. Mr. H. W. Bowden, a zealous Methodist, leader of Grace Church choir, and prominent in business circles, gave the Board an invitation to visit his summer home on Wrightsville Sound, himself chartering a train to take the members down. He has a charming residence overlooking the Sound, and in full view of the white caps that rage on the Atlantic beach at Ocean View. There were about fifty in the company, Bishops, editors, pastors and several ladies. The dinner was a superb one, such as does not often come in the way of a Methodist preacher, and it was discussed as only Methodist preachers can discuss a dinner. After the dinner our train pulled down to the "shore of old ocean." This was my first sight of the Atlantic. I had heard of it, but it was mere hearsay; now I had the testimony of my own eyes that it did exist. Hereafter I am an eye-witness to the fact that there is such a thing as the ocean. There were the unmistakable white caps bursting on the beach, and the everlasting "breakers' roar" which has been moaning since God said to the sea: "Hitherto shalt thou come and no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." Gazing on the vast expanse before me, I had nothing to say save what was said by the Psalmist ages ago: "The sea is his, and he made it." No man can look at it and say anything else, and when that is said all is said. "He made it." That is the last word on that subject, for you feel that nobody else could have made it, and in your soul you bow down before the awful power and majesty of the Maker of the sea. As you stand there and listen to the roar that has been unceasing since the "morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy," you realize that it must have been a mighty manifestation of God when "the sea saw it and fled." This sea, which demonstrates man's mightiest power as nothing, gathered up its billows and hushed its voice in fear and fled from the presence of the Lord. "Oh, Lord, how manifold are thy works; in wisdom hast thou made them all;" but this sea is the greatest of thy wonderful works which these eyes have beheld. Surely it was a sight never to be forgotten, and the emotions inspired were such as come to the soul not often in a lifetime. I lingered as long as possible, but was compelled by the last sound of the steam whistle to return to the train, and soon we were bowling back to the city of Wilmington. At ten o'clock, Monday night, I bade farewell to my kind friends, Henry West and his interesting family, and took the Atlantic Coast Line for the Crescent City. On this route we passed through Florence, Charleston, Savannah, Waycross, Thomasville, De Funiak, Pensacola and Mobile. We made close connection at every point and arrived at home at seven o'clock, Wednesday morning. Thus ended this trip.

Action of the Mission Board.

In view of the fact that the collections for missions during the past year did not come up to expectations, the Board, to relieve the pressure and to guard future operations, passed the following minute, which was recommended by the Committee on Estimates:

To retrench at a time when success in every field is calling for the enlargement of our work is a matter of profound regret; yet your committee, after patient and, we trust, prayerful consideration of all the interests involved, feel constrained, unanimously, to recommend that line of action. Before entering on details of the report, your committee would submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That at the present annual meeting the absolute appropriations shall not exceed the sum of $260,000.

Resolved, That in view of the danger that may follow excessive appropriations, the Board hereafter will limit its absolute appropriations to a sum within the amount of the regular collections of the preceding year.

Resolved, That the secretary is instructed to insert Resolution 2 in the By-laws, after Article IV., under the duties of the Committee on Estimates.

It is possible that many of the "special collections" for the support of new missionaries may fail after the first year, in which case the Board will be expected to provide for their support. This may involve obligations which the Board may not be prepared to meet. It is, therefore, important that this movement on the line of enlargement of work be placed under proper limitations. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the calls for new missionaries shall be limited to the number for which the Board at an annual meeting shall make either "absolute" or "special" appropriations.

Resolved, That under appropriations to be provided for by special collections no new missionaries will be accepted and sent out until the money is paid to the treasurer, or a satisfactory assurance is given that the money will be paid.

Episcopal Decisions.

Decision of points of law coming up for review by the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at their annual meeting, held in Wilmington, N. C., May 6–9, 1891.

A local preacher admitted on trial in an Annual Conference at the time of his election and ordination to deacon's orders is not eligible to elder's orders at the end of two years, even though he complete the course of study prescribed for that order, and be admitted to membership in the Annual Conference.

Question.—I respectfully maintain, as a member of the Committee on Episcopacy at the last General Conference, that the purpose of the committee in recommending and the Conference in adopting the added proviso to ¶ 263 was to allow the accused the right of trial by committee if he so elected, to protect him from so severe penalties as "suspension and expulsion in open Conference by motion and vote without the form of trial." Is not the election of a hearing by the Conference or a trial by committee alone in the breast of the accused?

Answer.—The intent of the proviso is not to invest the accused with a right of choice as to the mode of procedure, but to describe the process for "such cases," as appears both in the terms used and in the history of the case out of which it had its origin.

Question.—Does not ¶ 250, in answer to Question 1, under Section II., page 146, of the Discipline, and ¶ 1 of Section III., page 128, of McTyeire's "Manual," wherein the doctrine is enunciated of the amenability of a traveling preacher to the Annual Conference of which he is a member, necessarily involve and imply the right of the Conference to appoint the committee to whom the Conference proposes to delegate its right to "try, acquit, or expel him?"

Answer.—The authorities referred to do not necessarily imply that the Conference, and not the chair, shall appoint the committee of investigation and of trial; a view confirmed by long custom.

Question.—The law in the case of a committee of trial, ¶ 258, provides that the chairman is to be appointed by the Bishop. Does not the mention of the chairman as especially the subject of episcopal appointment exclude the other members of the committee from appointment by him unless he is so requested by the Conference?

Answer.—It does not.

Decision of the College of Bishops: Answer sustained, with the understanding that if the Conference claim the right of appointment, it can not be denied.

Appeal.—Resolved, That we, as a Conference, hereby respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair on ¶ 250, page 146, of the Discipline, to the College of Bishops; believing that the law which declares the amenability of a traveling preacher for his conduct to the Annual Conference of which he is a member, and guarantees to the Conference the power to try, acquit, or expel him, guarantees to the Conference also the right to a voice in the method of appointment of the committee of trial in the case. We maintain that it is not an exercise by the Conference of the power to "try, acquit, or expel" when the Conference is denied by the chair a voice in the method of raising the committee of trial.

The Meeting of the Book Committee.

This body held its annual session in the office of the Book Agents, Nashville, May 6–9. The following members were present: Dr. W. H. Morgan, W. C. Dibrell, and Geo. A. Dazey, of Nashville, Tenn.; Judge B. J. Tarver, of Lebanon, Tenn.; J. A. Odell, of Greensboro, N. C.; T. J. Pearce, of Columbus, Ga.; Rev. H. A. Bourland, D. D., Waco, Tex.; Rev. T. S. Wade, D. D., Catlettsburg, Ky.; and Maj. R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss.

Sales from Merchandise department	$133,180
Sales from Christian Advocate department	42,057
Sales from Sunday-school Periodical department	103,843
Sales from Quarterly Review department	2,072
Sales from miscellaneous sources, rent, job and contract work	54,519
Total business from all departments	$336,868
From the above volume of business we have a gain in assets of	$ 54,678
Of the bonds outstanding April 1, 1890, We have canceled during the year	10,000 1,000
Leaving still outstanding bonds to the amount of	$ 9,000
Cash on hand April 1, 1891	$ 34,368
Sinking fund	9,000
Postage stamps	325
Total cash April 1, 1891	$ 43,693

The sales from the merchandise department are not so large as they were last year. This decrease is due to the fact that there has been a large falling off in the demand for the new hymn book. Last year 310,000 copies were printed; this year only 76,817. Notwithstanding the extreme financial pressure which has been upon the country, the year has been a prosperous one. The committee appropriated $17,500 for Conference claimants.—Nashville Advocate.

Missionary Appropriations.

The Board of Missions appropriated as follows, for the support of our mission work:

Brazil	$27,7
Central Mexico	40,4
China	33,0
Japan	35,9
Mexican Border	21,7
Northwest Mexico	17,5
Indian	20,0
German in Texas	2,7
German in Miss. and La.	1,0
Columbia	4,0
East Columbia	2,5
Pacific	3,5
Los Angeles	4,5
Denver	6,5
New Mexico	5,0
Montana	4,0
Western	2,0
Northwest Texas	1,0
West Texas	9
Florida and Cuban	2,5
West Virginia	1,0
Offices, etc.	17,0

This amount is about $200,000 less than was asked for by the missionaries to carry on and enlarge the work. Our people must be keyed up a little higher if we make a proper use of our opportunities.

Notes.

Methodist Times, London:

It is pitiable that good men and women who are giving their lives cheerfully to Christian service at home and abroad should be hindered at every turn when our people are well able to supply every existing need of our church without the least personal self-sacrifice. Outside the church to God the greatest curse is drunkenness. Inside the church of God the great curse is the love of money. The Christian conscience has already been aroused with respect to drunkenness; may God hasten the day when it will also be aroused with respect to Mammonism!

Once upon a time we sat upon the brow of a hill watching a dog trot leisurely along. He seemed to be perfectly satisfied with his progress and was apparently at peace with all the world. Suddenly and sharply we called out, "What are you doing there?" He stopped perfectly still, looked around to find where the voice came from and who it was that had interrupted his leisurely journey. When he got a good sight of us he gave a short yelp and started in a brisk trot, and we have no doubt reached the end of his trip much sooner for having been startled out his easy-going trot by our question. Hæc fabula, etc.

The other day we met with this remark in one of our exchanges: "Many men are profoundly ignorant of how little they give to Christian objects." We read it over and over, saying, "Surely men can not be ignorant of what they do," and yet it stuck to us, and we believe, after all, there is truth in it. If you don't believe it, just count up what you give and you will be dumbfounded at its littleness. The reason that men are ignorant of how little they give is, "they keep no record of it." Begin to put it down in your note book, and you will see that relatively, you do not give the widows' mites."

Personal and Otherwise.

Last week we published the Sunday-school Conference of Brookhaven district as to convene at Bogue Chitto, June 26. Bro. Woodward writes that it conveoes June 19. Please note the correction.

East Feliciana parish initiated the anti-Lottery campaign with a rousing meeting last week. Well done for our native parish!

The news from Dr. J. B. Walker is that the quiet and rest of his country home have had a salutary effect. He is improving steadily every day.

Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., of Meridian, Miss., will deliver the annual address before the Alumni Association of Centenary College, June 2.

A dispatch from Rev. I. W. Cooper, of Hazlehurst, Miss., Monday last, reads: "Wonderful meeting. Immense audiences. The like was never seen here before. Will continue this week."

Rev. F. S. Parker will preach the commencement sermon for the Opelousas Female Institute, June 14, and Rev. W. C. Black will deliver the baccalaureate address, evening of June 17.

Our Mississippi friends will have to give it up. An Irishman has written one of Mr. Cleveland's messages, containing 15,000 words, on one postal card! It took him forty-one days, however!

Judge W. R. Trigg, of Greenville, Miss., gave us a pleasant call Tuesday. He has been in attendance upon the annual meeting of the Knights of Honor in session in this city during the past few days.

We were exceedingly glad to meet our good friend, Hon. George McGehee, of Woodville, Miss., on our streets last week. He was here with his wife, seeking for her some relief from illness, which we hope was found.

Dr. Edward Payson once said: "I had rather a man would eat my dinner for me than preach my sermon for me." What would he say now, when it is becoming the fashion for a pastor to send off and get a so-called evangelist to do his preaching for him?

The committee appointed by the General Conference to select the place of its next meeting met in Wilmington at the time of the meeting of the Board of Missions, and selected Memphis, Tenn. The General Conference of 1870 held its sessions in that city.

The brethren and sisters who write to us will save trouble and worry by avoiding abbreviations. We can not always make them out, and thus make mistakes and get blame. Write every word in full, and if you don't know how to spell it, get a dictionary and learn.

We are greatly pleased with Bro. Henry White. He is a good presiding elder; is beloved by all in the district so far as we have been able to hear. Much good will come of his ministry to this important and responsible office, we truly believe.

The pastor of Rayne Memorial, Rev. Mr. Beard, informs us that his church has succeeded in paying for its fine organ. The organ is one of the famous Jardin make, and is said to be the finest in the city. We congratulate the Doctor and his people on their success. Now add a cornet to your choir, and you will improve the music even of the fine organ.

Rev. H. Walter Featherstun, in a communication to the Nashville Advocate, has this about Centenary College:

Centenary College is having a very prosperous year. It is getting for itself the enviable and somewhat uncommon reputation of being a religious college. I know graduates of Methodist colleges, children of Methodist parents—ay, of Methodist preachers, who are yet not members of the church. Something is wrong with such colleges. Revivals in a college should be as much in order and as frequent as commencements. Centenary is a religious college, with a religious president and a religious faculty. All honor to her!

Trying to See.

A good friend writes me as follows: "I have been trying to see my way clear to agree to your $100 proposition (to be one of ten to pay $100 a year to send a missionary to Japan and keep him there), but do not see it yet. I want to do it; and if it is the Lord's will, I will do it, but can not promise now." This friend is not a rich man, but gets good wages. The way will open and the promise will be made and he will be enrolled as number five. Where are the other five wise ones?

Received since last report from Mrs. Ellen Barton, $2; Rev. R. A. Breland, $2.50; Rev. Dr. W. R. Sims, $5; Rev. W. W. Simmons, $1; Rev. J. R. Whittington, $2.50; Mrs. Rev. P. A. Johnston, $5; and Bro. P. H. Hale, $2.50.

Brethren and sisters, please send on all once, you that have not sent. Let us get ready to commence the work at an early date. Many thanks for the above.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. L. Carley writes from Jackson, La.: "The former pastors and friends generally of our church here will be glad to know that a parsonage has been built and is now occupied by the pastor and his family. It is complete except painting and papering, and is being furnished throughout. It is also provided with a well-ventilated and roomy study for the pastor. We have many faithful workers here, and the outlook is encouraging."

—Rev. R. M. Blocker writes from Rayne, La.: "Last night we closed a successful revival meeting at Rayne. Bros. Jno. A. Miller, F. S. Parker, W. B. Pilley and J. B. Kent were with us and did good work. I think some of the best work in the church was accomplished that has been done since I have been in charge, and we had several conversions and accessions to the church. Bro. Jno. B. Kent will assist me on the circuit the balance of the year."

—Bro. Riddle writes from West Monroe, La.: "It is late I know to do so, but I can not but tell you how nicely we have been treated by these West Monroe people, and, indeed, by all in the charge. How they have fixed up things here at the parsonage; blinds and shades for the windows; a real neat matting for the parlor and for our room, and other nice things, such as dining table—not an old broken-legged, split-top thing given by some kind old sister, but a real nice one, such as they would get for their own use—these and many other things I will not here speak of. Inside our home looks well. I do not know how we should get on with our church affairs if the ladies were to quit us and go into politics."

—Rev. H. Armstrong reports from Bastrop, La.: "Town and church have been retrograding here for some time. Missed by the railroad, you know. Have dismissed seventeen by certificate this year; fourteen to Monroe. If Bro. White is being strengthened by his other neighbors as by us, his church will certainly swarm soon. Notwithstanding the exodus of our members, and of others in proportion, the attendance upon preaching has increased. Our hope for spiritual and numerical strength is in a genuine revival, for which we are working and praying. God help us! This is your old home. Pray for us. Let the former pastors and presiding elders pray for us. Children's Day yesterday, and we had a grand time. Sunday-school convention here on June 18."

—Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker writes from Homer: "Our protracted meetings do not begin until about July 1; but we are not waiting for an allotted time in which to have a revival. The burden of souls is upon us, and, with the help of God, we are having and are going to have a revival every Sunday. At my last appointment (Flat Lick) had five accessions and one old member brought back. At most of our appointments all the people are church members, so that our work is in the church. Brethren, if we want to reach the "masses," we have got to reach the church. We must impress them with the fact that while Christ is our representative and does our work in heaven, that we are his representatives and must do his work here on earth; that he employs no other means, and that he is dependent upon us."

—Rev. B. F. Alexander writes: "On last night we closed an interesting meeting of fifteen days at Morgan City. Thirty-eight persons joined the church, and some twenty-five or thirty professed conversion. Previous to this meeting twenty-five names had been added to the roll of members. The additions on the circuit this year to date number sixty-three. Twenty-three children have been baptized, and three adults. Bro. Wimberly, of your city, was with us eleven days, and did nearly all the work, and did it well. Having been intimately associated with him, as his presiding elder, for the first five years of his ministry, it was pleasant to meet him again, after a separation of four years, and to note his development in ability to do successful work for the Master. We are to cross Berwick's Bay this evening, and continue the meeting in Berwick City. We hope for a gracious work there."

PECAN CULTURE.

We have received from Hon. J. G. Rusk, United States Secretary of Agriculture, his report of 1890, which contains an interesting account of pecan tree culture by Mr. Wm. R. Stuart, of Ocean Springs, Miss. It is illustrated by a page picture of one of his fourteen-year-old pecan trees. Bro. Stuart has made a successful specialty of pecan culture, and annually sells all his crop for seed at from $1 to $1.50 per pound. One of the most important things for the young men and women of the South to do is to plant a pecan grove of Stuart's seeds.

Woman's Work.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Winona district convened in Lexington on May 7. Mrs. J. B. Streater, district secretary, called the meeting to order and presided with much grace and dignity.

Mrs Hargrove, the Conference president, led the devotional exercises. The reading, comments, singing and praying were very appropriate and spiritual. The testimony meeting which followed was a religious feast; all hearts were blended under the melting influences of the Holy Ghost. Twenty-three auxiliaries and juvenile societies were reported as in operation. Many of these were represented by earnest, faithful women, pure, sweet girls and noble, consecrated boys. These reports showed that much good and faithful work was being done. The money collected is by no means the sum total of the work. The clear and deep experience of these women in a purer spiritual life, the careful training which the children are receiving must not be overlooked. In the coming years the church will demonstrate the wisdom and power of this woman's movement.

Mrs. Lowe read an essay on the obstacles to the work and a consequent need of deeper consecration. Mrs. Evans read an essay on the duties of officers, excepting lady managers. Mrs. Hargrove delivered a very profitable address on the qualifications and duties of this important personage. The time for doubt as to the propriety of this movement, if it ever existed, has passed. The divine approval is indelibly stamped on the organization and its work. "Help these women who labor with us in the Lord."

A Revival at Minden.

Many will rejoice to hear of a great revival of religion at Minden.

Several weeks ago revival services began in the Baptist Church, in which all denominations worked heartily together. That meeting closed, we immediately began in the Methodist Church and continued for nearly two weeks. Result: the whole community, more than ever before, under the spell of the meeting; many conversions; about fifty united with the various churches (and there will be "more to follow"). Twenty-four, up to date, have been added to our church.

We are indebted to Rev. John F. Foster, of the Gibsland circuit, for faithful and valuable services rendered.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

MOTHER'S ROOM.

I'm awfully sorry for poor Jack Roe,
He's the boy that lives with his aunt, you know,
And he says his home is filled with gloom,
Because it has got no "mother's room."

I tell you what'll is fine enough
To talk of "boudoirs" and such fancy stuff,
But the room of rooms that seems best to me—
The room where I'd always rather be—
Is mother's room, where a fellow can rest
And talk of the things his heart loves best.

Now poor Jack Roe, when he visits me,
I take him to mother's room, you see,
Because it's the nicest place to go
When a fellow's spirits are getting low;

And mother, she's always kind and sweet,
And there's always a smile poor Jack to greet;
And somehow the sunbeams seem to glow
More brightly in mother's room, I know,
Than anywhere else, and you'll never find gloom
Or any old shadow in mother's room.

Curing the Blues.

Teddie was cross. He was four years old the day before. Perhaps that was the trouble, for birthdays are quite sure to bring lots of candy to a curly-haired little boy from lots of uncles and aunts. Sweet stuff in a boy's stomach—sad to say—doesn't usually sweeten his temper.

Pollie was not cross. She cooed around Teddie and patted his face with her little dimpled hands. She didn't mind his cross looks a bit, till he raised his hand and gave her a naughty little slap right on her soft pink cheek.

That was too much for a two-year-old baby to endure. Pollie ran away to find a pleasanter playmate. She didn't run far, for just inside the orchard bars she saw a dear little calf. Lying down and brushing the big tears from her eyes, she wriggled in between the bars.

Snippie, who had followed her, wriggled in too. Together they tried to made friends with the brown-eyed bossie. But he was suspicious of strangers, and jumped up with a funny little bleat.

Then Pollie heard a great "moo-oo." Up from the shade of the trees in the farther corner came the angry mother cow to see what was troubling her baby.

Teddie had been watching her from the barn door with a wee bit of an ache at his heart, as he thought of the naughty slap.

Now he jumped up, shouting, "Run, Pollie, run!" At the same time he ran to the rescue as fast as his short legs could carry him. But Pollie stood motionless with fear.

Snip rushed up barking furiously, and was lifted on two horns and tossed over his enemy's back. Then he set his sharp little teeth in the end of the cow's tail and hung on bravely. But in spite of all that, she was very near Pollie. Then Teddie scrambled through the bars and rushed up under her very nose. She lowered her head and tossed him right over the fence. Just then papa came running up. He picked up Pollie and drove the cow away. Then he climbed over the fence to find Teddie in the middle of a haycock, with no worse wound than a bumped nose.

They all went into the house to mama, and Pollie and Teddie were kissed and cried over to their heart's content, and Snip had a big, big bone.

Teddie wasn't cross any more; for the best way in the world to cure the blues, or the doleful dumps, is to do kind, brave deeds for others.—Our Little Ones.

How to Believe.

A Sunday-school teacher wanted to explain to the children what the gift of God is, and how they might have it. So he left his desk and went around among the scholars with his watch in his hand. He held it up as he passed before them, and said to the first child: "I give you this watch." The boy stared at it, and that was all he did. He went on to the next, and repeated: "I give you this watch." And so he went slowly around the class. Some of them stared, some of them blushed, some smiled incredulously; but nobody took the watch. We may imagine one of the older, wiser boys pondering over the subject: "How can he give us his watch? Surely he does not mean what he says. I wonder what he is after." But while the wise boy was deep in thought the watch passed by him and he did not take it. Finally a small boy reached out his hand and took the watch. The teacher let go the chain, and watch and chain were in the scholar's hand. As the teacher went back to his place the little fellow said, very gently: "Then, if you please, sir, the watch is mine?"

"Yes, of course, it is yours."

The big boys were fairly roused by this time. "Do you mean to say, sir, he may keep the watch?"

"Certainly, I gave it to any boy who would have it."

"Oh, if I had known that," exclaimed one, "I would have taken it."

"Did I not tell you I gave it to you?"

"Oh, yes; but I did not believe you were in earnest."

"So much the worse for you. That little boy believed me, and he has the watch."

This lesson was of use to the scholars and to many souls. I trust it may be of use to us. Receiving the gift of God is as simple as that. God comes and says: "Here is everlasting life to whosoever will." We keep thinking and reflecting and discussing, wondering how he can give it and how we can take it, instead of saying: "Lord, I take it; it is mine."—Theodore Monod.

BRILLIANT CAREERS.—Very many young men starting out in life have the feeling that their careers can not be successful unless they are brilliant. It is natural, of course, for youth is full of enthusiasm; and is it not the brilliant man who is praised as the greatest and the one entitled to the highest honors? It would not be manly in the eyes of an impulsive young man to accept commonplace prospects; in other words, to begin a work in which he would exhibit nothing better than ordinary dullness. Sometimes this feeling produces a permanent injury. It deceives the person so fatally that he is not able to adjust himself to the conditions for which he is fitted, and he is always striving after things too high for him, without doing those that are within his reach. Usually, however, it is but a temporary influence, and probably a good one. It gives momentum to the early life, and makes it oblivious to the smaller drawbacks and difficulties that, if they were rightly seen, might grow into discouraging impediments. After a trial at realizing our dream, we settle down to feel that success for us is on a much lower level than we had supposed, and learn also that brilliancy is not half so important as steady-going faculty in doing common duties, such as are set before us by every-day contact with life.—United Presbyterian.

THE PARABLE OF THE RATS.—A Scotch paper gives a forcible temperance lecture in the following parable. We would like to shake hands with that bright boy. A laborer at the Dundee harbor lately told his wife, on awakening, a curious dream which he had during the night. He dreamed that he saw coming toward him, in order, four rats. The first one was very fat, and followed by two lean rats, the rear rat being blind. The dreamer was greatly perplexed as to what might follow, as it has been understood that it denotes coming calamity. He appealed to his wife concerning this, but she, poor woman, could not help him. His son, a sharp lad, who heard his father tell the story, volunteered to be the interpreter. "The fat rat," he said, "is the man who keeps the public house, that ye gang till sae often; and the twa lean anes are me and my mither, and the blind ane is yerself, father."

HOUSEHOLD.

Good Enough for Home.

"Lydia, why do you put on that forlorn old dress?" asked Emily Manners of her cousin, after she had spent the night at Lydia's house.

The dress in question was a spotted, faded old summer silk, which only looked the more forlorn for its once fashionable trimmings, now crumbled and faded.

"Oh, anything is good enough for home!" said Lydia, as, hastily pinning on a soiled collar and twisting her hair in a knot, she went to breakfast.

"Your hair is coming down," said Emily.

"Oh, never mind; it's good enough for home," said Lydia, carelessly. Lydia had been visiting at Emily's home, and had always appeared in the prettiest morning dresses, and with neat and dainty collar and cuffs; but now that she was back at home again she seemed to think that anything would answer, and went about untidy and in soiled finery. At her uncle's she had been pleasant and polite, and had won golden opinions from all; but with her own family her manners were as careless as her dress. She seemed to think that courtesy and kindness were too expensive for home wear, and that anything would do for home.

There are too many people who, like Lydia, seem to think that anything will do for home; whereas effort to keep one's self neat, and to treat father, mother, sister, brother and servant kindly and courteously is as much a duty as to keep from falsehood and stealing.—Selected.

REMEDY FOR RESTLESSNESS.—A great many remedies are suggested for restlessness, which in many cases has been caused by giving way to anxious and foreboding thoughts, indulging in such mental worry by day that night is a time of tossing and unrest. While the night dews fall and the stars are shining, let us in spirit steal amid the quietude to him who is Eternal Light, the Giver of calm, the Divine Comforter; let us remember the Lord is in the stillness, and we shall prove it true that "Darkness shows us worlds of light

We never saw by day."

Let us think, alone with Jesus, what he is in whom is all the fullness of God. "I will strip thee of all earthly comforts," said a persecutor once to a Christian martyr. "Christ is mine," was the answer, "you can not strip me of him." Christ is yours, friend, yours through the darkest shadow—Christ, who is Rest and Refuge, the King of kings, the great Physician. Money can not purchase rest, but it comes to you with Jesus; there is no pillow so comforting as the Redeemer's love, and on this you may trustfully repose. Some one asked a poor, infirm old man, "Do you think you can rest a little now?" "It is all rest," he said, "because God's arms are beneath me."—Quiver.

PARENTAL PRAYERS.—Surely among all prayers that go up to God none are dearer or more prevailing than the intercessions of parents for their children. They are hallowed breathings of the purest, tenderest love. Such prayers, if persistent, believing and importunate, may we not say that God always answers in some way in the end? Monica, the mother of Augustine, prays for her son. For a time he goes deeper and deeper into sin, and it seems that the mother's supplications are unheard or unavailing. But she faints not, she will not give him up; she refuses to be disheartened. For many years her son wanders far from God, farther and farther; but she stays at her altar, undismayed, believing still, and pleading with renewed earnestness. At last all her intercessions are answered in one hour when Augustine falls down at Jesus' feet in submission, and instantly turns all the wealth of his splendid life into the service of his new Master.—Presbyterian Observer.

The Great Siberian Railway.

The great Siberian railway, which will more closely connect Europe with the teeming millions of China, Japan, and Eastern Asia, will be commenced this Spring. The total length of the line will be 4,810 miles, and the cost about thirty-two millions sterling. In case permanent bridges are built over the immense rivers Obi, Yenesei, Lena, etc., the outlay will be still greater. The commercial and political importance of this undertaking is greater than most people suppose. It will not only help to open out the immense resources of Southern Siberia, but will enable Russia to compete more successfully for the Japanese and Chinese carrying and import trade. Goods that are now sent by sea to Europe will ten years hence be carried overland into Europe, and a good deal of the Chinese carrying trade will go into the hands of Russia. A large portion of the railway will run through millions of acres of the finest virgin soil, over immense rivers, in primeval forests which have never been cut, and through countries abounding in mineral and vegetable wealth. When the line is ready it will be possible to work the rich gold, silver, iron, copper, and plumbago mines of Eastern Siberia, which have hardly yet been touched in consequence of the scarcity of labor and the absence of machinery. The rich and fertile regions of the Amoor and Usuri, which boast of a climate as fine as that of France, will then be open to colonists, and also millions of acres of land which are at the present moment almost unpopulated. By means of this railway Russia will be able to convert Vladivostock into a great naval and military station like Sevastopol, and, if necessary, pour several hundred thousand troops on the Chinese frontier in less than three weeks' time. And last, and not least, among the benefits which will accrue to mankind through this undertaking, will be the possibility of visiting China or Japan in about a fortnight from Central Europe, with all that comfort that is attached to railway traveling in Russia.—Public Opinion.

A Tin-Type for a Nickle.

A wise man from Minneapolis has the latest and most ingenious thing in the nickle-in-the-slot machines, which is on exhibition on West Twenty-third street, says the St. Louis Republic. It is a contrivance that takes your picture for a nickle, "and it does its deadly work with silence and dispatch." In 60 seconds from the time the victim drops the nickle in the slot and turns the crank, a small but truthful tin-type of the Coney Island variety comes obsequiously out through a crack. The machine can do this 400 times without becoming exhausted. The outside is like the exterior of the "put-a nickle-in the-slot and have your weight printed on a card, while beautiful music is discoursed" machine, but the interior is a tangle of wheels and wire and springs and pulleys. The principle of the thing is simple. It is that of the flash-light photographs. The crank brings the flame of a small alcohol lamp near a magnesium ribbon, which produces a flash of light by which the picture is taken on a tin-type 1½ inches by 1⅛ inches. The gentleman who has dropped the nickle sits in front of a camera lens five-sixteenths of an inch in diameter. After receiving the impression the tin type is picked up by a steel hand and dropped into the "developer," where it remains thirty seconds, the time being regulated by clock work. Another steel hand lifts it out of the developing mixture and passes it along to a tiny tank where it gets a bath, which washes off the developing composition. After remaining here only a second it is dropped by a third steel hand into a soda bath, where it stays twenty seconds, this being regulated by a second automatic clock arrangement. Then the tin-type goes to another tank, where it receives a second washing. This ends the photographic process, and a steel hand now grasps and drops it into a flume, whence it pops into view outside as a finished work of art.

DR. KING'S

Royal Germetuer

Does this more pleasantly, more safely and more surely than any remedy known to medical science.

These Five Things

In which it differs from other medicines account largely for its wondrous popularity:

1. It does not taste like medicine. It is as pleasant as lemonade, and, sweetened, makes a most refreshing drink. Persons who object to all other medicines take this with real pleasure, because it is good.

2. It never nauseates. The most delicate stomach finds in this a perfect remedy without a single objection.

3. It never swaps off one disease for another. It does not set up one form of disease in order to relieve another, as is the case with so many deadly drugs.

4. It does not patch simply. It cures. It reaches, as nothing else does, to the hidden sources of disease in the blood, and removes the cause. It does this with an ease and power that have never been equaled.

5. It is harmless, and may be safely given to a babe one day old. It is free from Alcohol and Opium.

All persons living in a malarial district should keep this great family remedy on hand. It will break any fever in half the time required by quinine and anti-pyrine, and leave none of their unpleasant and hurtful effects.

For Malaria, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sick Headache, Kidney Trouble, and Blood and Skin diseases, there is nothing to be compared with it. For Ladies and Children it is far the best.

OBITUARIES.

GAY—MRS. SALLIE GAY, daughter of Willie and John Hare, was born Nov. 17, 1817, in Johnson county, N. C.; was married, Jan. 23, 1867, to T. B. Gay, who, with three children, live to mourn the loss of companion and mother. Sister Gay has been a member of the Baptist Church for years, until last year some time she united herself with the Methodist Church at Slidell, La., where she lived a blameless member of the same until April 1, 1891, when she was called to come up higher and receive a crown of life eternal.

The writer had known her only a short while before her death, but never knew a brighter Christian. She had been an invalid for some time before she died, but was perfectly resigned to her Father's will, patient and submissive in all things. She expressed herself as being anxious to live to see her baby boy dedicated to God, which we did just two weeks before her death. When I went to leave she made me good-by, and said she would be in heaven before I came again. Just two weeks from that time she bid farewell to friends and loved ones, and her spirit took its flight to join the church triumphant in heaven, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

HAMPTON—WILLIAM HAMPTON was born May 31, 1813; married to Miss Sarah Lipsey, in Macon county, Ga., 1840; moved to Louisiana, 1856, and settled near Pleasant Hill, Sabine parish. Twelve years ago he was made an invalid by a severe stroke of paralysis, since when he has been a great, though patient sufferer until released by death, May 1, 1891, and his mortal remains now rest in the old Wallace Camp Ground Cemetery.

Bro. Hampton joined the Methodist Church in early manhood, and through all his life he continued to enjoy the peace born of a steadfast faith in Christ, realizing (as he would say in his experience) that he possessed "a building not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." The verdict of all is, a good man rests from his labors, rests from his sufferings, rests with his God. A true friend, a good neighbor, a faithful Christian, he will be remembered by many of the preachers as they revert to old Wallace and Beulah Camp Meetings, and to their warm receptions at his home on the hill.

May his children follow his example, so that, with the mother and wife, who still linger on the shore, they may meet in the sweet hereafter! Rest, brother, till we meet again.

W. F. HENDERSON.

PRICE—EMMETT KEENER, son of W. N. and L. L. Price, was born Nov. 11, 1879, and died May 6, 1891. Though he was a sufferer for eighteen months, he never complained or murmured at his affliction, but patiently waited until the Lord called him from this earth to that blessed home above, where there is no more sickness or sorrow, no more trials to endure.

Weep not, dear parents, for dear little Emmett is gone to meet little Albert. They are both little angels in heaven, and are waiting at the pearly gates to welcome us home, where we will part no more. Oh, what a happy meeting it will be!

May the Lord comfort us all in time of trouble! He leaves a mother, father and three sisters to mourn his loss; but we know that our loss is his eternal gain. SISTER.

LANEY.—The following resolutions were adopted by the second Quarterly Conference of the Shannon circuit, Aberdeen district, North Mississippi Conference, April 29, 1891:

Whereas, Our heavenly Father, in his all-wise providence, has taken from our midst our dear brother, W. E. LANEY, who was a member of this Quarterly Conference, and its faithful recording steward for many years; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well, knowing that behind this dark cloud he hides a smiling face.

Resolved, That in the death of this faithful son of God this Quarterly Conference has lost one of its most efficient and faithful members; the church, one of its purest and strongest advocates; the community, one of its most praiseworthy and exemplary citizens; his family, a devoted husband; his children, a loving, tender father.

Resolved, That we extend to the family of our dear brother our deepest sympathy, invoking the divine blessings of His grace who is ever ready to bind up the broken-hearted; trusting that in the sweet by-and-by, when, one by one, we are called to cross the river, we may be as ready as he, by the grace of God, to cross over and rest under the shade of the trees with the blood, father, mother, wife, children and friends, to walk the golden streets and worship at the great white throne where sits the blessed Christ who hath robbed death of its sting and the grave of its victory.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased and a copy to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Quarterly Conference. J. M. BARNES, for Committee.

BAILEY—MRS. EDNA M. BAILEY, daughter of J. W. and Elizabeth Gillham, was born at Longpoint, Washington county, Texas, March 31, 1866, and died at her home, Yellow Prairie, Burleson county, Texas, May 6, 1891. On March 4, 1890, she was married to Dr. D. H. Bailey, who remains to sorrow for her, yet not without hope. In June, 1881, she was happily converted and united with the M. E. Church, South, ever afterward living the life of a devoted Christian. During her last illness no doubts troubled her. Two days before she died she told her husband that the future was bright, assuring him that she was ready to go, and urging him to live so as to meet her in heaven.

Her life on earth is ended; but the influence of her gentle, loving heart will ever abide with those who have loved her and now lost her for awhile! E. D. MUNZON.

A Good Story.

I recalled the incident a few day ago, says a writer in the New York World, as I sat in Trinity listening to Phillips Brooks' noontime talks. It happened in the spring of 1883. The four of us had gone to Europe together—Dr. McVickar, of Philadelphia, Phillips Brooks, and Mr. Robinson, the builder of Boston's Trinity Church. Robinson stands 6 feet 2 inches in his stockings, Dr. McVickar measures 6 feet 4 inches, and Brooks exceeds 6 feet in height. Robinson is sensitive about his length, and suggested that in order to avoid comment the three tall men avoid being seen together. Arriving in England, they went directly to Leeds, where they learned that a lecturer would address the working classes on "America and Americans." Anxious to hear what Englishmen thought of the great republic, they went to the hall. They entered separately, and took seats apart. The lecturer, after some uninteresting remarks, said that Americans were, as a rule, short, and seldom if ever rose to the height of five feet ten inches. He did not know to what cause he could attribute this fact, but he wished he could present examples to the audience.

Phillips Brooks rose to his feet, and said: "I am an American, and as you see, about six feet in height, and sincerely hope that if there be any other representative of my country present he will rise."

After a moment's interval, Mr. Robinson rose, and said: "I am from America, in which country my height—six feet two—is the subject of no remark. If there be any other American here, I hope that he will rise."

The house was in a jolly humor. Waiting until the excitement could abate in some degree, and the lecturer regain control of his shattered nerves, Dr. McVickar slowly drew his majestic form to its full height, and exclaimed: "I am an——." But he got no further. The audience roared, and the lecturer said no more on that subject.—Selected.

Women are not slow to comprehend. They're quick. They're alive, and yet it was a man who discovered the one remedy for their peculiar ailments. The man was Dr. Pierce.

The discovery was his "Favorite Prescription"—the boon to delicate women. Why go round "with one foot in the grave," suffering in silence—misunderstood—when there's a remedy at hand that isn't an experiment, but which is sold under the guarantee that if you are disappointed in any way in it, you can get your money back by applying to its makers.

We can hardly imagine a woman's not trying it. Possibly it may be true of one or two—but we doubt it. Women are ripe for it. They must have it. Think of a prescription and nine out of ten waiting for it. Carry the news to them!

CHRISTIAN GIVING UNION.—A "Christian Giving Union" has been formed in England with the following conditions of membership: 1. To set apart a definite proportion of income for religious and charitable purposes. 2. To try to induce others to do the same. No one is asked to pledge himself to any particular amount, it being left to his own conscience to determine what he shall give. Order and method are urged. Why not form such a union in every Sunday-school and church? Is it not true that in the majority of cases giving to Christ's cause is left to chance, impulse or pressure? Such a plan would be of spiritual benefit to the contributor and enlarge the contributions. Do not wait to see it adopted in your Sunday-school or church, but commence it at once in your own family.—Gospel in All Lands.

The Clarion-Ledger says: "Fifteen young ladies of Mississippi have been asked (and have accepted) to represent the several States of the late Confederacy at the unveiling of the monument on June 3. Each young lady will carry a banner, 20 by 30, of white, red or blue silk, with the name of the State represented painted diagonally across the same. The banner to be hung on a staff 8 feet long."

EXTRAORDINARY CLEANSER.

If our women readers could only understand what a convenience, economy and thorough cleanser "Pyle's Pearline" is, they would never use anything else. It is pure and free from any injurious ingredient. It is economical because only the requisite quantity is used at a time. While soap may slip from the fingers and be lost in the water to dissolve, Pearline is used only in quantities required. It is better adapted for cleansing around the house than any known article. It is more convenient than anything ever discovered, and it is as suitable for the most delicate lace or the finest linen as for the dirtiest horse-blanket, and it will make either as "clean as a whistle" in short order. All grocers sell it, and if the reader don't know of it, she may take our word for it.

UNHAPPY HOMES.—There is a great deal of talk about the duty of women to make home happy. But if the home is not happy, whose fault is it? Not in one case in a dozen, it may safely be said, does the blame rest with the woman. If a man makes his home simply a convenient place where he may take his meals, and possibly growl or sulk over them, whose fault is it? If his home is simply a lodging-place of last resort, to which he must repair when he is shut out every place else, whose fault is that? And if, while he is in his home he is evidently under constraint, preoccupied with other matters abroad, and fidgeting to be gone, who is to blame for that? Certainly not the woman who, forgetful of past and even of habitual disappointment, has looked forward with hope for his return to enliven her solitude, and to make care a pleasure by dividing it with her.—Selected.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

President Harrison and party, after a trip of observation in the South and West, returned to Washington on May 15.

The Catholic Knights of America, after a busy convention in Philadelphia, adjourned on the sixteenth. Jas. D. Coleman, of New Orleans, was re-elected president.

Twenty-two blocks in Muskegon, Mich., were destroyed by fire on May 16. Three hundred and fifty houses were burned, and hundreds of families are without homes and in need of public assistance. The loss is estimated at $500,000.

A warrant was issued from the treasury department in favor of the governor of Wisconsin for $441,334, this amount being Wisconsin's share of the direct tax fund, minus $5,201 withheld on account of the issue of arms and about $8,000 paid to the State under a previous act of Congress.

From Manistee to Huron (Michigan), on the lower peninsular, forest fires are still raging. Up to date the loss is estimated at $2,000,000, and it will probably be doubled, unless checked by rain. The loss in the upper tiers far exceed this estimate. Hundreds of families have been left destitute.

Ex-Secretary of State Will A. Strong has been released from custody, having been pardone by Governor Nicholls upon the recommendation of the Board. The pardon is to release him from imprisonment and to restore citizenship, but does not relieve him from the payment of the $8,503 fine imposed by the district judge.

In the United States district court, on May 15, a resident of Raleigh county, W. Va., was convicted of violating the lottery law by sending a letter through the United States mails to the Louisiana Lottery, and was fined $35 and costs. This is the first conviction for this offense known to have been made in the United States.

The Committee of Fifty, appointed by the mayor, at the instance of the city council, last October, to investigate the matter of the existence of secret societies in this city, and suggest methods for their suppression, etc., made its report on May 14. The report recognizes the existence here of organized bands of criminals whose members and methods are imported from foreign countries, and whose crimes, being committed under cover of darkness, give evidence of preconcerted assassination. The report declares that the criminal courts, as now constituted, are powerless to secure the ends of justice. It recommends, among other things, that the jury law be amended, so that a service of two weeks at a time shall exempt a juror from such duty for two years; that jurymen be paid $2 a day. It also suggests the entire prohibition of immigration from Sicily and lower Italy, as the people from these parts are, to say the least, undesirable citizens.

FOREIGN.

The influenza epidemic is seriously increased in the south of Russia. In Russian Poland the disease has decimated the population of many villages.

At the annual convention of the National League of Great Britain, held in Newcastle, Mr. Parnell was denounced as morally and politically unfit for a position of trust.

The foreign merchants in Lisbon propose to appoint three delegates—one French, one English and one German—to take action in common with the Portugnese committee on the public debt.

The long-talked-of exhibition to be devoted exclusively to works of art by Americans, executed in France, opens in June. The idea of this exhibition is to show the advantages which artists reap from a Paris training.

The misery of the defeated strikers in Westphalia is extreme. Over twenty thousand who have applied for work in the Bochum district have been refused employment and threatened with expulsion from their homes.

The London Times say the Russian government will withdraw £3,000,000 from London within the next month or two, and that it is doubtful whether the Bank of England will be able to draw that amount from America.

It is said that the Jura Simplon Railway Tunnel Company is about to begin operations to tunnel Mount Simplon and connect Italy and Switzerland by another railway. Improved machinery has been invented by which the bore can be completed in five and a half years at a cost of 10,000,000 francs.

Spain has agreed to give American imports into Cuba and Porto Rico a differential rate of 25 per cent. against similar imports from all other countries, whether or not they conclude treaties with Spain. Such a privilege constituting practical customs union between the United States and the Spanish Antilles blocks further negotiation, which the German ambassador has undertaken simultaneously with the Austrian, Italian and Belgian ministers. Spain has been invited to send a delegate to the customs conference at Vienna, where a solution of the difficulty might be discussed.

Some days ago the steamer Itata, lying in the harbor of San Diego, Cal., took on board from a sailing vessel a cargo of arms and munitions of war. As the Itata appeared to be in the service of the Chilian rebels, the United States government ordered her to be detained at San Diego, pending inquiries, and put a deputy marshal aboard of her to maintain possession. The Itata subsequently put to sea with that official on board, and, landing him at another point, she made her way southward to Chili. The cruiser Charleston was sent by the United States government in pursuit of the Itata, with orders to capture her at all hazards. As the Esmeralda, the Chilian warship, is in Mexican waters to protect the Itata, it is thought that the two war vessels will meet and fight for the capture of the Itata.

A Noble Record in life-saving is accorded to Maguire's Cundurango, the universal medicine. It routs disease, whether located in the Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, Stomach, or any of the organs. 75c. per bottle; we pay expressage when three bottles are ordered.

THE LAST DAYS!

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 35 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.

This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

We felt surprised to learn that the ADVOCATE had seven thousand dollars of outstanding accounts, and will try to raise every cent due the paper from this district. We can not hope to have a prosperous paper long with such a state of affairs.

Bishop Galloway preached up to his standard on Sunday morning, and lectured Sunday night to a delighted audience on "Methodism, the Child of Providence." Suffice it to say, his visit to Clarksdale was an inspiration to the community, and gave strength to our cause there.

The Conference closed, to meet next year at Friar's Point.

REPORT ON EDUCATION.

Your Committee on Education beg leave to report that the cause has received new life from the vigorous canvass made by the agents of Millsaps College, and we trust at no distant day that the cause of Christian education will receive the attention its importance demands. We are glad to have with us the Rev. T. J. Newell, president of Grenada Collegiate Institute, and secretary of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College. We heartily commend to our people the Grenada Collegiate Institute, over which he presides, as worthy their liberal support, and earnestly request that those who have daughters to educate will give this institution the benefit of a careful investigation before sending elsewhere, believing that the work done here will compare favorably with that of any institution of the kind in the land.

We ask also the adoption of this resolution:

Resolved, That we do what we can to aid the president in increasing the patronage of this institution, and giving it the success it ought to have.

We rejoice at prospect of the opening at an early day, in the capital of our State, of the Millsaps College.

Resolved, That we pledge to it our loyal and united support, and will welcome to our charges its representatives, and will assist them in promoting its interests and making it what it should be to Mississippi Methodism.

Resolved, That we recognize and appreciate the royal beneficence of Maj. R. W. Millsaps, which made the institution a possibility.

Resolved, That the trustees be requested to secure such an amendment to the charter of the college as will prevent the sale of vinous and spirituous liquors within five miles of the institution.

J. A. RANDOLPH,
For Committee.

"Who Was Melchizedek?"

I wish to add a word or two to what your correspondent, three stars (), has said in answer to this question, in the ADVOCATE, of May 14.

I think that before this question can be satisfactorily answered, we must take a bird's eye view, at least, of the condition of the world and of the church at the time his name appears. Human affairs were very different then and now. We have no history reaching near that period—nothing but a sketch of scrapa touching and glancing here and there, and that by no means relating to the church, as we would call it, but to one branch or family of the entire church; for it seems apparent that at that period, and before and after, the Hebrew was only one of several branches of what might be called the church entire. We see this from several allusions to other religious people than those connected with Abram. If the longer chronologies are most nearly correct, which I strongly incline to believe, then Melchizedek may have lived nearly, or quite, and maybe more than two thousand years after the flood. This would give ample room for no little history of various churches or denominations that may have existed in that period.

The book of Genesis, except by a few incidental glances, tells us only of the Abrahamic portion of the church. And to conclude, therefore, that there were no others, is entirely gratuitous. What is written, we see; what is not written, we must infer the best way we can. This we always do about all history.

Most of us strain verbalisms unduly. "Priest of the most high God" means no more than what we would call an authorized minister of the gospel. "After the order of Melchizedek" is made to symbolize considerably. The word "order" has no ecclesiastical significance. It means after the way or method; but we have no information that is important, or very clear, touching this mode of induction.

In those times there were probably no governments of a territorial character. Both Abraham and his friend, Melchizedek, were petty kings and ruling bishops, using modern language. Church government was civil government, such as it was. These two men were heads of churches and of tribes. A marauding party had carried away Lot and his property, and Abraham had captured the outlaws, and his neighbor assisted him. They were very friendly and generous, and Moses, in after years, alludes to it briefly. These separate branches of the church in later times became more united. This whole matter was natural. Much straining and symbolizing of terms has made more out of it than is necessary.

The closing paragraph of your correspondent is not well understood. He says: "The spirit of Judaism may undertake to limit 'the most high God' this way; but he calls out a new people, just as he called Melchizedek and Christ."

What new people? Now, so intelligent a writer would hardly call that half of the old Jewish Church that received Christ, and were afterward called Christians, a "new people." In what sense were they a new people? They maintained the faith of the old Jewish Church in every particular, and do now maintain it. I think the readers of the ADVOCATE might expect to be informed explicitly what is meant by the church after Christ being a new people as to the church before that event. Chronologically, every event is new. The church to-day is new as to the church yesterday. Surely, this can not be his meaning.

On the whole, this little unimportant incident of these two neighboring bishops and princes of different churches, or different denominations, has been forced into Christologic importance far beyond what the incidental allusion to it by Moses, in later ages, would seem to warrant.

Preparation for Sunday-School Work.

The need of Sunday-school workers, in order to do better work for Jesus, is careful preparation, for success in all lines depends largely upon previous work. This requires more perfect knowledge of himself, or herself, by the worker, of the Bible, which is the text-book of the scholar, and of the work to be done. In the effort to thus prepare for work, normal training is important; but teachers of this art are few. Perhaps the following plan may answer as a partial substitute: Let each superintendent get a blank book, and divide it into chapters. First, of himself; second, of his teachers; and, third, of his scholars. In the first he should record all he knows of himself, with special reference to his duties as head-teacher of the Sunday-school; what he knows of the Bible, of Christ, of the plan of salvation. Second, he should get a clear view of the characteristics and qualifications, life and spirituality of each teacher. Third, each scholar's family life, spiritual surroundings and opportunity to learn the truth should be recorded at the date of each pupil's admission to the school. Space should be left after each teacher's and scholar's name to add such items as bear upon their life, showing results of Sunday-school work.

Sunday-school teachers should pursue a like plan, both with themselves and scholars. These books should be private; no one should know that either superintendent or teacher were keeping such a record, as it would do no good, and prevent teachers and scholars from acting naturally when in Sunday-school.

Model Obituaries.

Our church papers often remind their readers of the indispensable brevity required to secure publication of obituaries, by regulations, warnings, pathetic expostulations, and waste-baskets.

I send you five for your eye privately. Do they overrun the measure? Are they not after the Bible patterns? Selected from the "old book," discovered by Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., in his perambulations as presiding elder. From this "old book" the Doctor furnished valuable extracts, interesting and profitable to readers of our ADVOCATE. I copy only part of printed page, 5½ inches by 3 inches. The title of the "old book" is: "Minutes of the Methodist Conferences, Annually held in America, from 1773 to 1813, inclusive. Volume the First."

Ques. 10. Who have died this year?

Ans. 1. Henry Bingham, a native of Virginia, four years a laborer in the vineyard, serious, faithful, zealous, humble and teachable, and during part of the last year more than commonly successful; fervent in exhortation during his sickness, and resigned in death.

2. William Gill, a native of Delaware, an elder in the church, and a laborer in it for about twelve years, blameless in life, of quick and solid parts, sound in the faith, clear in his judgment, meek in his spirit, resigned and solemnly happy in his death.

3. John Cooper, fifteen years in the work, quiet, inoffensive, and blameless: a son of affliction, subject to dejection, sorrow and sufferings; often in want, but too modest to complain, till observed and relieved by his friends. He died in peace.

4. James White, a native of Maryland, about eight years in the work, a simple-hearted man and a lively preacher, afflicted, yet active and laborious, soft and kind in his afflictions, patient in suffering, well received and much esteemed, successful in the work of God, resigned in his death.

5. Francis Spry, a pious man, skillful and lively in his preaching, sound in judgment, holy in his life, placid in his mind, of unshaken confidence and patience in his death; four years a laborer in the vineyard.

Millsaps College Notes.

The Board of Trustees, in their meeting on the twentieth instant, selected the Hemingway place as the site of the college. This action was evidently in the best interests of the institution.

Two propositions were offered, based upon this location: First, fifty acres of land, and a bonus of $36,000; and, secondly, eighty acres of land, including the residence and outhouses, and a cash donation of $28,000.

A committee of three, consisting of Bishop Galloway, Col. W. L. Nugent, and Major R. W. Millsaps, were appointed to decide which of these propositions is the more advantageous, and to definitely fix the site. In either case the location is a very desirable one.

The estate extends from within one-quarter to three-quarters of a mile from the northern limits of the city. The land is elevated and beautifully rolling, and touches the Illinois Central railroad about one mile north of the depot. It is within full view of three railroads, and is very near the stand-pipe of the waterworks. It is beautiful, healthful, convenient and conspicuous. A more suitable site could not have been selected.

The Building Committee have extended until the tenth of June the time for the consideration of plans and specifications for buildings. At that time the decision will be made, and the contract awarded for one or more buildings. It will be a happy day when, from the passing trains, there can be seen the rising walls of our main building.

Important as is the question of the college buildings, the most important consideration at this time is the collection of the endowment fund. Without this the buildings will be almost useless. The endowment fund is the driving-wheel of our educational machinery.

Our people must not deceive themselves with the thought that this great work has been accomplished. It is so far from being accomplished that the condition of the fund calls for serious consideration. A subscription is not a collection, and an endowment note is not cash.

We have now not less than $12,000 in notes past due, nearly all of which could be paid within the next thirty days without serious embarrassment to those who gave the notes.

The importance of immediate payment is not, I am sure, appreciated by our people. The payment of interest and the extension of the note, while provided for in case of necessity, is not, by any means, as satisfactory as the prompt payment of the notes as they mature. Delay in payment causes not only the loss of interest on the amount, but also the loss of the interest on the second installment of $25,000 to be given by Major Millsaps, to say nothing of the risk we run of never getting the second installment, which we know will not be paid until the like amount has been paid by the church.

This hurt to our cause is to be avoided by doing two things: First, our subscribers must be made to realize the importance of paying up the notes that have already matured; and, secondly, the thousands of Methodists in the State who have never contributed to the cause, must now come up to the help of the institution.

The failure to realize the balance of the $100,000 in cash by the first day of next December will be a humiliating confession of our illiberality and ignorance.

The preachers have this matter almost entirely in their own hands, and they ought to open their eyes to the serious fact that the most important enterprise that ever engaged the united energies of the church in this State is hindered in its work, and its ultimate success jeopardized by the inactivity of its friends. The work of months drags on into years, because many who wish well to the cause do not wish well enough to do anything.

One good honest effort upon the part of each of our preachers to collect the notes that are now due in his charge, and to secure some additional contributions from those who have never given anything, would settle forever the question of the endowment fund.

A. F. WATKINS.

Our Domestic Mission Work.

We have written several articles on this subject, and have published several from other brethren. It seems that others are thinking on the same line. We clip the following, by "W. C. L.," in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate:

Never before in the history of our State was there need for so much "domestic" missionary money as now. Our cities and towns are increasing at a rapid rate in population; they are becoming centers of population, indeed, and the character of the centers is being thrown strikingly all around the circumference. Our larger city churches, while they can do much, can not do all that needs to be done before this thronging mass of people is brought and kept under the benign influence and power of the religion of Jesus Christ. To do this needs the power that comes of aggregated money under the might of an organization for this specific work. The peculiar social conditions which now environs us, the perils which now threaten us, make the cities and towns of special interest to the lovers of Jesus. We need now, and will need for years to come, more city missionaries than ever. They are our safety—they are wise conservators of what we esteem good in government, society, and the church. The hands raised in horror over increased assessments for "domestic" missions for our city work, are raised without thought, and at the suggestion of a partial view which sees only the shekels which are called for. But if our cities must have more missionary money, there is no room for curtailment for our country districts. The country is being rapidly settled—people of push and vim are coming into this section, and the gospel must grasp them, or they will, in the recklessness of an over-mastering covetousness, not only lose their own souls, but endanger institutions we hold dear. Instead of bringing the missionary to the lowest possible economy for a hard living, we ought to grant him enough to save him from annoyance and care in giving himself wholly to this work. The sum we now need in South Georgia to do good work would seem like the exaggeration of a dream to those of our people who have given meagerly to this work in the hope of not giving again because of complete occupancy of the ground.

I would not, Mr. Editor, magnify one duty above another, nor would I narrow or dry up one single stream of benevolence now flowing from the heart or purse of the church; but I would make the current that goes through our home fields broader, and swifter than it is. Increased money here means blessings all around the world.

The application of this meditation is, that the pastors will strike a more confident note in their appeals for this cause, and the people called Methodist will spring a better stream of gifts to it. Our occupancy is far from complete.

The Fight Is On.

Already the lottery has its emissaries abroad and at work. Its hireling newspapers and its subservient "Progressive League" have awakened to renewed activity. Lottery literature, lottery newspapers by the ton and, what is more dangerous, lottery money are beginning to circulate. The grand, final, mighty effort to corrupt the people, as it has already corrupted their servants, has now begun. It is, therefore, time that those who hold their State's honor above money, their own liberties above gold, and the right of self-government above price, should arouse themselves and combat this enemy of the public peace, this devourer of the people's substance, this destroyer of the people's liberties, this smircher of the State's reputation.

Heed not the protest of the lotteryites against "a long campaign." The time left us is all too short. Be not lulled into a false sense of fancied security; there is none. Be not deceived into believing that the Lottery will wait to open the campaign next Fall or next Summer. It has already opened it. From every section of the State comes the news that the Lottery henchmen are at work. Meet them. Do not delay one instant. In every city, town, village and hamlet in the State, at every cross-roads and neighborhood and settlement in the country, in highways and byways, in the crowded centers of population, and in the fresh clearing in the forest, on every square mile of our beloved State, from the pine-clad hills of the Arkansas line to the wave-kissed sands on the shores of the Gulf, let anti-Lottery Leagues be organized. Let those who feel the importance of the issue now presented tell to their neighbors, with the eloquence of earnestness, the facts which should put every true son of Louisiana in touch, shoulder to shoulder, in solid, unbroken front, in opposition to the monster iniquity of the age, the colossal political tyrant of the century, the gigantic "plunderer of the poor, the ignorant and the simple"—the Lottery.

Let there be no consideration of the question, "When shall we open the campaign?" It is already open. Let there be no time lost in looking for a field upon which to pitch the battle; the State is the field. In every parish the enemy is at work. In every parish meet him. In trumpet tones throughout the land proclaim, "The Philistines are upon thee, Samson." And let the mighty Samson—the uncorrupted and incorruptible people—arise in his might, and, breaking the bonds with which it was sought to bind him, fall upon the enemy and destroy him. The leaders of the people are resolved that, as the champion of old destroyed the temple of Baal, so will they destroy this modern temple of iniquity, even though they themselves are crushed in the fall. The weal of the people is above that of any individual. Let the people sustain them by organization and agitation. Let the campaign of education open at once. Let us become the assailants, not wait to be assailed, and the cause of right, of justice, of honesty, of morality and liberty will triumph.—New Delta.

"PERFECT THROUGH SUFFERING."

God never would send you the darkness
If he felt you could bear the light,
But you would not cling to his guiding hand
If the way were always bright;
And you would not care to walk by faith
Could you always walk by sight.

'Tis true he has many an anguish
For your sorrowful heart to bear,
And many a cruel thorn-crown
For your tired head to wear
He knows how few would reach heaven at all
If pain did not guide them there.

So he sends you the blinding darkness
And the furnace of seven-fold heat,
'Tis the only way, believe me,
To keep you close to his feet.
For 'tis always so easy to wander astray
When our lives are glad and sweet.

Then nestle your head on your Father,
And sing, if you can, as you go.
Your song may cheer some one behind,
Whose courage is sinking low.
And—well if your lips do quiver,
God will love you better so.

The Methodist Ecumenical Conference.

The Executive Committee of the Western Section of the Methodist Ecumenical Conference met at Wesley Hall, in the city of Baltimore, at 3:30 P. M., May 4, 1891.

Bishop John F. Hurst, the chairman, presided. Prayer was offered by Dr. J. W. Hamilton.

Dr. J. M. King was elected secretary pro tem. The following members responded to the roll: Bishops John F. Hurst and J. C. Granbery, and Drs. G. H. Phillips, W. S. Griffin, P. H. Whisner, J. W. Hamilton and J. M. King, and Prof. J. M. Van Vleck, and Messrs. G. H. Hunt and E. B. Prettyman. Excuses were received from General Superintendent A. Carman, Bishop J. W. Hood, and Drs. W. P. Harrison and D. S. Monroe. The name of Dr. J. T. Murray, of the Methodist Protestant Church, was added to the roll of the committee. Dr. E. E. Hoss was recognized as a substitute in the place of Dr. W. P. Harrison, who was absent on account of illness.

The minutes of the meeting of the committee on Nov. 20, 1890, were read for information.

The treasurer, G. H. Hunt, made a statement of the condition of the treasury, and stated that he was prepared to pay any bills upon the order of the chairman and secretary of the committee.

It was ordered that the time for opening the Ecumenical Conference be fixed for Oct. 7, 1891.

The question of correspondence with the Methodist bodies in the Western Section, as yet unrepresented in the proposed Ecumenical Conference, being considered, Dr. H. K. Carroll was requested to communicate with these bodies, and allot their representation on the basis of the action of the Executive Committee, and report the result to the Programme Committee, and that June 16 be fixed as the limit of time for ending the correspondence, and completing the allotments for delegates.

It was ordered that the first seven unassigned delegates be assigned to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and that any other vacancies in the list of delegates be assigned to the Methodist Episcopal Church and to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the ratio of two to one.

It was ordered that, of the nine delegates allotted to the United Brethren Church, two should be allotted to the United Brethren, old Constitution.

Dr. Carroll and Dr. King were instructed to notify the different Methodist bodies now unrepresented as to the number of delegates to which they were entitled, and also to notify the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of any new allotments made to these churches.

At this point in the proceedings Bishop J. C. Granbery took the chair.

It was ordered that Dr. S. L. Baldwin be requested to take charge of the matter of transportation of delegates and visitors to the Ecumenical Conference, and that he have authority to associate with him not to exceed four others, and that he be authorized to employ such clerical help, at the expense of the Executive Committee, as may be necessary.

Bishop Hurst reported that a local committee in the city of Washington had been constituted, and that encouraging arrangements were being made for the entertainment of the Conference.

It was ordered that the local committee in Washington be instructed to secure one place for all the meetings of the Conference.

It was ordered that the assignment of the Eastern delegates to preaching and platform service during the session of the Conference be referred to the Programme Committee, with power, and that the Eastern delegates be notified that their appointments will be made by this committee.

The Programme Committee was directed to prepare and publish a programme for the Conference, and also to provide for the publication of the proceedings of the Conference.

The question of providing music for the Conference was referred to the local committee in Washington, with power.

The secretary of the committee was instructed to prepare, at his discretion, a record of the transactions of the committee, for publication in the church papers, of the different Methodist Churches represented, and forward the same to said papers.

It was directed that the names of the members of the Finance Committee, and of other brethren who were corresponding members of committees, be printed in the official programme.

It was resolved that the New York Preachers' Meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church be requested to appoint a committee to welcome such Eastern delegates as may arrive in New York previous to the time of the sessions of the Ecumenical Conference.

Dr. W. S. Griffin was authorized to act at the session of the Programme Committee of this date in the place of Dr. Carman, and Dr. Hoss was authorized to act in the place of Dr. Harrison. Dr. J. T. Murray was elected to membership in the Programme Committee.

Saratoga Springs, August 5, at 10 A. M., was fixed as the time and place of the next meeting of the Executive Committee. Dr. G. H. Phillips was invited to meet with the Programme Committee. Dr. J. F. Goucher, the chairman of the Finance Committee, was invited to meet with the Executive Committee at its next session in Saratoga Springs.

The minutes were read and approved, and, on motion, the committee adjourned to meet in Saratoga, August 5, 1891.

Church Ethics.

There are several little questions, which, if definitely settled, would obviate misunderstandings and hard feelings even among people well disposed to do right. For people equally good may differ in views honestly and widely. But if there could be well-defined rules established for uniform guidance, there would be less friction and irritation, of course.

For instance, when there is to be a change in the parsonage, the outgoing preacher may think the ingoing one is in too big a hurry about moving in; and the ingoing preacher may think the outgoing one is too slow about moving out. If there was an established rule allowing a definite number of days for the change, all confusion and unpleasantness might be avoided. And after the preacher has moved in and entered upon his work, there are liable to arise questions which, if they could be definitely and satisfactorily settled by established rules beforehand, harmony and good feeling could be preserved better.

For instance, the preacher thinks he is entitled to certain prerogatives by virtue of his calling of God and his responsibility to the appointing powers; and the church members think they have certain reserved rights, and both parties are correct to a certain extent. But, without a well-defined code of church ethics, how is the question to be decided as to the proper boundaries which all ought to respect religiously? Who will write a good system of church ethics? All good people would hail with delight a just and well-defined church etiquette for the uniform guidance of all concerned, no doubt.

In the meantime, until we have a good written code, let the lex non scripta of the church be the "golden rule" of the Savior. And, by all means, let us "be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another." And "let brotherly love continue." "Let us walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." And, "above all things," let us "have fervent charity among ourselves."

Modes of Reception of Members.

In the ADVOCATE, of May 7, Bro. B. F. Phillips asks for an explanation of a statement made in my article, of April 16, in reference to receiving two into the church—one "on profession," the other "by baptism." He says he has met the same statement before, I believe, in a record of a Church Conference. His criticism is, that it sounds rather Baptistic. He says he does not understand it, and that he wants more light. May I hope to be able to turn on the light just a little?

My brother, "on profession" and "by baptism" are only indicative of the formula under which the candidate was received into the church.

We understand that the candidates, under any form, profess to have faith in Christ to the saving of their souls. The one has been baptized before the time of reception into full connection, and is received on profession only; the other has not, and takes both the baptismal vows and the others, too. The one is received simply on profession; the other on profession, and by baptism, too—that is, at the same time takes both covenants. I would ask Bro. Phillips to examine the form of report to a District Conference, given to us by a Bishop, and the form of report to an Annual Conference, given to us by the General Conference, and he will find a space for those received "on profession" and for those baptized; and if he will turn to the church register, gotten up by the Preachers' Association of Nashville, and endorsed by the last General Conference, he will find four forms of reception, one of which is "by baptism." If he will get his Discipline, and turn to pages 61 and 62, question four, in the Quarterly Conference, he will find that the pastor's report on the general state of the church must include "those baptized, or in any other way received into the church." Surely, baptism is one form of reception into the church.

His criticism is, that it is "rather Baptistic." I think he should be a little careful about criticising others, for in so doing he has criticised his own church; and you know we have promised to keep these rules and regulations, and not mend them. For my part, I am glad that we have a common way of expressing what is commonly done among us. Where there is no sacrificing of principle or doctrine I can join others in custom, in heart and hand, while, in a common warfare, we fight a common foe, and looking to a common Savior, and pressing on to a common heaven.

How pleasant and good a thing it is for brethren to dwell and work together in unity!

J. H. SMITH.

Children's Day at East End, Meridian.

Sunday last we held Children's Day services at East End Church. The youngest school of our denomination in this city, having been organized but a little more than three months, we had about one hundred and thirty-five members present out of a roll of one hundred and forty-four. The children and older members entered into the exercises heartily and acquitted themselves admirably, having had but one rehearsal previous to the appointed day.

We followed the programme from our Sunday-school Committee closely, improvising some songs not laid down in the programme. Collection amounted to $7.45. Our young pastor, H. C. Brown, delivered a model address for the occasion, not exceeding twenty minutes' duration—clear, illustrative and effective—to the edifying of young and old. His theme was, "We judge, and are judged by our actions;" and when he asked the children what they thought of a church member who would attend balls, theatres, etc., one little fellow promptly replied he thought they should be turned out of the church. A hearty response of approval by the congregation clearly indicated the education our "East End" children and people are receiving. At the close of the exercises, Bro. Brown opened the doors of the church. Four girls, under twelve, and one young lady joined. So you see we did not neglect the spiritual part of "Children's Day" services.

A good revival meeting has been in progress two weeks; interest increasing. A goodly number from the Sunday-school and outsiders have been added to the church, and the old "rancid members"—as one of our preachers called them—being revived and sweetened, do "show forth their faith by their works." I will leave it to Bro. Brown to give you a full account of the meeting.

J. B. CHATFIELD,
Sunday-school Superintendent.

Children's Day at Anguilla, Miss.

The Anguilla Sunday-school celebrated Children's Day with the exercises laid down in the programme. There were forty children present, and they sang and recited well. A little girl recited "The Noisy Seven" in a sweet, pathetic little voice, that brought tears to many eyes. "The Child's Wish" was sung to a beautiful air, to which it was fitted when our grandfathers were little boys; and was sung by "a grandfather" and a group of lovely little children. This picture—a man with a head white with the snows of eighty winters, helping out with his strong, sweet voice the soft voices of the little ones standing around him, as he sat facing the congregation—is one long to be remembered. Would it were oftener seen in our churches!

Our pastor made the address. The most striking point he made was in regard to the "law of honor" not being a safe law of life. He told the many ruinous habits a man could have and still be an honored man of the world, and showed the need of a Bible standard for molding and judging character. He touched the subject of dueling. He scored the men who hate their enemies more than they love mother, wife and children, and go forth to murder or be murdered upon "the field of honor." He reproved the men and women who receive such men as their friends.

The collection was good, inasmuch as everybody seemed to contribute something.

M. J. ANDERSON.

Children's Day at Sallis, Miss.

It is said, "Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh;" and we have realized such a spiritual uplifting and soul-feast recently, the occasion of which was the observance of Children's Day, that we feel constrained to tell you of it.

On last Sunday morning, at the ringing of the bells, our little town presented a lovely picture of bright, happy-faced children on their way to the sanctuary, each innocent little heart with its love-service, and each little band with an offering for the Master. The church, with appropriate mottoes and decorations of lovely Spring flowers, typical of the purity and innocence of childhood, was an inspiration. All the exercises of the programme were faithfully carried out, interspersed here and there with talks to the children by the pastor, superintendent, etc., explanatory of the occasion, object, etc. This day will be a bright epoch in the history of our children, will never be forgotten, and we pray the results of which will be felt in eternity.

Our church is prosperous and on the up-grade spiritually, under the ministry of our efficient and faithful pastor, Rev. R. M. Evans. The ADVOCATE comes to us weekly, laden with its message of love, comfort and wisdom. Long may it prosper, and may God's blessings abide with you!

M. ALICE BROWN.

Carthage Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

Our second Quarterly Conference convened on May 9. Our presiding elder, P. A. Johnston, was on hand in good time, as usual. He has been on this district this, the fourth year, and has not missed that many appointments. We are sorry that we will have to give him up after this year. He has been my presiding elder ever since I have been connected with the Conference. He has done his work as no other could have done it.

Our District Conference convenes May 28-31, at Hickory. We would be glad to see you in our midst again. We expect to have the District Conference at Carthage next year; and if you will come up then, we will prove to you that the Carthagenians still possess the spirit of hospitality, and, when District Conference is over, we will give you some delightful bream fishing in the waters of the "rippling Pearl."

I travel over a large scope of undeveloped country—good lands and fine timber. The people, generally, in the country are uneducated. We have received seven into the church this year, and have lost, in different ways, sixteen. Our Sunday-school raised one share in the "special missionary." We have a Woman's P. and H. M. Society here doing good work; organized a juvenile society this week. Bro. Peebles, of Brandon, will assist me in a meeting here in June. We are praying for a revival.

JAS. G. CAMMACK.

Self in Work.

A quality of consecrated power is indicated by the wings with which, in the vision of the seraphim, each seraph covered his feet, or, indeed, his whole person. This quality of self-effacement or self-forgetfulness enters into all good work, and, most of all, into the best. A great work apparently does itself. Some day the humble doer awakens, and behold! the work is done, and he is famous, and he himself is astonishing. He only knew that there was a great wrong to resist, and he had no choice but to be at it. So men have conducted themselves in battle; the fortress must be taken, and the sally made, and it was done without thought of glory. The loss of this quality of self-forgetfulness spoils a good work. The governor of a State is going on nobly with measures of public beneficence; he holds the people's confidence until some day they perceive he is calculating the value of his policy for his own political ends. A friend comes to advise with me, and I take his admonition as precious balm, his commendations as proof of his affection, until he ruins all that he has said with one lurid flash of self-consciousness, showing that he is thinking chiefly of his own wisdom and superiority. Efface yourself if you would have your work stand. Do it, as it only can be done, by standing in the presence of God. Yet this self-effacement is also represented in the vision of wings. Self must be lost behind the activity of self. There is no other way to become unconscious but to lose one's self in his work. It is not because men make so much of their work, but because they make so little of it, that they can not forget themselves in it. "Yonder is myself without the inconvenience of myself," said Lacordaire, when his brother monk was elevated over his head. In the sick-room where souls are learning patience, as well as in active callings where they are learning diligence, is there a way opened to forget self in the calling of God.—Phillips Brooks, D. D.

Elements of Pulpit Power.

It is impossible for me to do more here than barely touch on some of the more important of these personal elements of pulpit power. I would put special emphasis on the following:

1. An unblemished character and life. If the preacher exemplify, in his own conduct, the truth which he urges on others, it will appeal with so much the greater power to their hearts. A man of a questionable life in the pulpit may draw crowds to hear him; but he will scarcely commend the truth in its saving efficacy.

2. Intensity of conviction. The effective preacher must be a man of unshaken faith; believing himself, with all his heart, the things which he speaks. Intense conviction, intensely uttered, will force its way to other hearts. That preacher will be weak who speaks in hesitancy and doubt.

3. Speaking as the messenger of God, and not in his own name, nor his own things. This is distinctively the stronghold of the pulpit. Not long since it was my privilege to listen to one who has attained no small degree of success in the ministration of the pulpit. He preached a simple gospel discourse from a warm heart. Near the close of the sermon he told the people that what he had said to them was the Lord's truth, and not something of his own invention, and he desired them so to regard it. The effect on the congregation was instantly perceptible.

4. An impressive voice. Preaching is oral discourse, and in that the voice is one of the principal factors; and yet it has been abominably maltreated by none so much as by ministers of the gospel. As an illustration, I may refer to a Western minister who, not many years ago, in praying for a sick man, in the pulpit, said, in a high falsetto voice, that the brother had "one foot in the graver, and the other all butter."

Daniel Webster once pronounced the word "onward" in a voice so commanding that a number of people in the audience rose to their feet to move on. And it is related of Whitfield that he could pronounce the word "Mesopotamia" in tones so tender as to bring tears to the eyes of people. The actor Garrick said he would give a 100 pounds if he could pronounce "Oh!" as Whitfield did. And it is said of Jesus that "he spake as never man spake."

5. Feeling. Sheridan once said, "I go to hear Rowland Hill, because his ideas come red-hot from his heart." Preaching is to persuade people to believe, repent, and lead holy, useful lives, and in order that they may be moved to do that, they must be made to feel it to be their duty; but it is only feeling which can kindle feeling.

"Hard study never made the matter clearer:
'Tis the live fountain in the speaker's heart
Sends forth the streams that melt the ravished hearer.
Would you then touch the heart, the only method known,
My worthy friend, is first have one of your own."

—Rev. J. J. Lampe, in Christian Weekly.

Shall Tired Men Go to Church?

Three gentlemen were in conversation.

Said Mr. A. to Mr. B. (who was an editor): "Mr. B., I must thank you for giving us Talmage's sermons in your Sunday morning issue. I enjoy staying home on Sunday morning to read them."

Said Mr. C. to Mr. B.: "My dear sir, can't you arrange to give that sermon in your Monday's issue, so that Mr. A. can go to church on Sunday, as he should, and stay home Monday morning to read Talmage?"

Mr. B. replied: "Go to church? Why, I don't go to church. After such a busy week I need rest on Sunday, and I feel more like lounging about home than fixing up for church."

To which Mr. B. said, "Amen!"

Mr. C.'s reply was earnest and practical. Said he:

"Gentlemen, I appreciate every word you say. You both know there is no busier man in town than I am. I grow so weary that I can hardly sleep. And you will always find me at church on Sunday. I go there for absolute rest, where my mind can entirely forget its week-day thoughts in the contemplation of divine truth and love, and where body and soul can unite in the worship of God. It is because we need rest that God bids us worship him, and I advise you to throw Talmage and lounging aside, and enjoy your duty."

The conversation was ended; but we trust not its influence. And we reproduce it here, because it is a thought many a man should consider who makes rest an idleness and a slothful disregard for the commands of and his duty to his God.

The Stimulus of Great Books.

Among the most graceful of American prose writers is Donald G. Mitchell, in whose "Dream Life" occurs this glowing passage on the influence of books upon character:

It is a glorious thing, when once you are weary of the dissipation, and the ennui of your own aimless thought, to take up some glowing page of an earnest thinker, and read, deep and long, until you find the metal of his thought tinkling on your brain, and striking out from your flinty lethargy flashes of ideas that give the mind light and heat. And away you go in the chase of what the soul within is creating on the instant, and you wonder at the fecundity of what seemed so barren, and at the ripeness of what seemed so crude. The glow of toil wakes you to the consciousness of your real capacities; you feel sure that they have taken a new step toward final development.

In such a mood it is that one feels grateful to the musty tomes, which, at other hours, stand like wonder-making mummies with no warmth and no vitality. Now they grow into the affections like new-found friends, and gain a hold upon the heart, and light a fire in the brain, that the years and the mold can not cover nor quench.

The Spirit of Littleness.

We notice another tendency which increases with the day, and which indicates unmistakably that the spiritual life of the church does not compare with the material. We can call it by no better name than the spirit of littleness. It manifests itself more particularly in petty carpings and faultings. Nothing that is done pleases these hackeldden critics. Prayer-meetings are not conducted so as to draw; Sunday-schools are not made lively and attractive; the preacher does not preach right and deport himself in the pulpit so as to impress the crowd. The feeble, morbid sensibilities of these cold-hearted Christians are wounded at every turn. In their circles we hear ten times more of pulpit manners and church propriety and gentility than of the conversion of sinners and helping the wounded. Sinners may die and go down to ruin, hearts may bleed and break, crimes as numerous as the sands and as black as the dark abyss may marshal themselves through our streets and along our highways and byways, but it is all well so long as we have good manners in the pulpit and the semblance of gentility in the church. A dead church is very genteel and all satisfactory. It may be but the emblem of a worthless life, a misspent life, it may be only the beautiful corpse of slighted opportunities, unappreciated privileges, neglected duties, the corpse of a long dead church, but it is all right—bring on the genteel robes and bedeck and enhance her shame. The heart grows sick as we hear and think of it.

This sort of thing, with many others, has gone to the point that the church is coming to be the sport of the secular press and the deriding world. It is a rare thing, as is well known, to open and hear the flings that are made at her. Some little fiasco or incident is seized upon and converted into a sensation, and heralded to the world as an evidence of the feebleness and folly of the church. When the Holy Ghost power is on our people this is not the case. When the world sees that followers of Christ are in earnest to do good, and that the power of God is with them, that world has the heart enough to take off its hat, close its mouth, or bid the holy men go on. The church is then on a different platform, too high and holy for unsanctified hands to touch.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

BOOKS.

CHANSONS POPULAIRES DE LA FRANCE. Edited by Thomas Frederick Crane. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1.50.

This is one of the Knickerbocker Nuggets' Series, and is a selection of popular French ballads. As we have very little of the French language outside of French songs, we can only say that the publishers have gotten the book out in beautiful style.

THE RELATION OF LABOR TO THE LAW OF TO-DAY. By Dr. Lujo Brentano. Translated from the German by Porter Lander Mac-lean. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1.50.

Here is an exhaustive treatment of this whole subject from the beginning of the solenoo of political economy until to-day. The author gives the history and principles of guilds, trades unions, and factory system. The wages question is treated at length. Whether you agree or disagree with the author, you will admit that he has produced a book of great interest and timely to the events of the present. A valuable part of the book is an excellent index.

THE QUESTION OF COPYRIGHT. By George H. Putnam. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1.50.

If anybody wants to know anything about copyright, this is the book to get. It is a summary of the copyright laws in force at present in the chief countries of the world. It also contains a report of the legislation now pending in Great Britain and a sketch of the contest in the United States in behalf of international copyright since the year 1837. There are also papers on the development of the conception of literary property and the probable effects of the new American law. This must all be interesting to any interested in this subject.

INTRODUCTORY.

In our previous study we made a sad and last farewell to the kingdom of Israel. We have traced the history of the apostate tribes from their proud rebellion under Joroboam to their humiliating subjection under Hoshea. We have marked the gradual decay of all national virtue, and have shuddered at the calamity of a people forsaken of the Lord. We have seen the progress of the disease; we have noted the patients' throes of anguish; we have been witnesses of a nation's death, and we have heard the solemn dirge of its burial far away in the heart of Assyria—a death so deep, a burial so obscure, that twenty-five centuries have failed to find a tomb or bring about a resurrection!

We now turn to the kingdom of Judah. The last we saw in our lessons of this people, they were in the midst of a bloody revolution under Jehu; but previous to our present study they were engaged in another. This was brought about by Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab. Her son, Ahaziah, having been slain by Jehu, she arose and slew, as she thought, all the seed royal of the house of Judah. How her wholesale spilling of regal blood must have caused the faces of all true Jehovah worshippers to pale with fear! But there was the promise that there should not fail a man to sit on the throne of David? How often does history show us the folly of attempting to thwart God's plans. Herod took great pains to kill the infant Jesus; but he failed. This wicked daughter of Jezebel took great pains to destroy the house of God's anointed; but she failed. Men, in their shortsightedness and utter foolishness, may imagine that they are curtailing Omnipotence and forcing the Almighty into a strait; but the All-seeing Eye views an Egypt in which to nurture its Only-Begotten, and picks out a Jehoshabeath to protect his chosen Joash. The rod of Jesse was destined to blossom forth afresh.

Joash was seven years old when he began to reign. Six of these years had been spent in the house of God, where he was kept by his aunt safe from the hands of his cruel grandmother. At the end of this time, Jehoiada, the priest, feeling secure in a confederation made with the Levites, determined to set the rightful heir upon the throne. This is one of the most remarkable revolutions in the world's annals. So popular was the demonstration in behalf of David's lineage, that but two persons were slain: Athaliah, the usurping queen, and Mattan, the priest of Baal. The twenty-third chapter gives a graphic description of the coronation of the young king—the "restoration of David's dynasty."

I.—JOASH'S PURPOSE.

Scarcely was the young king firmly settled on his throne, when he began to look about for something to engage his and the people's attention. He was not long finding the object of his search. There stood the Temple—the glory of Solomon's reign, the pride of every Jewish heart—all dismantled; walls broken; altars destroyed; furniture and utensils gone—a pitiable caricature of its whilom beauty and grandeur. Aside from motives derived from the inspirations of patriotism and religious enthusiasm, no doubt, the memory of his having found a place of refuge there, a stronghold from his enemies, impelled Joash to repair the house of the Lord. The purpose of the king was not long forming; its accomplishment was slowly attained. It is usually the case that men of intense enthusiasm for a particular object are surrounded by those who manifest little or no interest in the matter. This fact renders zeal virtuous; for surely it is no virtue to simply follow the multitudes. True greatness of soul and determination of spirit stem the tide of popular opposition and, if need be, surrender all else than the coveted goal. The appeal that Joash made to Jehoiada met with such a feeble response that recourse had to be made in another direction. Strange that his plans should have met with such a cold reception at the hands of the priests! Of all classes, the Levites should have been the first to second such a beneficent move. The enthusiasm of the young king could not thaw out the coldness or dissipate the indifference of these perfunctory servants. The King's business demanded haste; but then, as sometimes now, the King's business went unattended to. Too many private engagements; too much love of self and the things of the world crowded upon these laggards to allow of any time for repairing the temple. "Howbeit the Levites hastened it not." O, ye slow-moving Levites! Though so dilatory, ye have kept pace with the church throughout all ages, and to-day ye are not wholly destroyed out of the land. Monarchs may come upon the stage of human history, and be shut off in eternal oblivion by the curtain of forgetfulness; kingdoms may rise in all the grandeur and magnificence of conquering powers, and, enjoying the climax of national prosperity for a season, sink in humiliation under the heavy hand of a heathen master; but, rising above the dust and debris of the forgotten past; indeed, outlasting the corroding teeth of time, there stands to-day the slow-moving Levite; just as reluctant to perform duty; just as impervious to threat or entreaty; just as full of the do-nothing spirit as when the record was made—"The Levites hastened it not." Truly many a latter-day church official is in full possession of the mantle of these interera! To be noticed, however, is the fact that this spirit has not fallen upon them; they have picked it up and wrapped it about their hearts. God's gifts come from above; when we seek to bless ourselves, we have to reach down and take something of the earth, earthy.

II.—HIS SUCCESSIVE ATTEMPTS.

The dilapidated condition of the house of the Lord failed to move the priests to action, and Joash set in motion a plan of his own. He caused a chest to be made and placed without the gate. Here it was in full sight and easy reach of all the worshippers at the Temple. The effect was immediate. The people were brought face to face with their duty; they had full proof of the need of offerings, and they were not long in making them. To tell a man his duty is well; to interest him in performing it is better. The Israelites knew what was now expected of them; they saw that the king himself was intimately connected with the design, and hence they felt no fear that their money would be squandered as had been its fate too often before. "And all the people rejoiced." There are some who would not believe this wonderful statement were it not in the Bible, because they will not get their consent to try a like experiment; there are others who would give the story full credence had it no place in the sacred narrative, because they have felt that it is more blessed to give than to receive. How the love of the Lord must have poured out upon the hearts and lives of those people as they came up from their several homes and cast their offering into his treasury! No doubt, the poor widow whom our Savior's commendation immortalized will have many a companion in the resurrection of the just. "God loveth a cheerful giver." The emphasis is on the adjective, "cheerful," not on the noun, "giver." The offering that is made from a rejoicing heart is the gift that is going to bring joy to the heart; in one sense, a man never receives more than he gives. No wonder it is said they gathered money in abundance! Let a man realize that he is giving to the Lord, and, if he is the Lord's, he will give his all.

III.—HIS FINAL ACCOMPLISHMENT.

The money collected, the work was speedily perfected and the house of God set in state. But this was not all. Had the account stopped here we should have felt a shock. The natural conclusion is given in the words, "They offered burnt offerings in the house of the Lord continually." Now they could set about to worship Jehovah; they had shown their love and faith by their works. No wonder the glory of God dwelt among them; that his presence was felt in the very temple while they were worshipping! The idea of Solomon was the correct one; he made for God's house the most magnificent building the world ever held; the outlay was the best of talent and the most costly gifts. Rightly, too: God dwells amid the richness and beauty of heaven's glory; so let not the inhabitants of earth invite him to anything short of the very best that can be afforded. As a practical lesson, let us repair the temples of the Lord, and, above all, put in order our hearts which are the temples of the Holy Ghost; then the blessing of the Lord will descend, and our souls will leap for joy to do his service.

The Curse of Gambling.

BY REV. W. F. JUNKIN.

The sturdy blows which The Christian at Work is dealing to the gambling evil are well directed. May God make them effective! They are greatly needed. The evil is growing. Much of its destructive work falls under the public notice in the court and criminal records in the columns of the daily press. But the vast mass of its woes—in shattered lives, ruined homes, suicides, and murders, its forgeries and breaches of trust—are never known as its offspring. It is a wasting ulcer on the public weal. It demands not rebuke, but extermination. Why does society fail to protect itself against the gambling evil? Laws exist, which, if executed, would go far towards its overthrow. Why are they not executed? There must be a reason for this, deeper and stronger than the greed of the gamblers. A potent answer to this question is that public opinion does not sustain the laws. This is doubtless true. But why? The ready reply is, public morals are low and degraded. True. But in the case before us the failure to execute law arises not so much from the efforts of the immoral as from the lethargy of the more upright classes in the community. If the moral and Christian elements of society had strong convictions, clear and well defined, on this matter, public opinion would take on a different mold. The foundation-trouble is that the people, the moral people, the Christian people, don't clearly and strongly believe that it is a sin to gamble in any form. The common judgment is that gambling is a crime. There are laws against it. It ought not, therefore, to be allowed. Somehow it does harm, and should, therefore, be restrained. But this criminal character attaches to it only in the grosser forms in which the statute condemns it. There are boats of good people who would not for a moment think of breaking the law; who yet do not hesitate to lay a wager in regard to trifles, to take a venture in a raffle, or a private lottery, or engage in "progressive" games for a valuable consideration. And in doing these things they feel no sting of conscience.

Still another view looks upon gambling as a vice. It is vicious, mischievous, dangerous to character, damaging to personal interests. It is bad, like as idleness and gluttony and the waste of the spendthrift are bad. The true view is that gambling is sin. Sin, like murder is sin. Sin, like adultery is sin. Not a is sin. Sin, like adultery is sin. Not a is sin. Sin, like adultery is sin. Not a crime against government alone or crime against government alone or chiefly; not a vice, dangerous to social morals—these indeed, but infinitely beyond those—a sin against God. A direct, clear, deliberate breach of God's law—"Thou shalt not steal." The small hot and the heavy stake are alike robbery. The taker of the one, the gainer of the other, are thieves before God. It isn't a question of pool-room or race-track, of church fair or the political arena. These do not alter the real character of the transaction. Gambling in every form is theft. Now thousands of good Christian people everywhere do not believe this. They positively refuse to believe it. It would interfere with many things they are in the habit of doing to believe it. One asked the writer not long since: "Where's the sin? A and B make a bet. Each is perfectly willing to lose, if the chance goes against him. Neither regards the other in the light of a thief." Of course, he don't, for in so doing he would condemn himself. But what is each doing? The case is perfectly clear: each is trying to get what belongs to the other for nothing. What's that? Isn't that theft? The animus is the same as when money is taken at the pistol's point. The amount isn't the essential thing—it is the intent.

Let the Christian conscience be thoroughly instructed on this vital point. Fasten in the Christian mind this scriptural doctrine of gambling. Let it become a strong, positive conviction, and public opinion will respond to its influence. Here is work, much-needed work, for the pulpit, the Sunday-school, and the home. This work, well done, will not only lay the axe at the seat of the tree; it will sever the tap-root of this fast-growing evil.—Christian at Work.

Louisiana Notes.

The Catholics of Monroe are preparing to build a handsome new church.

Natchitoches has organized an Oil Mill Company, and contracted for a steam fire engine costing $3,200, to be delivered in sixty days.

Up to April 30 Minden shipped 13,141 bales of cotton, and had about 1,000 bales in compress soon to follow; an increase of nearly 3,000 over last season.

The financial affairs of Webster parish are in good condition, having no bonded or other debts except the ordinary running expenses, with $4,275 in the treasury.

It has been decided that the central sugar factory, to be built in Rapides parish, will be located at Alexandria, which will add much to the future prosperity of that town.

The contractors on Henderson-Ashley levee are making preparations to resume work, which was stopped by high water. When this levee is completed it will close all gaps in the Fifth Levee District.

At Harrisonburg on Friday last, Judge E. J. Ellis, of the Seventh Judicial District, rendered a decision in the Catahoula division case adverse to a division of the parish. This decision is not final, as it will be taken to the Supreme Court.

A dispatch from Baton Rouge says: Mr. E. W. Deming, representing Northern capitalists, will visit Baton Rouge the first of June and attend the monthly meeting of the Farmers' Club, for the purpose of ascertaining what encouragement will be given here to the organization of a central sugar refinery. He comes prepared to talk business with the people of Baton Rouge.

Mississippi Items.

The North Mississippi Presbytery held a special session at Grenada last week.

Greenville has advertised for bids to build a new court-house, and the contract will be let June 15.

A fire in Meridian recently destroyed 318 bales of cotton, 115 of which were not insured.

The Presbyterians of Jackson have advertised for sealed proposals to build a $15,000 church; proposals to be opened June 11.

The wool industry of Hancock county grows in importance. Last week 6,700 pounds of wool were sold, the first of the season.

The Quarterly Conference of the M. E. Church convened at this place last Saturday. We were glad to meet among the ministers present the friend of our boyhood, Presiding Elder E. H. Mouzon, and glad to see that time has dealt gently with him. The Rev. Dr. J. W. Harmon, we are glad to say, is looking remarkably well, considering his recent illness. But the Doctor is an old-timer, and was born in the days when men were built of oak and for hard service, and he has never forgotten it, and no small ailment will keep him from always being on hand.—Democrat-Star.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

THE LAST DAYS!

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 25 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.

This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

Briefs.

The program of the eighth annual Convention of the Louisiana Educational Association has been received. The convention will meet at the Louisiana Chautauqua, Ruston, La., June 24 26. The exercises will be participated in by prominent men and women from various parts of the State. The morning and afternoon sessions will be held at the Chautauqua grounds, and the evening sessions at the Ruston College. The railroads are expected to give reduced rates.

The expulsion of the Jews from Russia has precipitated a real "invasion of England" by the refugees. It is said that the numbers are so great that many people are becoming alarmed at the prospects. Many are calling for laws to be enacted excluding destitute aliens. One of the papers warns the authorities that if something is not done to check the invasion, an anti-Hebrew movement will grow up which will be of gigantic proportions, and will bode only evil to the poor Jews. Alas, for the Jew!

The Sunday-school teacher ought to be a most thoroughly furnished person. We have for this purpose any quantity of helps in the way of magazines and weekly papers and commentaries. These are all good and useful. There are in addition to these, two little books, very cheap, which we think will be of special value to those who will use them properly. They are "Binney's Compend," and "Bible Remembrancer." A thorough acquaintance with the "Compend," and having the "Remembrancer" always at hand, will be good furnishing for teaching the lessons of Holy Scripture in the Sunday-school.

Another blow at the sacredness of the Sabbath Day has been struck. The trustees of the Metropolitan Museum, of New York City, have decided by a 12 to 4 vote to open the doors on Sunday, from one P. M. to half an hour before sunset. There were two petitions—one for and the other against Sunday opening—signed by a great number of people; but those in favor of the opening carried the day. We predict that it will be the same in regard to the Columbian Exposition. Some of the people in this country are getting to have very little regard for God and his law, and take advantage of every circumstance to show their contempt for the same, and some of the so-called Christian people are always helping them.

The following we clip from the Southern Churchman:

And now comes the question, (often asked by every faithful clergyman), "How can I best preach the gospel of the Son of God?" We live in the nineteenth century and in the United States. We are preaching to men and children of different degrees of mental culture, who have all heard the message before; and to many it has no more interest than a thrice-told tale. How shall the preachers of this day best preach the gospel to such? If anyone has studied this matter, will he let us hear from him, that all may get profit and help?

And now we ask the same for our readers. "If anyone has studied this matter" thoroughly, this is an opportunity to "profit and help" many who are anxiously asking the question, "How can I best preach the gospel of the Son of God?"

If your religion don't make somebody else happy, how can it make you happy? Can you answer that?

Our Missionary Deficiency.

Many of our people are at a loss to account for the growth of our missionary debt, and, as a consequence, are not a little perturbed as to its effect upon future collections. The following paragraph from the report of the Committee on Estimates to the Board of Missions, at its annual meeting in Wilmington, explains the whole matter clearly. The report says:

"At our last annual meeting the indebtedness of the Board had been reduced to $26,193. The Committee on Estimates had recommended appropriations amounting to $262,657. The Board, encouraged by the interest manifested in its work by the General Conference and the church, advanced the appropriations to $325,000, an increase of $63,000 over the amount recommended by the committee. Had the collections the past year reached the expectations of the Board, this increase could have been provided for without embarrasment. Instead of an increase in collections there has been a decrease of over $23,000. By adding together this decrease of $23,000, the increase in the appropriations of $63,000 and the indebtedness of $26,000 reported last year, with the inevitable accumulation of interest, the Board will understand how the indebtedness of the Board, as it appears in the treasurer's report, should reach at the close of the fiscal year the sum of $118,000."

The fact is, the Board was too far ahead of the church in missionary matters, and, in its zeal for the enlargement of the work, made appropriations which the collections did not meet. The falling off in collections is attributable in a large measure to the financial pressure resting on the business world during the past year. Now, the obligation is on the church to pay off this indebtedness and, at the same time, to keep our missionary machinery running. It seems to some to be a heavy task, but we do not think so. A great church can do, and ought to do, great things. Our assessment for the coming year is $350,000, while our absolute appropriations do not go over $260,000. All we have to do to run along smoothly is to collect the assessment, and that ought not to seem a huge task. Let our preachers take pains to get a contribution for missions from every member, and we will warrant a large overplus. Let no man or woman or child escape this contribution.

Misunderstood.

After all the furore that has raged for and against Dr. Briggs, of the Presbyterian Church, on account of alleged heresy in biblical theology, it seems possible that he may have been misunderstood. At a recent meeting of the directors of the Union Theological Seminary, in which Dr. Briggs occupies a professor's chair, a committee, composed of Drs. Fraser, Parkhurst and White, was appointed to formulate a series of questions to be presented to Prof. Briggs for his consideration and reply. The questions were prepared and sent, and Prof. Briggs affixed his answers and returned them to the committee. At a special meeting of the directors, the committee presented the matter. From the questions asked and Dr. Briggs' answers, we judge it, at least, possible that Dr. Briggs has either been misunderstood or misinterpreted. Here are the questions and answers:

1. Do you consider the Bible, the church and the reason as co-ordinate sources of authority?
No.

2. Do you believe the Old and New Testaments as the only infallible rule of faith and practice?
Yes.

3. When you exercise reason, do you include conscience and religious feeling?
Yes.

4. Would you accept the following as a satisfactory definition of inspiration: That it is such a divine declaration as to seem an infallible record of God's revelation in respect to both fact and doctrine?
Yes.

5. Do you believe the Bible in respect to all matters of faith and practice as a revelation from God or a vehicle of divine truth, and that no errors disturb its infallibility in those matters which it records of historic events and institutions with which it is inseparably connected?
Yes.

6. Do you believe the miracles related in the Scriptures are due to an extraordinary exercise of divine energy, either directly or immediately through holy men?
Yes.

7. Do you hold to what is commonly known as the doctrine of future probation; do you believe in purgatory.
No.

8. Do you believe that the issues of this life are final; do you believe that men who die impenitent have no further opportunity of salvation?
Yes.

9. Is your doctrine of progressive sanctity such as will permit you to say that you believe that when a man dies in the faith he enters the middle state regenerated, justified, sinless?
Yes.

The list was signed by Prof. Briggs, and, after considering, the Board adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Board has listened with satisfaction to the categorical replies rendered by Dr. Briggs to the questions submitted to him, and that it trusts that the manner in which he has dealt with the points in dispute will operate to correct the misapprehension widely current and quiet the disturbed condition of mind in which as a communion we are so unhappily involved.

"A New Pentecost."

We all believe in revivals of religion. We all pray for them; we are all willing to do something in order to secure them. But a very common idea is to set apart the evenings of a week or a fortnight for special religious services, to make up a purse and secure the help of some popular evangelist. He comes. We hurry through the day's business, and rush from it to the sanctuary, expecting to be spiritualized in some mysterious way by the revival songs and the sermon. We expect, too, that under the eloquent appeals of the preacher sinners will be converted. The evangelist comes; he delivers his message, and is listened to by crowds. He goes away. A few join the church, for a few humble Christians have been praying and working during the meetings. But in a short time the special interest has passed away; the prayer meetings become as cold and formal as before, and the revival, if we may call it one, has proved a tidal wave.

Now, if the churches want such revivals, if that is their idea of the modern Pentecost, they can have them. The country is full of evangelists. Many of them are able preachers of the Word and wise in winning souls. A few hundred dollars will secure one of these experienced leaders for a two weeks' campaign. But if he is depended on to do all the work, if no special preparation is made for his coming, if Christians expect only to pay a little money and attend a few extra meetings, there will be no mighty outpouring of the Spirit, there will be no cry from thousands of anxious sinners, "What must I do?"

The modern Pentecost must begin, as that first Pentecost did, with a vacuum. Christians must wait before the Lord until their hearts are emptied, until the rubbish is removed, so that there is room for the Holy Spirit.

The practical error of these busy, bustling days is that we can have religion as a kind of episode; we can go on in pursuit of pleasure or of wealth as the great object in life, turning aside now and then, on the Sabbath, during the week of prayer, or a brief series of meetings, and attend to the business of the Lord and the soul with but little interruption of our worldly affairs. The exhortation, "Seek first the kingdom of God," is too Oriental for these days of electricity and steam. We must keep step with the progress of the age. We have no time to go into upper rooms and pray and wait for ten days. Why, while we were thus seeking preparation for the coming of the Spirit, we might miss some grand opportunity for making money. We do not confess all this, even to ourselves. Yet is it not time? And is it not the reason why there are so few Pentecost scenes in these days when the church is so strong in numbers? Let us be willing to make some sacrifice of time, even if it is money, and to exercise some self-denial in regard to interests that are worldly, in order that there may be a vacuum for the Lord to fill. When we do this, the Spirit will come, as on that fortieth day in Jerusalem; our churches will be shaken as by a mighty wind; tongues of fire will be given to us, and thousands will be converted in a day.—Interior.

There could be nothing better for the church than a genuine, widespread Pentecost. There could be nothing better than to go through the months of the year on the great wave of a revival whose influence shall permeate all classes. There could be no better way to wind up the year than in a Pentecost of mighty power, sweeping hundreds of thousands of souls into the kingdom of Christ. The only power that can bring about such a revival is the Holy Ghost operating through the church. The only power that can hinder such a revival is the church failing to co-operate with the Holy Ghost. The Lord said to the disciples: "Ye shall be endued with power, not many days hence." They prepared themselves and the "power" came. Let the church prepare herself now, and the same power will come upon her.

A Delightful Visit.

In company with Capt. C. M. Guess, of New Iberia, La., this scribe visited Hazlehurst, Miss., last week, and attended several days the tent meeting conducted by Rev. Geo. S. Inge, of Mississippi. Bro. Inge is a grand man and a fine preacher. I need only say: See him, hear him, and examine his work, and you will know more than I can tell you in a brief communication. I am not greatly taken with evangelists, but, I must confess, I am wonderfully impressed with "George Inge." I believe if we pastors were any account and knew how to preach and knew how to conduct a revival, we could exchange work a little and get along better in the long run than we do with the evangelist. But, poor preachers! We are so trifling that the people live in sin and die and go to hell right under our dry sermons. The only way, it seems, to save them is to call in an evangelist and let him do what we should have done. But I would like to know what these pastors are going to do after the evangelist has gone. Why, already some one attending the Hazlehurst meeting has said that he believed in silencing all the "popgun" preachers and letting "Sam Jones," "George Inge," and others of their rank, do all the preaching. Well, if we had enough such men to go round, it might do, but we haven't. And, then, we have so many "popgun" hearers that must be accommodated. As Rev. Bro. Shey used to say, "We must use the plow that suits the soil."

Yes, I endorse Bro. Inge, for I see the Lord endorses him. And, again, I don't like slang, and I see that Mr. Inge never indulges in slang anywhere, much less in the pulpit. But here comes the soil and the plow question again. There are so many slangy hearers that it seems that some one like Mr. Jones must come along to accommodate them. (No reflection on Bro. Jones, but his congregations.)

Bro. Inge has secured the service of Prof. D. J. Evans, of Texas, to lead in songs. He and Mrs. Evans are very fine singers. Hazlehurst furnished an excellent choir also, and the music and singing were fine. They used Prof. Excell's collection of songs. When we left Hazlehurst the work was grand and the Lord was powerfully saving the people. I had the pleasure of meeting quite a number of our Mississippi pastors and not a few excellent laymen. I learned that our pastor in Hazlehurst, Bro. I. W. Cooper, has his work well in hand, and is quite popular with his congregation.

May a great many souls be gathered into the Master's vineyard during that sweeping revival! We pray God's blessing upon Bro. Sam L. Guess and family and others who so nicely entertained us.

Clarksdale and the Delta.

After a stop-over at home of two days from my long absence in North Carolina, I went on to Clarksdale, Miss., to attend the Greenville District Conference. Reaching there at noon on Saturday, I did not hear all the reports from the pastors, but elicited facts sufficient to be assured of the steady progress of our work in that wonderful valley. There was a good attendance, the preaching was edifying, the hospitality of the community most generous, and the spirit of the occasion very delightful. Presiding Elder Standefer and his co-laborers rightly appreciate the importance of that field, and are cultivating it with diligent hands. In the early days when the white population was small and creature comforts were few, the brave itinerants went by dug-outs or waded through the deep mud to break to the people the Bread of Life. That self-sacrificing toil is generously appreciated, and now the faithful Methodist preacher has the right of way through all that fruitful Delta. The work is developing rapidly, making an increase of laborers absolutely necessary. Clarksdale is a prosperous, progressive town in the rich county of Coahoma, and on the banks of the Sunflower river. Our little church—the only house of worship in the place—is on the apex of a high Indian mound overlooking the deep channel of the beautiful stream. Before the town was built it was called Mount Moriah, one of several appointments that embraced many square leagues of wonderful wilderness. But now a substantial town has sprung up, and our little band has become strong. They have determined to move into a more commodious and tasteful tabernacle. On Sunday evening I had the gratification to see them subscribe, in a few minutes, six thousand dollars toward a proposed ten-thousand-dollar church. The additional amount will be easily raised and the building completed without unnecessary delay. I have rarely seen such large-hearted liberality. When the capstone is brought forth with rejoicing I hope to be there. Upon Pastor Randolph and his generous flock may blessings abundant ever abide!

A Correction.

With blame for no one, and solely in the interest of justice to our faithful superintendent, officers and teachers, I wish to state that the figures read, on last Sabbath, at the Forty-fourth Anniversary of the New Orleans Sunday-school Union were not correct as far as they referred to the Felicity Street Sabbath-school. The average attendance of scholars should have been 81 instead of 72, and the percentage of attendance 60 instead of 44. Personal and Otherwise.

The gifts to Yale College last year amounted to over $1,150,000.

We are indebted to Dr. Carradino, of St. Louis, for a copy of his sermon on "Secret Societies."

Major Millsaps has given an additional $15,000 to his already liberal gift to Millsaps College.

Cardinals Manning and Gibbons have been talking to each other by means of the phonograph.

If Emperor William does not become a despot, it will not be his fault. "I alone am master in Germany," tells the tale.

The Board of Trustees of Millsaps College has located that institution on the Hemingway property, near Jackson, Miss.

It is much better to think of the favors and blessings we receive than to think of the slights and wrongs we have suffered.

A revival in Cleveland, Ohio, under the leadership of Rev. B. F. Mills, evangelist, resulted in 7,650 conversions in six weeks!

Hiwassee College has conferred the degree of Doctor Divinitatis on Rev. I. W. Cooper of Hazlehurst, Miss. We tip our derby to Dr. Cooper.

We had the pleasure of meeting our friend, Hon. O. B. Steele, Auditor of this State, on the streets last week. He is looking well and is hopeful of State affairs.

Dr. W. R. Sims, of the University of Mississippi, will deliver the annual address to the graduating class of the East Mississippi Female College, June 18.

In Great Britain and Ireland there are 330,000 Baptists, with 3,781 houses of worship and 1,874 preachers. So says Col. J. T. Griffin, the president of the Baptist Union.

A presiding elder in North Mississippi writes: "I have brought the ADVOCATE before every Quarterly Conference, and will go on that way." That is the Scripture way: "line upon line."

We are under obligations to Thomas F. Boyd, president of the State Normal College at Natchitoches, La., for an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of that institution, May 24.

Rev. J. V. Penn passed through our city last week, en route for San Antonio, Texas, in search of health for his invalid wife. We trust that climate may produce the desired effect.

Bro. Woodward, of the Brookhaven district, has moved into his new parsonage at Brookhaven. One more itinerant comfortably housed. We congratulate the happy people and the happier preacher's family.

Dr. George Osborn, one of the notable men of English Wesleyanism, is dead at the age of eighty-three. For many years he was secretary of foreign missions, and was twice president of the Wesleyan Conference.

A good friend, who desires his name withheld, has sent us $8 for our "Helping Fund." That brother appreciates the value of a good religious paper and wants to give it to some who are unable to pay for it. We give him thanks in their name.

If we failed to send the paper to certain subscribers for two or three weeks in succession, those subscribers would raise a fuss. When we send them a little bill for overdue subscription, they also raise a fuss. There are some people we "can't please nohow."

We are obliged to President Sligh for an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of Ruston College, La., which occur June 7-10, prox. The sermon is to be by Rev. B. F. White, of Monroe, and the annual address by Hon. W. H. Jack, of Natchitoches. There are five young ladies to be graduated.

The union communion service of all our congregations, last Sunday afternoon, in Carondelet Street Church, was a quiet and comforting time. The service was conducted by Bishop Keener and the presiding elder. The attendance was good, and it was a season of refreshing and encouragement to all the partakers.

The New York Advocate says:

The agitations which now disturb nearly all Protestant denominations grow out of one root, namely, a revolt from the old doctrine that the Bible and not human reason is the final standard of appeal in matters of faith and practice. On the settlement of these questions the most serious consequences hinge. It is to be determined, not merely whether certain preachers are heretics, and whether certain changes shall be made, but whether Protestantism has any foundation. The Catholic finds rest in the doctrine of papal infallibility. The foundation on which Protestants have always rested is an infallible Book. Overthrow this doctrine, and our preaching will be shorn of its strength, will produce more skepticism than faith, will save nobody, and Protestantism fails.

We have an invitation to attend the public debate of the Battle Ground Academy, Franklin, Tenn., which comes off to-morrow. The question is, "Does the condition of the country demand the free and unlimited coinage of silver?" We hope the young gentlemen will have as good a debate as they have a subject. We are obliged to them for the invitation, but can not be present.

The commencement at Centenary begins with a sermon next Sunday, May 31, in the college chapel by Rev. C. F. Evans, D. D., presiding elder of the New Orleans district. Monday night is the Preparatory Exhibition. Tuesday is Alumni Day—address by Dr. C. G. Andrews of Meridian, Miss. Wednesday is Commencement Day. The Board of Trustees holds its meetings Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Let everybody come.

Ministers have been heard to complain of their appointments and poor support as if they had been badly treated, when often the reason was very apparent to their brethren—they had ceased to interest the people to whom they were sent. Very few men would over grow old enough to be put on the ineffective list if they were industrious students of God's Holy Word.—Alabama Advocate.

A little orphan girl worked hard and made one dollar to get the Advocate, her church paper, and sent for it last week. This ought to put to shame the great grown men and women who say they are not able to take the paper. They ought to be ashamed of such poor pretexts.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

Let the preacher read the above to his members who refuse to subscribe for a religious paper.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. W. L. Linfield reports from Lake City, Miss.: "We have built and furnished our parsonage this year, without any debt hanging over it, at a cost of about six hundred dollars, and expect to have a new church at a new place by the first of September. Our membership is about sixty-three on the entire circuit."

—Rev. J. F. Wynn, Pineville, La., writes: "I am thankful to report my assessment ($50) for foreign missions raised and sent to Missionary Treasurer at Nashville. Sickness has hindered my work; but I am glad to say we are now in good health and expecting a successful year. Our parsonage was nearly bare, and as it had been furnished twice, it required special effort to furnish it again. Through the perseverance of Sister Pauline Smith, assisted by a good Baptist sister, our house is once more very well supplied."

—Rev. W. W. Williams writes from Louisville circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We are enjoying a degree of spiritual prosperity. Every department of church work has advanced. Congregations are larger; the Sunday-schools have increased in numbers and have taken on new life. Valuable aids have been brought to the front. Children's Day was observed with great interest by old and young. Surely good was accomplished, and the day will not soon be forgotten. The Wednesday night prayer meeting is an occasion of interest and spiritual enjoyment. It has grown in a few months from fifteen or twenty to often more than one hundred in attendance. The services are largely participated in by the young people. Our third Quarterly Conference was an old-time quarterly meeting, when the Holy Ghost came down in power, and we all felt happy. We are using the means of grace authorized in God's Word, and trusting in his promises. We are expecting better times yet to come. We want to go on to perfection."

—Rev. H. P. Lewis writes: "Tuesday was 'Children's Day' at New Hope. The weather was just right. Dr. Abbey, of Yazoo City, was with us. He preached at eleven o'clock—text: 'Who is on the Lord's side?' The sermon was interesting and instructive; listened to with interest by a large congregation. The sermon was plain, practicable, pointed, earnest. The sermon over, dinner was spread on a long table and everybody invited to stay and eat. At two o'clock we began our children's service, and followed 'Children's Day programme' in the main. The service was very interesting from beginning to end. At the proper time Dr. Abbey, instead of the pastor, made some brief remarks. He asked the question, 'What is the matter with the children?' and then answered it briefly. He took the ground that children, instead of being governed by the parent, learn to govern their parents at a remarkably early age—all of which, in many instances, is too true. The music department was managed well. Our children and young people sing well. It was good to be there, and I trust much good was done. Bro. Abbey preached a good sermon here in Benton last night. The Doctor is in his eighty-seventh year; his hair and beard as white as snow—yet he gets about as glibly as most men do at sixty. God bless the grand old man."

—Rev. J. A. Randolph writes: "The people of Clarksdale are taking steps toward building a fifteen-thousand-dollar church, to be known as Randolph M. E. Church, South, of Clarksdale. Over ten thousand of the amount is in sight. This is the result of District Conference and two sermons by Bishop Galloway. Our people are enthusiastic and determined on the handsomest church in the State. Two Methodists gave $2,500 each; another, $1,000; another, $500."

—Rev. J. C. Ellis writes us from Raymond, Miss.: "Children's Day at Spring Ridge, we are happy to say, was a success in every respect. The welcome address, essays and recitations were splendid; also the children sang well. We were happy to have Bro. W. D. Dominick with us, our colporteur who is located at Jackson, Miss., and who served this people about fourteen years ago. He still has many warm friends here. It is said by some, the largest congregation known here in ten years. Children's collection, $7.15. Sister Ellis thinks this people know how to treat a preacher's better half. Pray for us."

—Rev. S. J. Davies writes us from Campo Bello, La.: "We have just concluded the first protracted meeting on this charge for this year, with gratifying results. Valuable and efficient aid was rendered by Rev. J. M. Henry, of Shreveport. Our small membership was doubled at Lindsey's Chapel, with something over. The Holy Spirit was present, and his power manifested. Our people were brought nearer to Christ, and many realized the joy of his presence. The meeting continues this week at Campo Bello. Our worthy presiding elder has won the hearts of all, and, by his rightly 'dividing the Word,' shown them the way of salvation. His earnest, forcible preaching inaugurated our meeting."

NOTICES.

Rev. A. Monk, D. D., of Memphis, will preach the commencement sermon for the M. C. F. Institute, Jackson, Tenn., June 7, 1891. Judge F. F. Wilson, of Galatin, will deliver the literary address, June 9, 1891, and Rev. A. B. Jones, D. D., will address the graduating class, June 10, 1891.

A. W. JONES.

A few weeks since I authorized the calling of a meeting of the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference at Jackson, Miss., June 4. Certain action on the part of the General Board at its recent session renders our contemplated meeting unnecessary. I, therefore, hereby revoke the aforesaid call for a meeting of our Conference Board. W. C. BLACK,

Pres. Board of Missions, Miss. Conf.

There was no meeting held on May 13, pursuant to call issued in ADVOCATE, of May 7, and no Conference organization of Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society has been effected. The work will continue this year under the control of the officers appointed by the Conference Board of Church Extension and those who have been or shall be appointed to fill vacancies caused by the resignation of Conference appointees.

OUR MOTHER'S APRON STRINGS.

BY W. H. M'ELROY.

What's longer than Art when Art's at her longest?
What's stronger than oak when oak's at its strongest?
What in all the wide world, whate'er may betide,
Is longer and stronger than all else beside?

Pray read me the riddle, or make your surmise,
But low, as I speak how you talk with your eyes;
Nought's longer or stronger, you tell one another,
Than the strings of the apron that's worn by our mother!

They are longer than Art, for knowledge shall fail,
But Love shall abide, though the planets grow pale;
And Love, who as school-boys together here brings,
Is the twister that twisted these wonderful strings!

There's a great flowing girdle which Puck in his mirth
Lets loose when he'll lasso the swift-bounding Earth,
But the strings of this apron, which round us entwine,
Have a length quite eclipsing this much vaunted line.

For O! If, perchance, in a further most sphere
Some high-hearted schoolmate looks down on us here,
His smiles and his tears, tender blending, but teach
That the wonderful strings have a measureless reach!

They are strong as they're long; lo! the oak will decay,
Or the woodman you pray to to spare it says—nay:
Other strings will unravel, will break or will fray,
Will snap or at best will in time wear away.

The anchor chain rusts, the sea cable parts,
E'en the band has been burst that encircles twin hearts,
But the strings of this apron the years have defied,
They hold us more firmly each day they are tied! —Christian Intelligencer.

MR. EDITOR: I do not see any letters from the young folks in this part of the country, so I thought I would write to you. I live about two miles from the little village of Rocky Mount. Bro. Saunders is our pastor this year, and also last year. We all think he is a good pastor. I go to Sunday-school; and my brother is our superintendent, and he takes the ADVOCATE. His name is J. J. McKinney. I go to school, and we boys play town-ball, baseball, and marbles. We have a debating society. We have several officers: President, secretary, treasurer, marshal and chairman committee, and we have very good order. I have a few pets, such as a horse, cat and four pretty pigs. I have seven brothers and four sisters—in all, eleven. I love to read letters from the young folks. I hope, young friends, we will have a better season for fruit this year than we had last year. Last year the trees barely lived. I am fifteen years old. I will answer Carter Smith's question: "Four leprous men" is found in II. Kings viii, 10. Now, I will ask a question: How often did Samuel's mother visit him, and what did she bring him when she came?

Your new friend,
TURNER A. MCKINNEY.

Rocky Mount, La.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never seen any letters from this part of the country, I thought I would write one. I hope I can find room in your valuable paper for it. I read all the little cousins' letters, and I think the little cousins ought to try and do their best in letter-writing to the "dear old ADVOCATE." Come out, boys and girls, and do your best, for the dear editor is so kind as to give us the room in his paper. Our school closed last Friday, April 17. We certainly had a nice teacher. We all loved her so much that we couldn't hear to have her leave us; but we want her to come back next year. She gave a beautiful medal for good conduct, and I got it. We have a splendid preacher. His name is Mr. Cowan. We are all very much pleased with him. Hoping my letter will not reach the waste-basket, I will close. Hope the cousins will write long letters, for the "dear ADVOCATE" likes those sort, although my letter is not long; but I hope it will appear in print next week. As ever, I remain,

Your unknown friend,
LEO. WILKINSON.

Tillman, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: I have never written to the ADVOCATE before, but thought some of the little cousins would like to read a letter from our town. I am not a member of the church, but I go to Sunday-school every Sunday that I can get off. Mrs. Lee Kidd is my teacher and I like her very much. We have a very good class. I have but one pet, and that is my little brother. He is the sweetest of all pets. My mother takes the ADVOCATE, and I like to read the cousins' letters. Dear cousins, all of you that have a father or mother, I beg you to be kind, true and obedient to them, for you know not the help of a father or mother until they are gone forever from your sight. My father was taken from his happy home Jan. 1, 1891. He made home happy, and we were glad to see him coming at any time. It was hard for us to give him up, but the Lord knows best. I sympathize with orphans, for all orphans have a hard time in this world. I will close by asking a question: How old was Christ when he began teaching the people?

GERTRUDE GRAMLING.

Ruston, La.

MR. EDITOR: Here comes another little boy asking admittance in the little folks' corner. I am a little country boy, and write had sometimes. I want to tell you about my little pets. I have two little dogs, a sweet little calf. I have a dear good papa, and a sweet little brother. Mr. Editor, please publish this, as it is my first. I will close. Mr. Editor, what church do you belong to.

GEORGE R. MCBETH.

A BOY'S RELIGION.—If a boy is a lover of the Lord Jesus Christ, though he can't lead a prayer meeting, or be a church officer, or preacher, he can be a godly boy, in a boy's way and a boy's place. He ought not to be too solemn or too quiet for a boy. He need not cease to be a boy because he is a Christian. He ought to run, jump, play, climb and yell like a real boy. But in it all he ought to be free from vulgarity and profanity. He ought to eschew tobacco in every form and have a horror of intoxicating drinks. He ought to be peaceable, gentle, merciful, generous. He ought to take the part of small boys against large ones. He ought to discourage fighting. He ought to refuse to be a party to mischief, to persecution, to deceit. And, above all things, he ought now and then to show his colors. He need not always be interrupting a game to say that he is a Christian, but he ought not to be ashamed to say that he refuses to do something because it is wrong and wicked, or because he fears God, or is a Christian. He ought to take no part in the ridicule of sacred things, but meet the ridicule of others with a bold statement that for the things of God he feels the deepest reverence.—Exchange.

"Luxury Money."

One of the most difficult problems which meets the earnest Christian woman in her efforts to know the will of God and to do it, is the question, "How much of my income shall I give to the Lord's work?"

It is not enough to say that all we have belongs to God, that we may use for our personal needs as much as our common sense tells us is right, and give what remains to promote the cause of Christ upon the earth, for this is just where the doubt comes in. Shall I glorify God more by dressing in silk or in serge? I must not be peculiar in dress or I shall be a rock of offense to some Christians, and I must not follow the extreme of fashion, or I shall be a stone of stumbling to others. Neither will the system of tithes meet every case. A tenth of some poor needle-woman's daily pittance, which must provide food and raiment for a sick husband and ailing children, may be infinitely more than nine-tenths of the income of the rich woman who employs her. It seems to be hopeless to formulate any rule which shall meet every difficulty, and, doubtless, God uses this very exercise of conscience as one of the training processes by which he brings us nearer and nearer to the stature of men and women in Christ Jesus. But while there can be no royal rule to guide each one who inquires the will of the Lord concerning the right use of the money entrusted to his followers, and while each must seek through earnest prayer the special guidance of the Holy Spirit—who may call upon one to give up all and follow the Master, and upon another to use the good things of this life as not abusing them,—yet there is one simple suggestion which might, if carried out, bring in many dollars into the treasury of the Lord, without touching the great question of personal need and personal responsibility.

Every one, almost without exception, spends money for luxuries, which it may be perfectly right to indulge in, and yet it does seem a little inconsistent to treat yourself to a box of candy and refuse an extra dollar for the Home Missionary box, or to buy an article of jewelry, and the next day plead poverty when asked to support a child in an orphanage. We attend lectures, buy new books, take a glass of soda water, or a drive in the park, we go on some little excursion, or visit a collection of paintings, and if we were to keep an account of all these seeming trifles, we should be surprised at the close of the year to find how large was the aggregate price of these "little things." If each time that a Christian woman spent ten cents, or fifty cents, or a dollar, or five dollars, or a hundred dollars, on something which she could do without and still not suffer from the privation—in short, if whenever she indulged in a luxury, she would put an equal amount in a box labelled "Luxury Money," and at the close of the year open that box and devote the contents to some work for Christ, either at home or abroad, I think the amount so expended would be surprising. Where the means are so limited that the number of luxuries is but small, that number might have to be reduced, but the enjoyment of the few remaining would be doubled, and where money was spent freely for earthly enjoyments, there might be no self-denial, but there would certainly be some pleasure in the thought that the Lord's poor would be the gainers even through our extra expenditure. Let us try this method for one year; there is no merit in it, perhaps no self-denial, or very little, but we shall give a little more than we should otherwise, and "he that giveth to the poor shall not lack."—Evangelist.

Oh, this humming in the head!
Hawking, blowing, snuffing, gasping,
Watering eyes and throat a-rasping
Health impaired and comfort fled,
Till I would that I were dead!

What folly to suffer so with catarrhal troubles, when the worst cases of chronic catarrh in the head are relieved and cured by the mild, cleansing and healing properties of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It purifies the foul breath, by removing the cause of offense, heals the sore and inflamed passages, and perfects a lasting cure.

Without the newspaper great advertisers can not exist. Without the advertisers, great and small (but mainly the small advertisers), the newspaper of to-day would be impossible.—James H. Beals, Jr.

Scientific.

Function of Cypress Knees.

The cypress tree (Taxodium distichum) of the Southern swamps is marked by a peculiar growth of protuberances rising above the soil in the region of the roots, and called knees. The purpose of the knees has not been satisfactorily determined. They have been regarded by botanists as simply affording a means for securing the aeration of the sap when the roots are too deeply covered with water to permit them to serve that purpose. Mr. Robert H. Lamborn, after examining the trees in the swamps, has come to a different conclusion. He believes that the knees secure a firm hold to the tree in the exceedingly loose soil in which it grows. The formation of knees is accompanied by roots projecting more or less perpendicularly into the earth. The knee, when fully developed, is generally hollow, comparatively soft, gnarled, and hard to rupture, so that it has the quality of a spring that becomes more rigid as it is extended or compressed out of its normal shape. "When, in a hurricane, the great tree rocks back and forth on its base, and with its immense leverage pulls upon this odd-shape wooden anchor, instead of straightening out in the soft material, as an ordinary root might, thus allowing the tree to lean over and add its weight to the destructive force of the storm, it grips the sand as the bower-anchor would do, and resists every motion. The elasticity at the point of junction allows one after another of the perpendicular flukes attached to the same shank to come into effective action, so that before being drawn from the sand or ruptured the combined flukes present an enormous resistance." The knees, with their sharp tips, may also serve the purpose of catching the drift of plant-food as it floats on the current of floods, and effecting its deposition. Mr. Lamhorn adds, in his articles in Garden and Forest and the American Naturalist, an observation regarding the roots of other trees that trench upon soils affected by the cypress, and often take advantage of the anchors it sets in treacherous bottoms. They project their cable-like, flexible roots in every direction horizontally, interlacing continually until a fabric is woven on the surface of the soft earth like the tangled web of a gigantic basket. Out of this close wicker-work, firmly attached to it, and dependent for their support upon its integrity, rise the tree trunks. Thus slowly, and by a community of growth and action, a structure is formed that supplies for each tree a means of resisting the storms. Such communities of trees, provided with ordinary roots, advance against and overcome enemies where singly they would perish in the conflict.—Popular Science.

MASSAGE IN ANCIENT TIME.—Massage has apparently been practiced from the very earliest times. A Chinese manuscript of three thousand years before the Christian era contains an account of operations very similar to those which go under that name at the present time—friction, kneading, manipulating, and rolling. A form of massage was the common accompaniment of the bath with the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans, and was used as a luxury, a means of hastening tedious convalescence, and of making the limbs supple and enduring. Hippocrates commended it; Esculapius believed in it; Cicero affirmed that he owed as much of his health to his anointer as he did to his physician; Julius Cæsar had himself pinched all over every day for neuralgia; and Pliny enjoyed great benefit from it. Celsus advised rubbing to be applied to the whole body; and the works of Plato abound in references to the use of friction. Peter Henrik Ling is said to have based the Swedish movement-cure on the Chinese Kong-Fan manuscript. Lepage relates that the Chinese massage was a particular practice borrowed from the Indians, and that it was by such means that the Brahmans effected their miraculous cures. The method is common among the Polynesians, and something like it was found among the Australians.—Popular Science.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Children always Enjoy It.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

of pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda is almost as palatable as milk. Children enjoy it rather than otherwise. A MARVELLOUS FLESH PRODUCER it is indeed, and the little lads and lassies who take cold easily, may be fortified against a cough that might prove serious, by taking Scott's Emulsion after their meals during the winter season.

Beware of substitutions and imitations.

IN THE SPRING

Avoid Sickness by Purifying the Blood and Toning up the System.

DR. KING'S

Royal Germetuer

Does this more pleasantly, more safely and more surely than any remedy known to medical science.

These Five Things

in which it differs from other medicines account largely for its wondrous popularity:

1. It does not taste like medicine. It is as pleasant as lemonade, and, sweetened, makes a most refreshing drink. Persons who object to all other medicines take this with real pleasure, because it is good.
2. It never nauseates. The most delicate stomach finds in this a perfect remedy without a single objection.
3. It never wages off one disease for another. It does not set up one form of disease in order to relieve another, as is the case with so many deadly drugs.
4. It does not patch simply. It cures. It reaches, as nothing else does, to the hidden sources of disease in the blood, and removes the cause. It does this with an ease and powerfulness never been equaled.
5. It is harmless, and may be safely given to a babe one day old. It is free from Alcohol and Opium.

All persons living in a malarial district should keep this great family remedy on hand. It will break any fever in half the time required by quinine and anti-pyrine, and leave none of their unpleasant and hurtful effects.

For Malaria, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sick Headache, Kidney Trouble, and Blood and Skin diseases, there is nothing to be compared with it. For Ladies and Children it is far the best.

OBITUARIES.

ROBINSON—Col. FRANCIS HOLLIS ROBINSON died at his residence, in this city, April —, 1891, aged fifty-four years. His last illness was protracted and painful; but it was borne with resignation and fortitude, and was happily terminated by his entrance upon a religious experience. Indeed, the sickness, recalling him from the world and its engrossing pursuits, and shutting him up to the quiet and affection of the home circle, was, as in so many similar instances, no doubt, a good providence designed to prepare him for the great change. It was a pleasure to visit him, especially toward the close, and to observe his cheerful patience under stress of great bodily infirmity and suffering. The day upon which he lost consciousness he gave the undersigned a smile of recognition, which could only be described as heavenly, and suggestive, it is not too much to say, both of the inscrutable and the unutterable.

Col. Robinson was the son of a Methodist minister of distinction associated with the early history of the church in Northern Alabama and Tennessee, where, in the vicinity of the great pioneer Methodist communities of Huntsville and Jackson, he lived and labored many years. He was devoted to the memory of his father, and had many reminiscences of him and of the church in early times. In former years Col. Robinson was a brave and trusted officer of Forrest's cavalry, being captured at the head of his regiment in almost the last desperate engagement of the war, at Selma. He leaves a greatly bereaved family, composed of a wife and four children, two of whom have lived to the age of manhood. He was, during many years, in this city, a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, Legion of Honor, and other secret benevolent societies. We hope to meet him in a better world. J. M. BEARD.

TOLER—JOHN H. TOLER was born March 26, 1851, and died Feb. 12, 1891. About 1880 Bro. Toler was happily married to Miss Beulah Adams, who with several children still survive him.

Bro. Toler was one of those generous, free-hearted men who make friends everywhere. There were but few with whom he associated, especially with whom he had dealings of any kind, but who felt themselves under obligations to him. As a husband and father, he was kind and affectionate; as a neighbor, none were more accommodating. He was never too busy to help those who were dependent or in need of help. Early in life Bro. Toler made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Church. He possessed gifts that gave him influence as a member; gifted in prayer and in song. He gave to the extent of his ability to every good cause. In all our collections in church, his offerings were among the largest. But his life as a Christian was not perfect. He had his temptations and weakness in common with us all; but none felt their mistakes more keenly nor confessed them more earnestly than he, and we believe he ever sought God's pardoning love. During his illness he told his bereaved companion that he could not live, but that he had no fears of death; that he was ready for the better land. A. W. LANGLEY.

WELCH—Sister SUSAN WELCH was born Aug. 15, 1826. She was the daughter of Elder Norval Robertson, a well-known and much-loved Baptist preacher of this country. Sister Welch joined the Baptist Church at the age of thirteen years, and was received in the church of her choice in full fellowship, and was faithful in her duties to the church and to God until God called her to her great reward above, which took place Sunday, April 8, 1891, at eleven o'clock.

Sister Welch was recognized by all for her purity of mind and heart, and was always ready to do battle for the right. With humble, submissive resignation to the will of the Master, she was ready at all times to say, "Not mine, but thy will be done." With her friends and associates she was kind, considerate and affectionate. Without a fault, she was the idol of a large circle of kindred and friends, and was loved by all who knew her. She was ever ready to relieve suffering humanity; charity abounded in her heart in its fullness. The memory of such a life as hers should give us a renewed hope to press on until we gain that rich reward which is prepared for the people of God. May the God of heaven bless the sorrowing ones!

J. H. EVANS.

GOLDEN—Sister MARY A. GOLDEN (nee Cutts) was born Feb. 3, 1825, in Alabama. She grew to womanhood and married James Golden (date not known). She joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1851, and for thirty-seven years exemplified her faith in her Savior by a perfect walk in every relation of life.

She was truly a child of affliction of a character seldom visited upon us, in every way calculated to try our patience—all of which she calmly bore with that fortitude only known to the true Christian. She will now be missed in the congregation at Hickory Grove Church, Mashulaville charge, Columbus district, of which she was a member. She leaves four children and twenty-two grandchildren to mourn her departure; but they mourn not as those who have no hope. To these I would say: Live as she lived, and you will meet her beyond the river. May we all be prepared to go up higher when our Lord calls us! E. H. ROOK.

Arkansas Messenger please copy.

MCMANNAN—Bro. JEROME MCMANNAN was born in Ireland (date not known). He was raised up in the Roman Catholic Church. He came to the United States while a young man and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1873, under the pastorate of Bro. Leroy Massingale, living up to his church vows until Oct. 19, 1890, when after a lingering time of sickness he calmly fell asleep in the kind Savior whom he had loved and served, with the kind assurance that he was exchanging a cross for a crown.

He was a kind and affectionate husband and an obliging neighbor in every relation. He leaves a bereaved wife to mourn his death. I talked with him frequently while sick, and always found him patient and resigned, trusting in his Savior. May he rest in peace until the morning of the resurrection!

E. H. ROOK.

SMITH—PERSON PAYNE, twin son of Dr. J. Mell and Lizzie G. Smith, was born July 20, 1890, and died March 21, 1891. G. W. GERDEN.

COCHRAN—EDWIN NELSON COCHRAN fell asleep in Jesus, April 8, 1891. We followed his mortal remains to the cemetery at Bethel, and, with the impressive service of our church, left them in the keeping of the blessed Savior.

He was born in Lauderdale county, Miss., Feb. 10, 1868, and united with the church when about twelve years of age. He was blessed with pious parents, and, after graduating at the Cooper Normal College, he entered upon the active duties of life. But soon it was apparent that consumption had seized upon the citadel of his life. With but little hope of permanent relief by travel, he spent some months in Florida and Georgia, but returned home to die, at the early age of twenty-four years, in the bosom of loving friends.

He was of a quiet and gentle spirit, and regarded parental authority with becoming exactness and promptitude. He possessed the manliness of self-control, and exhibited in a wonderful degree during his protracted illness the Christian virtue of patience. He lived a consistent member of the church, and died in the full assurance of a happy home in heaven. He talked freely with his friends about his condition, requesting them not to weep for him, and waited patiently for the inevitable event. He felt truly grateful for the kind care and attention so constantly bestowed on him by loving friends. It must be a source of great consolation to his surviving relatives to have had such a son and such a brother, with his Christian testimony, and the assurance which the gospel affords of a happy reunion in "the Christian's home in glory." J. M. PEGG.

A Snare of the Devil.

Some good Christians make a mistake in allowing themselves to become alienated from the church by what may appear to them good and sufficient causes. One zealous brother, of whom we have recently heard, became deeply interested in entire sanctification, and not finding his pastor equally zealous and pronounced in the same doctrine and experience, he gradually ceased to attend the means of grace. Thinking that the services were not edifying or profitable to him in his higher experiences, he turned aside to special meetings for the promotion of holiness which were being conducted in the neighborhood. After a few months he discovered his error, and returned to the church, but he had unintentionally wrought an evil by absenting himself from the services which he was not able to cure by retracing his steps.

When attending the church regularly his children accompanied him, but when he ceased to attend they did likewise. They did not follow him to holiness meetings, but forsook the church altogether, and spent their Sabbaths in other places. When the father returned to the church one son could not be induced to return with him. The father made a frank confession that his course had been wrong, and although he said he has not lost his religion he feared he had lost his son. That son not only neglected the house of God, but habitually went out from home at nights, his father knew not where, but had reason to believe that he spent his evenings in places of wickedness. The regret of the father was sincere and deep, but the mischief could not be undone.

An official member in a certain church in a Western State lost confidence in his pastor, and declared that he would not attend preaching again so long as that man continued to occupy the pulpit. He had not pursued this course long before he saw his mistake. The children growing up in his home were disaffected toward the church and the pastor and lost interest in religion. But having given his word that he would not hear his pastor preach, he was too proud to yield to his better judgment, and stubbornly carried out his foolish purpose. Bitterly did he regret the rash vow, and he had cause to regret still more bitterly his persistence in fulfilling it. His own soul was impoverished, his spiritual joys perished, his family and the church were seriously harmed.

Let Christians be on their guard against this snare of the devil. If the pastor does not appear to be so far advanced in holiness as others, if he does not preach so effectively as he might, if he is even inconsistent in his conduct, there is all the more need for good men and women to stand by the church and attend all the means of grace. By yielding to the temptation to depart for a season under such circumstances, well-meaning Christians have wounded the church, hindered the cause of Christ, damaged their own families and their own souls, and given occasion to the enemies of the gospel to blaspheme. "Be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."—New York Christian Advocate.

"The House We Live In."

"The tenant and the house are so inseparable, that in striking at any part of the dwelling, you inevitably reach the dweller." This being the case, it is of vital importance to keep the house, the body, in good condition. Now a remedy which is taken into the lungs in the same manner as the air we breathe, but richer in ozone, the vital element of the air, and is distributed by the blood to every part of the body, should meet all requirements. Such a remedy is the Compound Oxygen Treatment of Drs. Starkey & Palen. We give below a few of the hundreds of testimonials from patients. You can have as many more as you wish by writing for them.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"I have been for many years a great sufferer from nervous trouble, and have tried your Compound Oxygen Treatment thoroughly. It is the most powerful and lasting nervine I have ever known." LILLIE ARCHIBELL, Kingston, N. C., April 26, 1888. DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"I take great, great pleasure in stating that I have used your Compound Oxygen Treatment with the best results. I regard it as one of the best remedies for debility and nervous and lung troubles." W. Y. SANDLIN, Jasper, Fla., February 2, 1889.

Send for our brochure of 200 pages, sent free. It is well worth reading. Contains a history of Compound Oxygen, its mode of action and results, with numerous testimonials. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.

GRAND MOMENTS.—After all, the grand moments occur in the lives of men who are grand all the time, and are, therefore, able almost unconsciously to be grand when these specially grand times arrive. There are times when it is grand to be a minister, or lawyer, or other public servant, but the usual human mistake is in expectation that the sum of services resides in those exceptional moments. The higher the general level of a man's life, the higher is the excelling level of the privileged "grand times." How a worker would study, labor, deny himself, pray, and serve if his life could but constantly preserve a sublime altitude among the gilded summits of habitual magnificent excellence. God does not see as man sees. The great King requires only that we live constantly among the mountain tops of dedication and consecration, and there breathe the pure air of highest intent, prepared for any supreme effort with respect to God and his creatures. At times it is indeed grand to do exceptionally fine things, but it is even better to live on that higher level of readiness for service, and thus be acquitted by the Master, however modest he one's record among men. Heaven levels many things on earth.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

PECAN CULTURE.

We have received from Hon. J. G. Rusk, United States Secretary of Agriculture, his report of 1890, which contains an interesting account of pecan tree culture by Mr. Wm. R. Stuart, of Ocean Springs, Miss. It is illustrated by a page picture of one of his fourteen-year-old pecan trees. Bro. Stuart has made a successful specialty of pecan culture, and annually sells all his crop for seed at from $1 to $1.50 per pound. One of the most important things for the young men and women of the South to do is to plant a pecan grove of Stuart's seeds.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Boise City, Idaho, was flooded by a cloud-burst on May 23.

The Interstate Mississippi River Improvement and Levee Association met in Greenville, Miss., May 25. The leading men of the Valley were present.

The Secretary of the Navy has issued orders, directing officers in command of naval forces, whether squadrons or single ships, to practice the utmost economy in the use of coal.

The steamer Hudson, bound from New Orleans to New York, with ninety-six passengers, stranded on the Virginia coast on May 24. The crew remained on board, but the passengers were landed by the life saving service.

As a result of the Nationalist Union Conference, held in Cincinnati, a third party—the People's Party—has been organized. An Executive Committee has been formed, and will proceed to communicate with the citizens of the States and Territories not represented at the convention.

The Trans-Mississippi Congress met in Denver, Col., voted for the coinage of American silver, and then adjourned to meet in New Orleans, next October. It was in session four days. Silver and irrigation, to a large extent, overshadowed all other matters the congress had to discuss, and they were many and varied.

The Agricultural Department is now taking considerable interest in the cultivation of ramie, an industry of large importance to the Gulf States, and especially Louisiana. A recent report contains some interesting facts showing the advancement made during the past year towards the perfecting of decorticating machines.

Applications for licenses as sugar producers are now being received by the commissioner of internal revenue through the revenue collector's office in New Orleans. The first application received from Louisiana was that of the Realty Company, for the Des Lignes, Soulis and Lestancia plantations, St. Mary parish. Estimated sugar production, 5,000,000 pounds.

Wm. Redmond, one of the Irish envoys to America and Parnellite member of Parliament, arrived in Chicago, May 22. He predicts that Parnell will again be restored to leadership of the united party, brought together by the surrender of the McCarthyites. "It is not a question of the success of Mr. Parnell," said Mr. Redmond, "it is one of principles; not a question of morals or religion, but of politics."

Thirteen of the twenty-two prominent Boards of Trade, Chambers of Commerce and freight associations composing the National Transportation Association were represented at the regular quarterly meeting of the Chicago Board of Trade, on May 22. The Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia and the New Orleans Board of Trade were admitted to membership. Steps were taken to secure the adoption of an official uniform bill of lading for interstate commerce to supersede those used by common carriers. All attempts to secure more liberal bills of lading from railways having failed, this is to be the initial movement toward securing governmental aid. The Interstate Commerce Commission will be asked to ratify this bill of lading and its adoption by all railroads.

FOREIGN.

The Pope is taking steps to secure greater economy of expenditures at the Vatican. He has appointed a commission, composed of three cardinals, charged to do their utmost to effect a reduction in expenses.

The trial at Bari, Italy, of 179 members of the Mala Vita society has ended. Fourteen members are acquitted, while 165 members are sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from six months to fifteen years.

In order to celebrate the visit of the Czarowitz to Siberia, an imperial decree has been issued authorizing the Siberian government to remit two-thirds of the sentences and otherwise to ameliorate the condition of worthy convicts.

Baron Hirsch, in an interview, said, not Uruguay, but the Argentine Republic, would be the site of the proposed Jewish colony. The baron intends to buy 5,000,000 acres for this purpose. The commissioners sent to Buenos Ayres to investigate have returned. They report favorable prospects for the settlement.

A terrific storm passed over Paris, on May 22, causing considerable damage and creating much alarm. During the passage of the storm a huge waterspout formed in the Champs Elysee, traversed the Place de la Concorde and burst in the Jardin des Tuileries, uprooting trees, destroying lawns and flower beds, and washing away pathways. In addition a thunderbolt fell in the Esplanade des Invalides, but there was no loss of life.

In consequence of the refusal of the French government to grant the request of the executors of the will of the late Prince Napoleon, the Italian government has ordered the tomb in the church of La Superga, in which the prince's body lies, to be closed. The executors requested the French government to grant the prince's last desires, which were that his body should be buried in the Iles Sanguinaires, near Ajaccio, the capital of Corsica.

The fourth quinquennial convention of the Universal Postal Union convened in Vienna, May 20. One of the principal matters to the United States to be brought before the convention is the proposition to abolish or reduce the charges made by the countries of the union for the conveyance of mails over the territory of one or more of them to the country of destination. There will be a strong effort made to secure the adoption of an international postage stamp, good for the prepayment of postage in every country of the union.

"What it costs" must be carefully considered by the great majority of people, in buying even necessities. Hood's Sarsaparilla combines positive economy with great medicinal power. It is the only medicine of which can truly be said "100 Doses One Dollar."

About Washing Flannels

Dr. A. N. Bell, Editor of the Sanitarian, New York, writes: "Pearline has gained special ascendency in my household and in many others to my knowledge, for cleansing flannels. Your own directions for its use are those we abide by: 'Wash flannels by hand in luke-warm Pearline suds; rinse thoroughly in warm water; wring dry (by pressure through clothes wringer); pull and shake well; dry in warm temperature and they will keep soft without shrinking.'"

Danger

As one wash is sufficient to ruin flannels, great care should be exercised as to the use of the many imitations which are being offered by unscrupulous grocers or peddlers. Pearline is never peddled.

How to Keep the Church Pure.

In the first place, that is hardly a per question. Any lazy, indolent, od-for-nothing church can do that. e more proper question would be, w can the church keep the whole rld pure, including the church? at is the mission of the church.

Second. To keep the church pure by suffering unconverted people to me in would cause the following difficulties: (1) There is no exact standard which "conversion" can be identified as understood by all men, or even all ministers. Conversion is a state grace, not thermometrically measurable with certainty. (2) It is by no eans true in all cases that those who nestly profess conversion are the ost religious. (3) Taking none but nverted persons in, even if you could it, would avail nothing, unless the itiation were accompanied by a guarntee that such person would stay converted. There are many unconverted rsons in the church who came in under a profession of conversion.

Third. To admit none but converted pliosnts supposes a power in the stor to feel the spiritual pulse and determine its exact measure, in order to determine whether it reaches the line of eligibility. And as no man claims or pretends to possess such power, its exercise would be mere damaging injustice. Such authority would be about as likely to reject an ineligible as an eligible person.

Fourth. To reject an applicant on the ground that he had not religion enough would be to send him back into the wicked world to get more! This supposes and holds the doctrine that outside of the church is the proper place to acquire or increase one's religion, and inside is the place for only its enjoyment. Will any man subscribe to such doctrine? Of what use is the church if growth in grace is to be found better outside than in?

Fifth. I think it is unquestionable that in the absence of fraud or imbecility, the want to be in the church is the highest and best evidence there can be of his fitness to be there. It is the law of common sense and the law of our church. In the course of my reading I have not met with an attempt to make an argument long or short, to give a reason why such person should not be in the church. Such an argument would necessarily show, first, that the church is a close corporation chartered for the special and exclusive benefit of its initiated members; and, secondly, that it possesses no power of propagating Christianity, and is exclusively selfish and non-philanthropic.

Sixth. As to a person who wants to be in the church not being eligible for lack of religion, that is a contradiction. The want is a religious want; for, in the absence of fraud and imbecility, there can be no other. In case of serious doubt the pastor should inquire into the genuineness of the faith of the applicant; but he has no more right to inquire into the degree of it than into the degree of his attainment in theological science.

Seventh. Whatever may be the degree or amount of a member's religion or faith, new or old, the church is the only place in the world where improvement could be reasonably looked for. To send a person out into the wicked world to get more religion would be as sensible as to send a freezing man out into the snow and ice to get warm.

Eighth. As to fraudulent or imbecile membership, they never do much harm. In an experience of near seventy years I have met with two or three of the former, and but one of the latter, as well as is now recollected. The frauds made a little local disturbance for a few months, but they amounted to but comparative trifles. Fraud is seldom detected at first. It takes a little time for it to uncover. The case of imbecility alluded to made no disturbance whatever. I never knew or heard of a case where entrance into the church was denied for either of these causes. To justify a refusal, the fraud would have to be open, glaring, and apparent.

Ninth. Church is nothing but natural Christian fellowship in some prudent organic form. It follows, therefore, that a person desiring, or determined, to lead a religious life, does and must seek such fellowship. The universal law of sociology requires it. Birds of a feather flock together. And to refuse such fellowship on the ground of deficient quantity of divine grace, as estimated by a human judge, would be a simple, social—yea, and a wanton cruelty without a reason.

Tenth. The way to purify the church, and keep it pure, is for its members to keep themselves pure. Keep the pulpit warm; keep the pews warm. Keep the prayer meetings alive. Keep the singing lively, non-artistic, non-professional; not formal, but quick and spiritual. Let everybody pray in the congregation when called on. Keep the Sunday-school a-working on full time, and bring in from the street all the urchin idlers. Canvass the city for them. Hunt up the immigrant strangers, and see to them. Be kind to outsiders. Be prompt at all church meetings. Circulate more of church literature, and less of printed trash. Let every member have some ecclesiastical employment besides to go to church and sit down. Do these things with a will, and in harmony, and there will be less necessity for spiritual examiners at the doors to keep out ineligible members. Suppose one does backslide, or fail to foreslide, would he probably have done any better outside? The Savior didn't say, Go and get religion; he said, Come to me.

Methodism and Local Option.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of May 21, has an article from Bishop Galloway, written "in order to correct a misapprehension which may lead to unnecessary and unfortunate differences among the temperance workers of our church." The reference is to the following resolution, passed by the late W. C. T. U. Convention, at Brookhaven:

Resolved, That while local option has been of service in the preliminary struggle against alcohol, we believe it to be ineffectual as a temperance measure, false in principle, and a compromise with the liquor traffic. Therefore, we align ourselves squarely with the Methodist General Conference at St. Louis, with the Mississippi Baptist State Convention, and other bodies which have declared for prohibition of the saloon; and that we will join our brother prohibitionists in asking for legislation that will protect the State in its homes.

The Bishop comments thus:

That resolution does not correctly state the action of the General Conference or the attitude of the Methodist Church on the subject of temperance and prohibition. The General Conference at St. Louis adopted a strong report endorsing prohibition, but nowhere said or intimated that local option, which is one form of prohibition, was "false in principle and a compromise with the liquor traffic."

The resolution of the Brookhaven convention does not state that the General Conference at St. Louis "said or intimated" that local option was "false in principle and a compromise with the liquor traffic." The resolution says that "we" (the Mississippi W. C. T. U.) believe it to be so; therefore, "we" adopt the declarations of the Methodist General Conference at St. Louis. The temperance report passed by that grand body states:

Resolved, That we abate none of the teachings of our reverend fathers of four years ago, but reaffirm the utterances of our Bishops and members of the General Conference of 1886; and that we adopt these utterances as the sentiments of the General Conference of 1890.

The General Conference of 1886 declared: "We recognize in the license system a sin against society. Its essential immorality can not be effected by the question whether the license be low or high. . . . The effectual prohibition of the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors is emancipation from the greatest curse that now afflicts our race."

The General Conference of 1890 continues:

Resolved, That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is opposed to the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes, and that we will continue to agitate the subject of prohibition as a great moral question in all its bearings on the life and work of the church, and strive with all good citizens, by all proper and honorable means, to banish the horrible evil from our beloved church and country.

Resolved, That the time has now come when the church, through its press and pulpit, its individual and organized agencies, should speak out in stronger words and stronger action in favor of the total removal of the great evil of intemperance from our land.

Now, what the women of the Mississippi W. C. T. U. meant to say, and did say, was: "We align ourselves squarely with the Methodist General Conference at St. Louis;" their platform is our platform. It says the license system is a sin. Local option is a license measure; it licenses the saloon to ravage unrestrained in some counties, while it shuts its eyes to the maraudings of that highway robber—the jug—in the county which it professes to protect; it declares that to be legally right which the church declares is morally wrong—a principle which sits side by side with that other damning heresy of doing evil that good may come. "Wrong always builds a tottering throne."

To-day local option is the stronghold of the liquor traffic, second only to high license. The women, in their dire struggle, have learned to thoroughly distrust any temperance measure that pleases fence-riders, whisky papers, or the saloon.

It is too true the Mississippi Conference, last December, took a backward step in adopting the following: "Your committee is of the opinion that an educated public sentiment, combined with local option measures, earnestly stressed and vigorously pressed, are to be the instruments for the arrest and final overthrow of this giant evil; and recognizing the potency of the pulpit, we would recommend that our pastors preach to their congregations on the subject of temperance, at least, once a year."

The White Ribbon was there, and saw this report hurried through, almost before an objector could find his feet, and heard the deep-drawn sorrow of more than one good brother in the expression, "There is many a preacher here who does not like this any more than you and I."

The aggressiveness and vigor of the sermon-a-year policy, and having forever to do their first works over again in local option, fail to stimulate the women. The W. C. T. U. may safely say anybody is welcome to all the local option to be gotten out of the temperance report of the St. Louis General Conference; and can as safely leave it to public judgment to determine who is out of line with the highest tribunal of the Methodist Church—the Mississippi W. C. T. U., or the Mississippi Conference. And it asks this question with an unwavering faith in the prohibition principles of the majority of the preachers of the Methodist Church, whose brotherly sympathy and aid have ever been the comfort and reliance of the Mississippi W. C. T. U.

H. B. KELLS.

The Young Preacher—No. 11.

BY AN OLD MINISTER.

CONVERSATION AND SOCIAL LIFE.

You must cultivate and develop whatever conversational talent you have. You can help yourself along, interest others, and gain much useful knowledge, by talking to people about that which they know most about. It is human nature to enjoy a comfortable sense of superiority. Now, when you put a man on his most familiar theme, he is apt to think that on that theme he is your equal, if not your superior; so he is at his ease, does his best talking, and is gratified to think he is imparting new and useful information. Nearly every man you will meet will know something you do not, or will know it better than you do. By this method of talking you confer pleasure, and you gain something useful. I am painfully and experimentally aware there are some colloquial impossibles. You can never get them beyond the monosyllabic yes or no; but these are the rare exceptions, and not the rule.

I have seen some preachers, of fair education and acceptable preaching power, who, in social life, were nearly failures, because they had no colloquial small change, no power of adapting their conversation to the needs of the various people they had to meet. As a public man and, perhaps, a graduate, you will naturally be expected to lead in conversation. If you can not, there will be many awkward and painful pauses, and it will come to this: that you and the party you visit will be glad to get rid of each other, and your coming again will not be looked to as an agreeable interview. If deficient in the art of social talk, do your best to improve.

Remember, I am urging you not to talk too much, nor stay too long, but to make your talk, as far as you can, agreeable and useful. It's quite possible to talk too much, and to talk indiscreetly. We can not be too careful how we speak where character is involved. You are likely to be quoted as an authority—your words will be potent, and "eat as doth a canker."

In your position as a pastor you will become most intimate with families. They will give you their confidence, and speak before and to you as to few others. You must sacredly respect this confidence. I have often been talked to and consulted about the most delicate and important individual and domestic affairs. Had I been thoughtless or imprudent enough to have spoken of what I had heard, I could have kindled a most disastrous domestic and social conflagration. I have had men confess to me what would have come near hanging them if I had revealed it. They were burdened and utterly miserable, and came to me because they felt they could trust me, and hoping for some useful advice, or to find some comfort. I have been called upon to hear and to counsel in the most intimate and sacred relations of human life. All this devolves upon a pastor—the most delicate responsibility and the necessity of the most judicious prudence. Any mixing up in such matters, or taking sides, may involve scandal and ministerial ruin.

The pastor's intimacy with many families brings him to know, as hardly any other man does, what people think of each other. It is sometimes a little amusing to see nice people associating under seemingly pleasant conditions, when, if they knew as you do, what they really think of each other, an explosion and wide separation would be the immediate result. You will, of course, sacredly hold your peace. Let them get along in harmony; their prejudices may soften, their opinions may change, and they, upon better acquaintance, may come to respect and love one another. Imprudence in such cases would be as unwise and perilous as to smoke a cigar in a powder mill.

Hear, you often must, and bear what is no small responsibility to keep to yourself; but there is no compulsion to speak. Few of us have ever had occasion to regret saying too little; but many of us, maybe, have repented saying too much. A word to the wise.

To Dr. Abbey.

My venerable friend, Dr. Abbey, hacked one chip from the log of truth which he carries on all occasions; and he has a right to carry it, for it is his.

Your correspondent, three stars (), in his article on Melchizedek, did not say one word about Christ organizing a new church, nor about a new church of any kind, or at any time. There never has been but one church, one people of God, one gospel, and one way of being saved from sin. I said: "The spirit of Judaism may undertake to limit 'the most high God' in this way"—the way of saying that God was shut up for priests to one tribe, and to one family of that tribe; or shut up to one particular denomination of Christians—"but he calls out a new people, just as he called Melchizedek and Christ." That word "new" caught Dr. Abbey's eye, and he went for it. That is his chip. He has downed that word when used to qualify the church and the people of God, and he means to keep it down, and I will help him do it. I meant to say that God calls a "new people," in the sense that he called the Methodists out of the Church of England, or the Missionary out of the Primitive Baptist Church. I meant to condemn the spirit of bigotry, which says, "We, and we only, are the people of God; our church and our way of doing things are the only mediums of divine communication."

Dr. Abbey and three stars () talked all these matters over, again and again, last September, and we were then perfectly agreed. Everywhere Dr. Abbey goes, and in everything he reads, he is looking for that word "new," and for the word "old," as applied to the church and religion. They are the middle-men of a great error, and Dr. Abbey "plumped" them out from law many years ago, and he don't intend that any man—particularly a Methodist—shall put them back in the ring again. It keeps the Doctor pretty busy to keep the boys from fudging in this matter. Whenever I see a fellow slip up on one of these words, in any of our church papers, I chuckle and say to myself: "Look out! Dr. Abbey will on to you in ten days or two weeks. That's his chip." One good thing, thank God! Dr. Abbey can put hard arguments in soft words. He can hit an error without wounding a man. Some men can't, or won't, do this.

Now, Doctor, let me say that I am no new church, new gospel, new Bible, new doctrine man. If at any time I try to take your chip from you, just say: "Stop, my son; that's mine; lay it down. I'll carry it myself." I'll pull off my hat and help you up with it as long as you live. It is yours. No man shall take your chip from you while I live. I owe you a great debt of love for the help you have been to me.

Another Point Raised.

The Texas Advocate, reviewing the decisions of the College of Bishops in the Kelley-Hargrove case, has raised a new point upon which none of those decisions touched. It says:

It will be seen from the episcopal decisions in this issue that the College of Bishops have decided somewhat on both sides of the controversy in the Kelley case, but, as published, they sustain Bishop Hargrove's rulings on the main points at issue. We are eminently satisfied with the construction of the episcopal college, though our views have not been fully sustained. The first important point at issue was whether the proviso to paragraph 263 fixes the form of trial for the offense named in that paragraph. At this point the college sustain Bishop Hargrove, and it is now settled that for such offense the offender is to be tried by committee and not in open Conference.

Arguing from precedent and analogy, we supposed it to be the duty of the presiding Bishop to appoint the committees of trial, but the college decide that the Conference has the right, if claimed, to appoint the committee. The main issue, however, is not who shall appoint, but whether a committee shall be appointed. Has the Annual Conference the right to say whether the case shall or shall not be investigated and tried? Can the Annual Conference, when a charge is brought against a member according to law, in the body, say no investigation, no trial, is necessary, and thereby prevent or stop all proceedings of investigation and trial? According to the late decisions and the law for committee cases the Conference is invested with no such power. It has not the exclusive right to appoint. The Bishop appoints unless the Conference claims the right to appoint; but the committee must be appointed. Either the Bishop or the Conference must appoint—the Conference, if it claim the right. The question as to who shall appoint is quite different from the one, Shall a committee be appointed? and the latter is the far more important one. When any member of an Annual Conference is legally accused before the body of an actionable offense, neither Bishop nor Conference has the authority to prevent an investigation and trial according to the prescribed forms. Both in the interests of the accused and church the trial must go forward. Anything else would be detrimental to all concerned.

Whitworth Female College.

The approaching commencement of Whitworth College promises to be, in all respects, the most brilliant in its history. The sacred music, on Sunday, will be the best ever heard in this State. "The sughter of Jairus: A Sacred Cantata," by Stainer, will be sung by members of the music faculty and by the College Choral Society. The sermon at 11 A. M. will be preached by Dr. Hoss, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, the connectional organ of the M. E. Church, South. The Doctor is one of the most vigorous writers, as well as one of the best preachers, in the South. A rare intellectual treat is in store for all who will hear him. The sermon at night will be delivered to the Y. L. C. A. by Dr. Cameron, one of the best preachers in the North Mississippi Conference.

On Monday there will be a debate by members of the senior class on a live subject. The audience will also be regaled with music, both instrumental and vocal, of the very highest order by the music pupils.

In the afternoon, beginning at 3:30 o'clock, there will be a contest by members of the elocution class for medals offered by the college, interspersed with music. Monday night, beginning promptly at 8:30 o'clock, there will be presented "The Song Tournament," a cantata introducing the characteristic songs of different nations, in costume. A small fee of 25 cents will be charged for admission to this delightful entertainment for the benefit of the college library. We feel sure the public and friends of the college will be glad of an opportunity of contributing to so worthy an object.

On Tuesday, at 10 A. M., the annual address will be delivered by Dr. H. C. Morrison, one of the best platform speakers in the South. This will be followed by a short recital by the music faculty, delivering of medals and conferring of degrees. Tuesday night the alumnæ will hold their meeting.—Exchange.

District Conference.

The Conference for Holly Springs district, North Mississippi Conference, will be held in Byhalia, commencing on Thursday, July 2, 1891, at nine o'clock A. M. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. Joseph Johnson, at eleven o'clock. Saturday will be devoted to the consideration of our Sunday-school interests, and Sunday-school workers are invited to be present.

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

An Appeal.

Rev. A. B. Nicholson, of Hazlehurst, Miss., has been an invalid for nearly five months. He is out of funds, and it would be a graceful deed if his many friends in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, where he has preached for thirty-five years, would remember their old friend at this time. Who will be the first to respond?

A FRIEND.

There is many a good divine that can not learn his own teaching. It is easier to say, This do, than to do it. When, therefore, I see good doctrine with an evil life, I may pity the one, but I will practice only the other. The good sayings belong to all; the evil actions only to their authors.—Warwick.

IN THE HEART OF THE WOODS.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Such beautiful things in the heart of the woods!
Flowers and ferns and the soft green moss;
Such loves of the birds, in the solitudes,
Where the swift wings glance and the tree-tops toss.
Spaces of silence, swept with song,
Which nobody hears but the God above,
Spaces where myriad creatures throng,
Sunning themselves in his guiding love.

Such safety and peace in the heart of the woods,
Far from the city's dust and din,
Where passion nor hate of man intrudes,
Nor fashion nor folly has entered in,
Deeper than hunter's trail hath gone,
Glimmers the tarn where the wild deer drink,
And fearless and free comes the gentle fawn,
To peep at herself o'er the grassy brink.

Such pledge of love in the heart of the woods!
For the Maker of all things keeps the least,
And over the tiny floweret broods
With care that for ages has never ceased,
If he cares for this will he not for thee—
Thee, whoever thou art, to-day?
Child of an infinite Father, see;
And safe in such gentlest keeping stay.

All for Love.

It has been my happy privilege to visit the home of my childhood. What sweet recollections of things past, what blessed realities of things present were crowded in that visit, only those who have felt it know.

The lovely wreath that friendship twined in the blessed days of yore is fading away. Only now and then would I meet with a face whose sweetness time had not been able to obliterate. The village that was so full of life and learning seems so subdued now compared to what it once was, and as I passed through to reach that cottage beyond its limits, where my busy, happy childhood and girlhood days were spent, I could not refrain from falling into a mournful reverie over the changes that had come. But the dear heart of my mother was unchanged, and she gave me the same sweet welcome that made me glad long ago.

A few full happy days were spent, and the Sabbath came, which invited the weary to rest from labor and come to God's house. I was of the number who came that bright morning, and it was gratifying to see so many there. There were boys and girls, young men and ladies, wee tots, and babes in parents' arms, while the middle-aged and old people were there. Not so many of either kind, but all these classes were there at Sunday-school. Surely, thought I, this is something new to see so many grown people here to study God's Word, and I wished that this new thing might be practiced elsewhere. It was Missionary Day with them, and after the usual exercises there were some nice recitations, the last of which was by a little girl whose father had been my pet in days too long gone for him to remember. Of course, I should have enjoyed even a failure from her, but when she delivered her little piece so beautifully it was a real feast. The singing was very good. There was no preaching that day.

The church is neat and well kept, but there is no denying the fact that time had touched it, too, and lately it has been pronounced unsafe. Oh, if those walls could speak, what volumes they could tell!—for in Sharon's palmy days it was visited by the gifted as well as the good, and much eloquence, such earnest zeal, such loving pathos as has characterized some sermons preached there, could not be excelled. That church can never go down. It is historic. One fact will always rescue it from oblivion—that is, that our beloved and honored Bishop Galloway preached his maiden sermon there, and more than one old lady, when hearing that he was made a Bishop, exclaimed in triumph, "I told you so when he preached that first sermon!"

I am not sure, but believe that Dr. Hunnicutt preached his first sermon there, too. If not his first, it was the scene of his earliest labors in the ministry, and I speak knowingly when I say that he and his lovely wife had much to do with moulding the characters of the young in those days, and many of them are now earnest workers in God's vineyard.

If I should try to mention even a few of those who have labored there, I should weary of the task. The remains of some of the noblest characters that earth has ever known slumber in the beautiful and well-kept cemetery whose monuments might do honor to any resting-place, and which is one of the few places that has not grown smaller or neglected as the years have gone by. The church is going to be rebuilt very soon; but how, will depend on what help comes to these good people. They are earnest and zealous, and though few in numbers and moderate in means, they intend to have a church to worship in. Of course, the people of Canton will help, and have already signified their intention of doing so, for some of Canton's best members were reared in Sharon, but it will require so much that it will take a long time unless help comes some other way. Why could not many who read of this little church, struggling so bravely to keep up an old landmark of Methodism, give something to help them—all for love? Love for that place which has sent out so many skillful workmen with polished swords to strike sin with unerring aim; love for the dear people who many of us know, and whose hearts we can make glad in this way; love for the sainted dead whose memories we can revere by having a nice church built here; but, above all, love for the blessed Master and his faithful followers. Have you enough to spare a little for this worthy object? We do not always realize what a privilege it is to give. We know how sweet it is to receive something we really need. It is still more blessed to give. The smallest amount sent to Mrs. Ben Muse, Sharon, Miss., would be thankfully received. How we would rejoice to hear a real helpful report from her in a little while!

"I Go A-Fish'ng."

The second Quarterly Conference for the Port Vincent circuit was held at Bayou Barbary Church, May 16 and 17. The congregations were good, the official turnout was moderate, and the reports encouraging. The pastor is popular and doing a good work. The junior preacher was present on Sabbath morning to be baptized, and assumed the Christian name of Claiborne Gowers. "Claiborne" for this writer, and "Gowers" after Bro. L. Z. Gowers, the beacon light of the Barbary. Our expectations of his future usefulness run high. There were two other children baptized at the same time. We preached three sermons at the Barbary. On Sunday evening we went, in company with the two Clenney families and others, in two small boats, to Manrepas Island, where we had preaching, at eight P. M., to a good congregation. The night was spent at Bro. Ben Clenney's, on the bank of the Amite river. On Monday morning we had, among other things, a dish of fresh fish, caught, cleaned and cooked before breakfast. After breakfast, the pastor in charge, wife, little junior and I, with George Jones, Jr., as oarsman, returned to Barbary, a distance of six miles, making the trip in an hour and a half. A good part of both Saturday and Monday were spent in fishing in Bayou Barbary. To give you some idea of the success we had, let me say that Bros. Gowers, Meador and myself fished about two and one-half hours on Saturday morning and caught about one hundred, mostly large perch of the goggle-eyed kind. We had a common-sized water-bucket full, and about as many more on a gad. There were times the fish would bite about as fast as we could pull them out. We used the "frog bait" taken from underneath the gills of the same kind of perch we were catching; so that one bait would last half of a day. To a man from the up-country, where the fish are scarce, this sport was enjoyable, indeed, both the catching and the eating.

Is It a Lost Art?

The pronoun "it" in the caption has reference to praying. The question thus put will, no doubt, arouse the antagonism of a great number, and the curiosity of many more. But it is asked in all seriousness, and with a desire to arrive at the truth in the matter. Prayer, in the language of the lexicographer, is "the offering up to the Supreme Being adoration, confession, supplication and thanksgiving." This definition assuredly fits the prayers of God's saints as recorded in his Word, and especially is consonant with the model prayer as given by our Lord; but when we apply the words of the dictionary to many modern prayers (so-called) we fall utterly to see any bond of legitimate connection. Indeed, to describe a sort of praying which is all too prevalent in our day, the defining words should have run about this wise: "Prayer is the offering up to the Supreme Being of information, congratulation, generally characterized by a spirit of self-complacency." But this is not all. How easy it is when we are on our knees in the attitude of true worshipers, in our satisfied condition, to remember the erring brother, and, while not mentioning his name, yet give him a stroke not altogether of sincere charity! On the other hand, how natural to ring in, in our petitions, the name of the rich brother, and endow him with such endearing appellatives as "thy faithful steward," "our beloved brother!" Oh, how easy it seems to be for what was originally designed for self-humiliation and the glory of God, to degenerate into censure of our enemies and praise for our friends!

The picture is assuredly not overdrawn. It was the writer's misfortune, not once nor twice, to hear this perversion of the holy ordinance. He remembers to have heard a sentence like this: "Lord, you know it is just as Dr. —— said." This reminds us of the man that used, in his devotions, the phrase, "Tempus fugit," and fearful lest his petition might remain unanswered through lack of knowledge on the part of the Almighty, he added the all-important information, which means, "O Lord, time flees." Think of him that made the tongue, and formed the organs of speech, and tuned the vocal chords; think of him that is the author of all thought—yea, the one that is the very word; think, if you can think things unthinkable, of this Being taking Latin lessons from a human pedagogue! No; the Omniscient needs not information. Prayer was instituted for our good, not for His; it is designed to show forth His glory, not ours. Let us not confuse the terms.

Another point which ought to be clear in our minds is that prayer is not answered until we are in an attitude to receive the blessing asked for. There is a prayer recorded in the Bible which serves to illustrate this principle. The prayer of the publican had in it the true elements of petition. He came with adoration; he did not even look up to Heaven, but smote upon his breast; he came with confession, humble and sincere, "Me, a sinner;" he came with supplication, "Have mercy." Here was a man that had something to pray for; he felt his deep necessity; he realized his emptiness, and believed that God could and would fill it. No wonder he went down to his house justified; and no wonder people go into the Lord's house now, and go back to their homes not justified. We pray about a great many things; we pray for very few things. Let a few publican-spirited prayers go up, and see if the windows of heaven are not opened wide, and your heart filled to overflowing.

When to Raise Missionary Money.

Logic is common sense set to order. There is a logic of facts that transcends all vagaries, no matter in how strict conformity the latter may be with Tigert or any other authority. My observation has been, and conviction is, the man who begins earliest with his collections succeeds best, provided he suits his methods in raising money to the peculiarities of his people. To succeed in or at anything we must know men, and act in accordance. Should the sentiment in last week's ADVOCATE obtain, our collections would likely be much below former results: It is not necessary to defer until harvest-time the collection of a few dollars, or cents, from each of our members. Are we to teach the people they are continually to have God in trial?—if he will give them a good harvest, they will then respond to the demands upon them? Or does the brother proceed on the assumption that the people are not financially able to meet their obligations early? If so, facts are at variance with him. Our people find money for other purposes, and they often of a trivial nature. Then, too, it is charging wholesale improvidence, for where is that with which God blessed them in last year's harvest?

It is a reflection on one's manhood as a Christian, to assume we can not find our "mite" to contribute to the Lord's treasury at any time it may be demanded, or soon thereafter. Then another strong point in favor of early collections is, that the preacher's salary has, in the greater part, to be deferred until Fall, it being the larger demand; so if the other is also deferred, and the entire burden falls at once, some one must suffer, and it is usually both.

Again, the sooner the money feature is out of sight, the earlier the preacher can "get close" to his people, and the greater the number he can get out. Often an entire-year's good work is dampened by the hurry, heat and extreme solicitude of the preacher for his collections, and the preacher's farewell impression on his people is that of a relentless money-gatherer.

My plan is to collect early, and so leave myself untrammeled for the remainder of the year. And I find that by making the demand early I raise my collections.

Woman's Work.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, Greenville district, was held in the M. E. Church, at Clarksdale, Miss., Thursday, May 13, 1891. Appropriate devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Lipscomb. The business meeting was presided over by Mrs. Hargrove, who had prepared an interesting programme. The Conference district secretary's report was read by Mrs. Hargrove. Mrs. B. C. Edwards was elected secretary. The following auxiliaries were represented, and reports read:

Greenville, Mrs. Bettie Dunn; Rosedale, Mrs. Edwards; Jonestown, Mrs. Ganong; Lula, Mrs. Rainey; Indianola, Miss Carter; Brooklyn, Miss Mattie Robertson; Bolivar, C. H. Owen (pastor); Indianola Juveniles, Mrs. Lipscomb. New Salem, Greenville, "Lilies of the Delta," and "Swamp Lights," and Jonestown "Little Lights" sent written reports. The majority of both the adult and the juvenile reports were most encouraging—all were good.

An interesting paper on the "Social Benefits of the Missionary Society" was read by Mrs. Rainey, followed by helpful remarks by Mrs. Hargrove.

The Parsonage and Home Mission report was made by Mrs. Hargrove. Two auxiliaries were represented—Greenville, by Mrs. Standifer, and Lula, by Mrs. Rainey. In response to the invitation to address the meeting, Rev. Mr. Newsom replied in his happy style. The meeting then adjourned.

At 8:15 P. M. a session was held, opened by devotional service conducted by Rev. Mr. Shipman. The feature of the evening was an address read by Mrs. Hargrove on the question, "Does God have need of woman in the spread of the gospel, and what are her special lines of work?" This was delivered to an appreciative audience in a beautiful and able style, and proved an inspiration to many to undertake greater things in the Master's field.

Friday morning Mrs. Hargrove organized an auxiliary at Clarksdale, with fourteen members. This ended an interesting and most profitable district meeting. May God give us many such earnest Christian women as Mrs. Hargrove and Mrs. Lipscomb, whose very presence is a sweet benediction!

MRS. B. C. EDWARDS.

Corinth, Miss.

The Lord has been with us in great power. The church is greatly revived, and souls have been converted. Twenty accessions to the church, and more to follow. Bro. McIntosh, of the North Alabama Conference, did the preaching. He is a man of God, and a strong, spiritual preacher. We have received the plans for a new church. Workmen are making the estimates, and we expect to begin work very soon. More than half the amount of the collections ordered by the Conference secured.

This has been a year of heavy affliction to our home. On March 7 my little boy, Allen Mooro, aged two years and two months, went to heaven after a brief illness. My dear father followed him just one week later. At the same time my precious wife, we believed, was sick unto death; but God, in his mercy, spared her. For two long months she was confined to her room. Her health is slowly returning. A few weeks ago my house at Rosedale, Miss., was burned to the ground, and is a total loss.

I thank God that I can say, to an extent as never before, that his grace is sufficient. In the midst of our heavy sorrows we have had our sweetest seasons of his grace. We meekly bow, and murmur not. It is the Lord; let him do what seemest good to him.

Children's Day.

Children's Day was observed with us last Sunday, at Paulding. The services were, indeed, interesting and profitable. The church was beautifully decorated; the music, instrumental and vocal, was excellent; the recitations by the children were in good taste, and well rendered. Altogether, it was a joyous day for the little folks. Children's Day! There is inspiration in the thought. I am glad that the General Conference set apart one day in each year for the special benefit of the children. We hear much nowadays about the rights of man, woman's rights; but has not the rights of children been ignored, especially when it has been so happily conceived by one of our Bishops that the church will yet march through the beautiful gates of childhood to the conquest of the world?

A unique characteristic of the Christian religion is its exaltation of childhood. Christianity, and only Christianity among the religions of the world, gives the first place in its mission and in its honors to children. Not merely a place, but the first place is, in its plans, accorded to a child—as its capable recipient and as its typical representative. I read Dr. Abbey's last article with a good deal of interest on the proper time to begin the training and religious culture of children. He says the proper time to begin the training of children is at the cradle. Some one asked Oliver Wendell Holmes the proper time to begin the training of a child, and he replied, "One hundred years before the child is born." I suppose both are right, viewing it from their respective standpoints. But, oh! the delicacy of the responsibility of training children! What tact, patience and wisdom is required for its performance! What preacher who has tried it does not realize the difficulty of preaching to children! Yet no work which we can do is so fruitful of immediate results as work done for the children.

Dr. Horace Bushnell, near the close of his life, gave this as his experience: "I think of nothing in my own ministry with so much regret, and so little respect, as I do of my omissions just here. We get occupied with great and high subjects that require a handling too heavy and deep for children, and become so fooled in our estimate of what we do, that we call it coming down when we undertake to preach to children; whereas it is coming up, rather, out of the subterranean hells, darknesses, intricacies, dungeon-like profundities of grown-up sin, to speak to the bright daylight creatures of trust and sweet affinities and easy convictions. And to speak to these fitly, so as not to thrust in Jesus on them as by force, but have him win his own dear way, by his childhood, waiting for his cross, tenderly, purely, and without art—oh! how fine, how very precious, the soul equipment it will require of us!"

God bless the children everywhere, and help us more and more to appreciate the significance of Children's Day!

W. G. BACKUS.

How They Talked after Church.

"How do you like him?" The speaker was a tall, slight man, with a sharply-cut face, at once sensitive and powerful. His companion was of a coarser type, short and stout, with a good-natured, but thoroughly wide-awake look, evidently a shrewd, driving man of business.

They were part of a stream of people which was pouring out of the doors of an uptown church, and they had been listening to a well-known preacher.

"How do you like him?"

"Don't like him at all!" was the curt reply.

The questioner turned upon him a half-amused look, as he quietly asked, "Why not?"

"Cold as an icicle! All intellect! Too much work to follow him! Doesn't touch your feelings at all. Now, I like Dr. ——. That man will make you cry even when he gives out a notice. He doesn't know a quarter as much as this one, but he gets hold of you, somehow. When he gets through—well, you don't know what he has been preaching about, but you feel warmed all through."

The two men were evidently close friends, and the first speaker replied with a plainness which assumed a perfect mutual understanding, and with a touch of warmth in his tone: "Look here! Do you know what you are talking about? Didn't follow him! Do you know what you have thrown away this morning? You may hear a sermon like that once in a year or two, not oftener, unless you go to hear that man often. I shall live on that sermon for the next six months. If I can live on the sermon for the rest of my life, so much the better for me."

The stout man looked up at his companion with wide-opened eyes, and the other went on: "Cold as an icicle! My poor fellow, you have a keen enough eye for men in general. Is it possible that you don't know the difference between earnestness and gush? Do you mean to tell me that you didn't see that that man was in dead earnest, and was working at his highest power to drive his conviction into you and me? Come! You know the difference between a bed of anthracite on fire from the bottom all the way up, and burning without sputter, and a quick blaze of shavings. Feeling! That sermon was full of it, as the man is full of it. Cold as an icicle! You haven't seen him as I have at the bedside of the sick poor, and by the dying in the hospitalwards. Very quiet, certainly; but he is there, and they hold on to his hand as long as their fingers can close. I saw him pick up a poor little beggar that fell in the street yesterday, and wipe away the tears from his dirty face with a very nice looking pocket handkerchief. No, he isn't popular; but I happen to know how many careworn, sorrowful, doubting men and women go to his study, and tell him what they will tell nobody else, and go away comforted. Do you know that one of the most brilliant preachers in America told me, not a week ago, that he had just been traveling away up in New England, and had found this man's books lying on the farmhouse tables beside the Bible? Do you know that one little book of his has brought hundreds, if not thousands, to believe in Christ?"

The stout man smiled feebly and in a forced kind of a way, and said nothing, having nothing just then to say; and coming at this moment opposite his own front door, he invited his friend to come in, which he did without hesitation. Evidently he had not said his say out. They were hardly seated when he opened again.

"You're off the track, and the trouble lies a good deal deeper than your dissatisfaction with this particular preacher. There are hundreds just like you, and you all have a radically wrong idea of the church service, and of the pulpit in particular. You don't go to the church for the right thing. To come down to the hard-pan of the matter, you go to church to be entertained; and if you are not entertained, you think yourselves defrauded, and lay the blame on the preacher, and berate him as uninteresting. You reason that it is his business to interest you, and, consequently, that if he fails, he does not understand his business. It does not seem to occur to you that there are two parties to that matter, and that you, as well as the preacher, have something to do with your being interested. Why, I watched you the other night when D—— was discussing the McKinley bill. D——, as you know, is not a first-class speaker, and is likely to be a little tedious when he has mounted his hobby. His sentences came out with rough edges; but he had something to say, and you never took your eyes off him until he sat down. The reason was that you were in some doubt as to how that bill bore upon your own business, and you were very much in earnest to know the truth about it, and so you brought your interest along with you.

"Now, you don't go to church in that way. You are not hungry for the truth; your mind has not been occupying itself with the bearing of this or that part of the Bible on your life. You bring no interest with you, and you look to the minister and the sermon to create it. You sit there as so much dead weight, expecting the minister to take you up bodily and lift you into a sphere where you will be interested and entertained and moved in an hour. Why, my friend, you can kindle a fire when your wood is wet. The wood has something to do as well as the fire. The fire must have something to feed on. The minister has solemn responsibility for preaching the Word; but you seem to forget that you have a no less solemn responsibility for hearing it. Did you ever observe how much emphasis Christ put upon the hearer? The reason why good seed was picked up by the birds, withered, choked, was that there was something wrong about the soil. 'Take heed how you hear; whosoever hath to him shall be given.'"—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

The Responsibilities of Citizenship.

There is nothing necessarily disreputable in politics. Dishonest men engage in every business, and a man could as reasonably eschew trade or politics on that account. The welfare of every organized community demands that its most capable and trustworthy citizens be encouraged to take an active part in the direction of its public affairs, and it is particularly important that young men should be impressed with the imperative character of civic duty. No man should look upon politics as something which he is free to take up or let alone as his convenience or his taste may incline him. Under no circumstances a good citizen does he consider himself at liberty to decline an onerous and responsible office when its acceptance involves the sacrifice of private interests. The country has the same right to the devotion of its sons in peace that it has in war. Political service is not less obligatory than military because it is attended with less danger and hardship.

Louisiana owes a vast deal to the public spirit of its good men and women. No State in the Union has been, since the late war, more persistently threatened with the prevalence of evil influences in its public life, and nothing but the zealous patriotism of the better part of her people has saved her from utter ruin and degradation. There has been no time during this war in which an active participation in politics by all the honest elements of the population was not necessary to the defense of her honor and the protection of her prosperity, and to-day she summons her children to meet a crisis as fateful as any she has encountered in the past. It seems to us that the most burning words are comparatively cold and colorless when we attempt to portray the startling features and prodigious proportions of the danger which menaces the happiness of every home in Louisiana.

When we look down the vista of the coming years and sum up the awful total of disastrous consequences which must follow the adoption of the shameful proposal now about to be submitted to the people, we find it scarcely possible to express in adequate terms the supreme importance of the issue; for we feel that a warning should be written now that would peal like a trumpet in every hamlet and blaze like a bonfire from every hilltop in Louisiana. Our impatience, therefore, is extreme for those easy-going cynics who stand quietly to one side while the State is tottering near the very verge of an abyssmal depth of infamy, and merely shrug their shoulders and declare the whole thing, "Politics—dirty business." Politicians, as a class, may not be altogether praiseworthy, but no man is meaner, more unmanly than he who at a time like this is not a politician in the proper sense of the word.

There are some men, perhaps, who professed indifference is only a cloak to hide their timidity; but the overcautious should remember that he who evades one responsibility incurs another, with which he must deal at last, and at a greater disadvantage. This is no time for shirkers and trimmers. The question will be asked in years to come, "How did you stand in the Lottery fight?" and the answer will be taken as decisive of a man's patriotism long after the Lottery wheel has ceased to revolve.—New Delta.

ORIGIN, PURPOSE AND DESTINY OF MAN; OR, PHILOSOPHY OF THE THREE R'S. By William Thornton. Published by the author, Boston.

DOROTHY'S EXPERIENCE. By Adeline Trafton. Lee and Shepard, Boston. For sale by Hansell & Bro., New Orleans.

This is a very delightful story, well told in an interesting way.

This is the best little book we have seen in a long time. It shows, in five addresses, how to get strong, physically, mentally, and spiritually. It will uplift any careful reader, and we commend it most heartily.

THE KINGDOM AND COMINGS OF CHRIST. By Rev. J. C. Simmons, D. D., of the Pacific Conference. Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

This book professes to explain the prophecies of Daniel, the predictions of Jesus with reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, and the book of Revelation. Whether the author has done this satisfactorily, each reader must determine for himself. He evidently does not believe that Christ will ever come again in the flesh to reign a thousand years.

This is an elaborate treatise on lace making, embroidery and needle work, and our lady friends will find in it many suggestions that will be helpful to them.

An outward profession, however plausible, will not do without corresponding actions. How much better it is to have a peaceful sense of my own wretchedness and a humble waiting upon God for sanctifying grace, than to talk much and appear to be somebody in religion.—Owen.

.—HEZEKIAH'S REFORMATION.

Plenily Hezekiah's first thought ming to the throne was of nd his worship. In the first of the first year, we find him ring himself and others to under- e great reform. No wonder his good reign! "Sanctify now lves," was his word to them. the church can be useful in up- the world, she must see to it her skirts are clear of all con- tamination with the world. The world is sick and fully aware of the fact; the reason that it fails to apply to the church for the balm is that, too often, the line of demarcation is so faintly drawn as to be scarcely discernible. The change of atmosphere would be so slight that the benefit, if any, would be inappreciable. The den of thieves must be transformed into the temple before the benediction of the Savior will rest upon it.

"Our fathers have trespassed." This was said not in a spirit of disrespect to the dead, but with penitent humility on the part of the living. Sincere confession is productive of true contrition. This is the idea of acknowledging our faults; not its effect upon God, but its effect upon ourselves is the end desired. The call of the king was to arouse the people to an attempt to redeem the record of the past generation. Fortunately the status of the priesthood had been elevated somewhat since the time of Joash, and the summons were obeyed. Then began a mighty destruction of all the traces of idolatry that had crept into God's house. The doors were opened; the sanctuary repaired, all the rubbish accumulated throughout years of disuse and ill use was carried out; then, and not till then, did Hezekiah say, "It is in my heart to make a covenant." When a man has shown his love and faith by his works, then it is in order for him to make a profession of the same. Sad to tell, in many instances the order is reversed, and a halt called after a profession only. "Not every one that sayeth 'Lord, Lord;' but he that doeth."

Hezekiah was fully competent to advise his subjects; and the advice he gave was well worthy of their following—"My sons, be not now negligent." They could not refute the wisdom of these words by any argumentum ad hominem; non-negligence had been the motto of his own life; he was the embodiment of the principle; in the first month of the first year was the time for him to do a thing. The reason assigned for thus doing is as strong as the precept is admirable. "For the Lord has chosen you." What an exalted view of their high office. Their duty was not to stand before an inanimate altar and mumble forth a few meaningless phrases; but to stand before the Lord, to serve the God of heaven, and burn incense whose fragrance should rise up to the throne and, being well-pleasing, should cause the stream of blessing to flow. So God has chosen us. This is the ground of all true service. "I beseech you, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies." "We love him, because he first loved us." The service prompted by any other motive than that of love is not that of a child, but that of a slave. We are not to be the slaves, but the sons of God. As such he has chosen us to a life devoted to his worship here, and a life of immortality hereafter. We must not now be negligent; now is the day of salvation. If a man neglect the day of salvation, surely he will perish in the night of destruction.

Reader, forget the negligence of your past life, but remember that God has chosen you and take heed to he not now negligent.

Terrebonne parish has a cash balance of over $7,000 on hand.

The city council of Natchitoches has ordered a steam fire engine that will cost $3,200.

Baton Rouge is rejoicing in hope of having new wharves, for both high and low water.

A new postoffice named Tilton, in honor of Gov. Nicholls, has been established in Morehouse parish.

The apparatus of the Abbeville fire department will soon be improved by the purchase of a $3,900 steam fire engine and hose carriage.

The American, of Lake Charles, says: "There are no less than ten new residences going up north of the depot, within the corporate limits."

As a result of the recent heavy purchases of timber lands in the vicinity of Delhi by a Northern syndicate, and the certain establishment of a large wood-working plant there, to turn out furniture as well as other articles, that town is on a boom. The company will, it is understood, embark in the manufacture of timber on a very large scale.

The Terrebonne grand jury for the May term of the district court said the following in regard to taxation: "We find the total tax levy of the parish to be over $65,000, or upward of 40 mills on the dollar. It speaks well for our generous soil, for we have no manufacturers that can endure this enormous charge; but badly for the Legislature who laid this heavy burden on us."

The largest land sales ever recorded in Rapides parish were made recently, being 8,403.84 acres of pine land, situated east, northeast and southeast of Alexandria, and known as a portion of the Wilson tract, was sold by H. L. Daigre, real estate agent, to T. W. Parker, of Griggsville, Ill., for the sum of $42,000. Mrs. M. J. Waters sold to Julius Levin 10,876 acres of pine land on the north side of the Red river for $29,690.

Railroad Surveying at Alexandria.—W. A. Dailing, assistant engineer of the Kansas, Northern and Gulf railroad, crossed the river this morning with a full force of men to run the second preliminary survey of the route of the road from the site of the Military Institute to the marble quarry in Winn parish, a distance of forty-five miles from the proposed crossing of Red river, opposite the Morgan depot. It will take him about four weeks to complete same when he makes the final survey.

Iberia Votes Special Railroad Tax.—The election for the special railroad tax of 5 mills for ten years took place recently, and resulted in a victory for the tax. There were 214 votes cast for the tax and five against. There are on the assesment rolls 459 qualified voters, which gives the special tax proposition an actual majority of fourteen over all the opposition.

A fire in Centerville, on the night of May 25, destroyed two stores.

A tremendous hail and rain storm visited the vicinity of Columbus recently. Much damage to crops is reported.

The revival held in Hazlehurst by Rev. G. S. Inge resulted in the addition of 100 members to the various churches.

About 500 feet of the L. and N. bridge at the Rigolets was destroyed by fire last week. Travel was interrupted for two days.

The Enterprise Development Company has been organized for the purpose of erecting furnaces and other industries in that enterprising little city.

Parties are in the city prospecting, with a view to the establishment of a cotton and small fruit basket factory. Other parties are also considering the building and equipment of a tight head barrel factory. Should these be located in our midst, they will mean the employment of forty or fifty white skilled operatives.—Mississippian, Jackson.

The people of Hancock county have every reason to be proud of the county and its splendid management. The outlook was never brighter than it is today. We have $15 000 in the treasury and do not owe one cent. There is not a county in the State that is in a better financial condition than ours, and at our meeting in August we propose to make a reduction in the taxes and lighten the load carried by the poor taxpayer.

There's a patent medicine which is not a patent medicine—paradoxical as that may sound. It's the discovery! the golden discovery of medical science! It's the medicine for you—tired, run-down, exhausted, nerve-wasted men and women; for you, sufferers from diseases of skin or scalp, livor or lungs—its chance is with every one, its season always, because it aims to purify the fountain of life—the blood—upon which all such diseases depend. The medicine is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The makers of it have enough confidence in it to sell it on trial. That is—you can get it from your druggist, and if it doesn't do what it's claimed to do, you can get your money back, every cent of it. That's what its makers call taking the risk of their words.

Tiny, little, sugar-coated granules, are what Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are. The best Liver Pills ever invented; active, yet mild in operation; cure sick and bilious headaches. One a dose.

PROHIBITION NECESSARY.—More and more is the conviction forcing itself upon the minds of earnest men that there is but one sound and sure basis for aggressive work against the liquor traffic, in the legislative line, and that is on the basis of absolute prohibition. So long as the State and the people, through the State, give a legal recognition to the liquor traffic in the shape of license, so long will there be an insuperable obstacle in the way of the emancipation of the race from the slavery of the drink habit. In the light of all past and present experiences, it is vain and useless to talk of further compromises with the drink traffic. The policy of compromise has availed nothing to stay the tide of misery and woe rising from the sale of strong drink. In the face of all license laws, high and low, drunkenness, and all the crimes and diseases incident to intemperance, have been increasing from year to year. It is only where the policy of prohibition has prevailed that there has been any certain and appreciable diminution in the evils of intemperance. The lesson is plain, and the Christian Church and all Christian men will do well to heed it. It is worse than vanity to endeavor to overthrow a power so strongly entrenched and so Satanic in character as the liquor traffic by nibbling at the edges of it. We must aim at its vital part. We must strike our blows at its life.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. E. Pittston, Mo., writes: "I Ask For Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair."

THE LAST DAYS!

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 35 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.

This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., Editor,

Thursday, June 4, 1891.

Briefs.

Rev. J. B. Gambrell, editor-in-chief of the Southern Baptist Record, gave some pertinent and wholesome lessons on the negro to the members present at the Baptist Anniversary at Cincinnati recently. A few more such talks in that latitude are greatly needed.

It is the plain and positive duty of every Christian in Louisiana to enter right now upon the campaign against the Lottery, and to work and pray for its defeat, and to keep this up until the abomination is buried forever beneath the patriotic votes of her insulted citizens.

A writer in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, speaking of our church in California, says there are fewer "dead-heads" and a larger percentage of the membership that attend church than in any section of the church in which he has labored, and that the Methodists pay the Methodist bills. There is no help from outsiders.

Mr. Spurgeon is severe on ministers who undertake the duties of this most sacred calling without proper qualifications. He used this language in one of his lectures to his students: "I heard one say the other day that a certain preacher had no more gifts for the ministry than an oyster, and in my own judgment that was a slander on the oyster, for that worthy bivalve shows great discretion in his openings and knows when to close."

Our friends at Clarksdale, Miss., have started in good earnest to build a new church. It is to be the finest in the Delta, to cost not less than ten thousand dollars, and to be named, "Randolph Methodist Episcopal Church, South," in honor of our enterprising and popular pastor, Rev. J. A. Randolph. The Board of Trustees and Building Committee have been appointed, and a Subscription Committee has already secured a large amount, and the work is moving off very gratifyingly. We are glad to chronicle just such news, and we congratulate the Clarksdale Methodists, as well as Presiding Elder Standifer and Pastor Randolph.

Since Conference some preachers have sent fifty to a hundred new names. What's the effect? The ministers have crowds, the stewards are smiling and the parsonage is crammed with pickles, preserves, provisions. Revivals are bursting out.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

The total white membership in the South is 1,235,765, the colored membership is 1,154,138. The white churches number 16,091; the colored churches, 10,649. The value of church property is placed at $13,382,359; of educational endowment at $2,412,250, and of educational property at $4,250,835. There are in the South 20 colleges, 27 academies, 29 female seminaries; the pupils in all numbering 11,716.

It does seem that the important articles and church news found in this Conference organ, week by week, which are approved and so helpful to pastors, should be read by the entire church. Every lover of the church, every man who writes—every man who reads—should labor to get every other Methodist to take the paper. A correspondent writes a good article and the 8,800 subscribers are profited by it. The cause of Christ is helped. But there are 20,000 who know nothing of it. No wonder the church goes one-sided. No wonder that appeals to duty are not responded to. The people do not hear.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

The Lottery Amendment.

It is an anomalous state of things that compels the people of Louisiana to vote as to whether they will accept as a part of their supreme law an institution which has been outlawed by nearly every State in the Union, and which has been excluded from the privileges of the mails by special statute of the United States Congress! To a Christian man it seems absurd that he must use his right of suffrage on a question which the enlightened conscience of the age has pronounced an unmitigated evil! It only shows that wickedness no longer stands on the defensive. It has entered upon an aggressive line of policy and will push itself to its goal if not defeated. The better element of Louisiana's population has fought with determination to protect our people from the outrage of having to vote on a proposition emanating from such a disreputable source; but so far it has failed.

We have been taught to believe that our courts are set for the defense of the people; that their existence was a protection against everything contra bonos mores. We were taught that the courts were a protection against the iniquity of individuals and corporations, and even Legislatures. Having learned these lessons, we expected that when the Lottery amendment came before the courts the judges would look at the case from the standpoint of public morals as involving public safety and prosperity. Other courts, perhaps, as wise as ours, have passed upon the Lottery, and their decisions have been uniformly against it, because they say it is one of the most fascinating and insidious and baneful forms of gambling. Gambling is a vice that every right-minded man desires to see killed, and every court throughout the civilized world gives it a whack across the front upon every opportunity. Our court seems to have taken a different view. It does not seem to have any idea that it is set for the defense of the people against the outrageous acts of a Legislature controlled in the interests of a gambling institution. And so we are compelled to vote upon the question whether we will make gambling a part of our supreme law!

The proposition before the people is so to amend the Constitution of the State as to legalize and authorize the Lottery to carry on its business for twenty-five more years. An amendment to the Constitution becomes a part of the Constitution, and, of course, a part of the supreme law of the land. There is no law above the Constitution. That instrument governs everything in the State. It governs courts and Legislatures, as well as the people. It is the supreme code under which all laws are enacted and by whose provisions all laws are interpreted. If the people vote that this amendment shall be made to our Constitution, that vote will place the Lottery beyond the reach of the courts, beyond even the reach of the Legislature, and make it the most potent governing force in the State for the next twenty-five years. By that vote gambling will be elevated to the throne of power in Louisiana. Everyone who has any knowledge of history and of human nature knows that nothing governs with a despotism so merciless as the "greed of gain." There is nothing it will not do to accomplish its end. The "good of the people" is not that end. The Lottery papers may talk about building levees, supporting hospitals, educating the young, etc., but every man knows that the Lottery's aim is money, and money only. It has drunk of the Circean cup, and now its thirst rages worse than the thirst of a tiger who has tasted blood. Some people are foolish enough to think that the million and a quarter dollars offered as the price of its existence will more than counterbalance the evil of that existence! The fact is patent to every student of the human heart that the "counterbalance" will be exactly on the other side. For our part, we would rather license the Lottery for the original sum of $40,000 a year, than to accept the present proposition of $1,250,000. This is the reason: The fact that it has to pay so much per year will by just that much increase the rigor and inhumanity of its exactions in every direction! Having been placed in the Constitution, and thus made the supreme governing power in the State, and having to pay so largely for that position, it will rule with a despotism that will take savage delight in crushing to atoms everything opposed to it. Hence we say to the readers of the ADVOCATE in Louisiana, Don't vote to place such a tyrant above all laws and courts and Legislatures. More hereafter.

Religious Work among the Young People.

We think that our church, in common with the other churches, is coming to a clearer conception of the supreme importance of its work among the young people. Just at this time there seems to be a healthy stir among all evangelical denominations on this subject. This is evidenced by the fact that a new interest has been awakened in Sunday-school work, and by the other fact that Christian Endeavor Societies and Epworth Leagues are springing up on all sides. This century has been called "Woman's Century;" but if things progress as they have of late years started off, the end of the century will demonstrate it to be the "Children's Century." Never before has the attention of the "powers that be" in State and in Church been so industriously and so effectually turned to the condition and training and development of the physical, mental and spiritual being of the youth of Christendom. The finest and best-trained intellects are concentrating their powers here. Men and women of broadest culture and deepest spirituality see here the largest field for the most profitable employment of all their energies, and they are consecrating their time and talents to this work with an enthusiasm which has never been excelled. The deep sympathies of the church are beginning, in a fresh form, to entwine themselves more and more firmly about childhood and youth. It seems that the church has at last resolved to do what Jesus Christ did when he began his ministry—to take the children in her arms and bless them. All this is specially gratifying, and is the most favorable sign of a brilliant future for the State and the Church.

We believe our own denomination is doing good work along this line. We have been working in the Sunday-school from the beginning of our history; but of late years the character of that work has improved in quality, so that now it is better than it ever was before. In the opinion of the men and women who study the work, it is still susceptible of improvement. We are satisfied that the improvements will suggest themselves to the students of the movement. Progression is the law of life and work, and the workers are the first to discover defects and the first to discover the remedies for those defects. The progressive teacher goes to his work with both eyes and both ears open, and, finding errors, the heart will not be satisfied until a discovery has been made to correct those errors. Here, then, we have no suggestion to make except such as is implied in the foregoing sentences.

The Epworth League among us is yet in the experimental stage. It is simply in process of inauguration as yet. Including, as it does, several distinct lines of work, it will require much tact and great patience to develop it into a useful institution. Pastors and those who are at its head as leaders will find that they must needs exercise large wisdom and unfailing courage to keep it in proper bounds. We are clearly of the opinion that if the religious feature is not kept predominant, it will fail of its purpose. The first thing to be recognized, and the thing to be emphasized all the way through, is that the League is not separate and distinct from the church, but is a definite part of it. If any other idea prevails, it will run wild with worldly methods and inextricably entangle itself in worldly ways. The literary feature of the League is excellent; but it must be closely guarded and kept subordinate to the fact that the young people are banded together for the special purpose of religious improvement—for advancement in religious knowledge and religious life. All the literature used should have a sure and steady trend in this direction. All the other features of the organization must be made to work to this main end. With our knowledge of human nature, we fear this will not be an easy task, and, therefore, the leaders have need to cultivate the largest patience, while exercising the largest hopefulness and enduring many set-backs and experiencing many failures. The human heart don't take to religion very naturally, and we believe young people have hearts that are exceedingly human.

We have one suggestion to make about the Epworth League work. The central idea of religion is the missionary idea, and in some way this idea should be diligently and regularly studied and the principles it contains should be industriously practiced in the work of the League. In our city and town Leagues we think this feature can be practically carried out to great advantage. If the leaders take proper pains, our young people may not only be taught the theory and history of missions, but may soon become enthusiastic in the practical application of this central idea of religion to cases of need in their own midst. Missionary work is needed everywhere; and what better can we do for our young men and young women than to put them to doing that work? There are two special benefits arising from such work. It secures gospel help and blessings to those who need them, and it secures the worker from backsliding. Speaking of such work, the Apostle Peter says: "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall." Let our Epworth League managers think of these things, and endeavor so to manage the work and exercises of the League as to always secure the predominance of the religious feature of the institution.

Vicksburg, Miss.

Vicksburg, the city of walnut hills, has a population of about 18,000, of which nearly 12,000 are white. Its religious character is represented by its two churches of the M. E. Church, South, with a membership of 600; two Episcopal Churches, one Presbyterian, and one Baptist, whose membership aggregate 600; making our Protestant strength, numerically, 1,200. The Roman Catholics and Jews, with a cathedral of the former and synagogue of the latter, have about the same number of attendants. The Protestant Sunday-schools have about 800 children enrolled, of which one-half are in our Methodist schools. Lately we have established a mission school in North Vicksburg, under the care of Rev. Vandenburg, a zealous local preacher. This enterprise is quite promising, and steps are being taken to build a chapel there. Bro. W. B. Lewis, preacher in charge of the Crawford Street M. E. Church, the parent of Methodism in this section, has a membership of 450 and is well organized in all branches of work, including an Epworth League, which has met with a loss in the death of its late president, Bro. W. M. Kline. This Sunday-school, of which he was the efficient and beloved superintendent, also suffers for some one to succeed Bro. Kline. God will, as usual, supply the workers places as he calls his laborers home.

Bro. F. M. Keen, preacher in charge of the South Vicksburg Church, is on his first year's work, as is Bro. Lewis. They find much time consumed in getting acquainted with their large congregations and fields of toil. Bro. Lewis, in common with many pastors of city charges, feels the need of a young preacher to meet the numerous demands for Christian work in our cities. He says Bro. Carter's editorials on the fearful conditions of city populations are to the point, and should lead to the concentration of missionary efforts in the placing of strong forces in the cities.

The longing of every preacher who comes in contact with the unsaved throngs that meet in his work—particularly of a city pastor—is that he be the means to make his church, by the help of God, the means of saving these lost souls. But with the greater part of the church inert, his efforts but feebly seconded, he often feels the difficulties insurmountable. Such is felt to be the case at Vicksburg. To do something to stay the progress of sin, a few city pastors of Vicksburg are standing by Bro. Cobb in an effort to establish a gospel mission in the front part of the city. Bro. F. M. Keen's church was the outgrowth of such a wise movement. He is vigorously pushing his efforts to broaden and deepen his work, and will, doubtless, show good results at Conference, as will Bro. W. B. Lewis, who is doing wisely and well, preparing carefully for a future reaping.

The church-building of the Crawford St. Methodist Church does not compare favorably with the other church edifices of Vicksburg. It looks as if it has stood unimproved for nearly half a century. Occupying one of the best and most desirable locations in the city, it should give place to an elegant structure, such as would show Methodism in its true type. We are a prosperous, progressive denomination, and our churches, parsonages and colleges should speak our character. Bishops and leading ministers, as well as laymen, have urged the importance of erecting first-class buildings for these purposes. We hope our Vicksburg brethren will soon show that they are abreast of the tide of improvement that is everywhere evident in Mississippi. M.

The chairman of one of the missionary meetings in London gave the same advice we have been giving ever since we took charge of this paper. He said that "every man, woman and young person in their congregations who were known to be able to subscribe should be kindly and respectfully asked to do so." We contend that this is the only solution of the church finance question.

A man who had worked and schemed for years to get into a certain position finally succeeded. His first public utterance was that he felt it was the call of the providence of God. There is something just here that mystifies us. Were his efforts a part of that providence, or what? Will somebody clear away the mists for us?

Personal and Otherwise.

During the term just ended of the United States Supreme Court 617 cases were disposed of.

Bro. H. P. Barnes, for thirty years a good and useful member of our church at Crystal Springs, Miss., died May 30.

A private note from Rev. H. M. Duboso, editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, says, "All our church interests in the West are in the ascendant."

Dr. R. V. Foster has been selected by the Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly to prepare a commentary on the whole Bible. That's a big thing for one man.

Rev. T. W. Adams, of Pearlington, called on us last Saturday. His work is in good condition, though he has been much hindered by an epidemic of measles in his flock.

A note from Dr. J. B. Walker says: "I am in every way much improved. I propose to go to New Orleans, June 6, and be in my pulpit Sunday morning, the Lord willing."

An additional report from Bro. Backus, of Heidelburg, says that the collection on Children's Day amounted to $8.10, and two boys under twelve years old joined the church.

Joseph Newboner, the Wisconsin agent of the Louisiana State Lottery, has been overtaken in using the mails to dispose of Lottery tickets, and put in jail until he pays $3,000 fine.

Dr. Briggs, about whom so much is being published now, sailed last Saturday for England, where he will take a special course of study. He will return about the middle of September.

The Louisiana Press Convention had a delightful session at Ruston last week. The Convention was pleased with Ruston, and Ruston was pleased with the Convention. It was a case of "mutual tickling."

The Standing Committee of the Diocese of Mississippi has shown its narrowness by voting against the ordination of Phillips Brooks, as Bishop of Massachusetts. Phillips Brooks is a sight bigger than that whole diocese!

We have received the first number of the Musical Advocate and Family Journal, edited by R. M. McIntosh and J. W. Burke, Macon, Ga. This new venture makes a sprightly beginning, and we wish it great success. It is issued monthly at $1 a year.

Rev. J. N. Carothers, a well-known minister of the Presbyterian Church, died in Houston, Miss., May 25, highly honored and respected. He was eighty-six years of age, and was an active preacher for sixty years, and served the Presbyterian Church in Houston forty-one years.

Gen. W. S. Featherstone, of Holly Springs, Miss., died last week of paralysis. He was seventy years old, and had been a prominent man in Mississippi for fifty years, serving his State acceptably in her Conventions and Legislatures and in Congress and in the Confederate Army.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. B. F. Alexander writes: "Our meeting at Morgan City and Berwick came to a final close on last night. Forty-six persons applied for membership, and forty-four of them were duly received. We begin at Patterson on next Sunday-night. Bro. Blocker is to assist."

—Bro. Reed, of Natchez, Miss., writes: "Our pastor, Rev. W. E. Ballard, is still in poor health, and unable to attend to his general duties. We have, by a peculiar providence, however, been keeping up our church services and holding our congregation and members together. About the middle of next month Rev. J. M. Hawley, of Vanderbilt University, will be here, to remain for three months as assistant pastor."

—Rev. J. E. Buck reports: "The second Quarterly Conference for the Rural Hill circuit convened at Smyrna, May 23 and 24. Rev. S. M. Thames, P. E., presided to the delight of all. His preaching was capital. The interests of the church were looked into and, we trust, quickened. Collection for ministerial support moderately good. In addition to pastor's salary, $77.50 were raised to buy him a horse. May God bless the good people, temporally and spiritually, for their liberality!"

—Mrs. Laura L. Chevalier writes from Vidalia, La.: "A visit to Jonesville in the cause of temperance was not quite a failure; yet it was the first town or city where the ladies failed to organize. I was invited by the superintendent, W. H. Latham, to attend the Sabbath-school organized by Mr. W. H. Latham, with an enrollment of fifty scholars, and officered as follows: Miss Mary Knauer, secretary and treasurer; Miss Elouise Yanoy, organist; teachers: Misses Mary Knauer, Betty Findly and Minnie Guy. The harvest is white; the laborers few."

—Rev. R. A. Burroughs writes from Okolona station, North Mississippi Conference: "After a long confinement to my bed and room with that fearful disease, rheumatism, I write you a short account of our church work here. Last Sunday was observed as Children's Day; changed from the day set apart by the church, with the hope that the paster could be able to be present, and, through the goodness of God, I was there, and let me say it was good to be there. The church was beautifully decorated, and the exercises were grand. Superintendent Trice seemed to be full to overflowing, and some of us felt that heaven and earth were together while the little children sang and recited the pieces that had been given to them. A handsome collection was taken. I am glad to be able to report myself able for work again. We are expecting a grand revival when Rev. G. S. Inge comes. Pray for us. Our church is in good condition."

—Rev. J. H. Brown, of Lecompte and Evergreen, writes: "I find some things in this section of Louisiana very much like they were in portions of Mississippi in which I have served the church. In some respects I find things very unlike where I have been in Mississippi. For instance, I never saw in Mississippi a dozen wagons hauling wood nor a base-ball club perform on Sunday. These things I have seen within the few months that I have spent in Louisiana. In some other respects the difference is not apparent. For instance, we have here, as in Mississippi, some of the poorest and most trifling Methodists!—little sickly cases. We also have here some of the most staunch and loyal Methodists; some that know as well how to look after the preacher's interests and shew their faith by their works as any people anywhere. This is the most stormy country in which it has ever been my fortune to live. Indeed, before we recover from the shock of one another comes upon us. We expect to have a District Conference some time during the year within the bounds of this charge, and we shall be glad to have you in attendance."

The Profitable Pecan.

A GOOD CROP FOR YOUNG PEOPLE TO PLANT.

ITS MOST PROFITABLE RETURNS.

By invitation of the Executive Committee of the Mississippi Horticultural Society, Col. W. R. Stuart, owner of the famous pecan groves of Ocean Springs, prepared the following interesting paper:

Whatever may be said of forest trees for shade, shelter and ornament, I confess to a special regard for the nut bearers.

Pecan culture is my hobby. I know nothing particular about nut-bearing trees in general. I have had some experience in pecan culture, but do not know it all by a great deal. I do know that pecan culture is the safest and best investment in all our land. When I was fifty-six I bought the largest and best paper-shell pecans I could find, paying $1 per pound for them, and planted the nuts. When sixty-eight I got $305; when sixty-nine I received $700 to $800. This year I was seventy on November 18, and I will get $1,500 to $2,000 from the sale of my young trees and nuts. One tree gave me two years ago 117 pounds, which I sold for $117. Last year I got only eight nuts from the same tree. This year I will get about 150 pounds. Pecans have off years. A planter putting out 500 trees in a grove, ought to plant 100 trees every year, then he will have plenty of pecans every year. Every species of nuts, acorns, pecans, hickory nuts, etc., should be planted, as soon as possible after fully ripe and matured: kept too long they become dry.

In planting pecans, it is wisdom to select such varieties as are fruitful, large and of best quality. Plant the pecan nut where you wish the tree to stand permanently, I think is best, or in the nursery, as you please. Cut the tap root at one year old, before planting out in the grove. Properly transplanted and cultivated, pecan trees will show a little fruit in seven years. In ten years they will come into profitable bearing. The pecan is a beautiful shade tree.

The subject of pecan growing is becoming vastly interesting all over the Gulf States, for growing the very large hard-shell and paper-shell pecan is a very profitable business. In raising the valuable nuts to supply the markets of the world, the point is to make no mistake in the beginning. Plant trees produced only from large, choice seed. There is no need to emigrate to California if we desire to grow nuts. We have a variety indigenous to the Mississippi Valley, which will always sell for more per pound than the English walnut, and it is much superior in all respects to the latter. (I need not tell you that I allude to the pecan.) A grove of pecans will cost less and bring much better returns than the walnut. The demand for the former is increasing every year.

Besides there can be no danger of overstocking the market for years and years, as England, France and Europe generally know as yet little about the pecan.

The extinction of our native groves is only a question of time, as there is no special protection given them. The nut gatherers destroy hundreds of them every Fall cutting them down in order to obtain the nuts more easily. What vandalism! I advise our young men to plant pecans.

The young tree should be set at least 40, 50 or even 60x60 feet if the land is very rich.

The trees must be worked and kept clean for five or six years. They should be forced and kept growing when cultivating your crops. You work and care for your trees in this way, and you will have in ten years from seed a good paying pecan grove, and then what a pasture you will have for your Jersey cattle!

The Stuart pecan, soft shell, is about three inches long by an inch and a half thick, and commands the very highest price in the markets. A great number of people in this section are becoming interested in pecan culture. In the course of ten or fifteen years a grove of twenty acres will bring in more money than any cotton plantation in the country. Plant a grove for the benefit of your children; it will be a grand inheritance.

An Eastern Steamship and Colonization Company have written to the General Passenger and Ticket Agent of the Queen and Crescent Route to find for them a tract of land, in either Kentucky or Tennessee, of about one hundred and fifty thousand acres. The land to be suitable for truck farming; also for raising corn, wheat, trees and shrubs, and near enough to railroad to make shipping facilities handy. Anyone having a body of land suitable for this purpose will please communicate with the undersigned, giving price, terms, location, and all particulars.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

BABY LOGIC.

BY ELIZABETH W. BELLAMY.

She was ironing her dolly's new gown,
Maid Marian four years old,
With her brows puckered down
In a painstaking frown
Under her tresses of gold.

'Twas Sunday, and nurse coming in Exclaimed in a tone of surprise:
"Don't you know it's a sin
Any work to begin
On the day that the Lord sanctifies?"

Then lifting her face like a rose,
Thus answered this wise little tot:
"Now don't you suppose
The good Lord he knows
This little iron ain't hot?"

—Wide-Awake.

Some Things Found First in America.

Rev. C. E. Cline, in the Central, writes: "Allow me to suggest, boys, that you clip this out and paste it in your scrapbook, for the information it contains may not be so easily obtained elsewhere.

"No more important events have occurred in the history of the world than the discovery and improved cultivation of Indian corn, Irish potatoes, and the American turkey. They have exercised a most beneficial influence on the general welfare of our race, increasing national wealth a thousandfold, and preventing the oft-menacing famines among the different peoples of the earth before these articles of food blessed our world.

"Corn, or maize, is of American origin, and has only been introduced into the old world since the discovery of the new. Attempts have been made to prove the contrary, but it is, I think, well settled that our common corn was not used or known off the American continent previous to the year 1500. Travelers in Asia and Africa are wholly silent on the subject of corn before the discovery of America, and we are told that in the Hebrew and Sanskrit languages there are no names for this plant. An car of corn was once found in a sarcophagus at Thebes, but it is said to have been placed there by the trick of an Arab impostor. And if corn had existed in ancient Egypt, it would doubtless have been seen in some of the monuments, and would have been connected, as are all other remarkable plants, with their religious ideas.

"When America was discovered corn was one of the staples of agriculture from Central America to the St. Lawrence river. Every Indian village had a patch of corn about it, which the natives cultivated in a rude manner, to be sure; gathered it in autumn and piled it in heaps on the ground.

"In Mexico the Montezumas had a goddess who bore a name derived from corn, and the first fruits of the corn harvest were offered to her. Although America has been explored by a great number of botanists and naturalists, the writer having traversed this land from New Orleans, at the mouth of the Mississippi river, to the ice fields near Mt. St. Elias in Alaska, none have found corn growing as a wild plant. It has always been cultivated in its present form at least, and it is yet to be determined from what particular form of wild plant it did originate. Its origin may yet come from archæological discoveries, and it may never be known further than that it was first found on American soil.

"America, too, is the original home of the 'Irish' potato. It was both a wild and cultivated plant from Chili to Mexico when the western continent was discovered. It was not known then in the territory which now comprises the United States. In 1585, Sir Walter Raleigh, or rather Thomas Herriott, his companion in several voyages, carried some potatoes to England from Virginia, but other voyagers had, no doubt, carried the seed from which these were grown from South America to Virginia. In 1822, a traveler named Alexander Caldcleugh sent to the London Horticultural Society some potatoes which he found in the ravines about Valparaiso. These tubers, or 'spuds,' as they are called out here in Oregon, were planted in London, and produced first in Europe what is now known as the true Irish potato; though it had been grown long before that in Virginia and other places on American soil.

"Like the tomato, the potato was for a long while not appreciated as an article of diet, till a great famine prevailed in Ireland, the home of unlooked-for misfortunes, when the potato was sent by ship-loads as a coarse, cheap food, where it proved by necessity to be a most wholesome thing to eat. Now we think the meal is incomplete unless we have on the table potatoes. It was in this way that they derived the name 'Irish' potatoes. Another thing of great value, found first on American soil, is the 'Thanksgiving' turkey. The turkey, taken altogether, is the grandest of all birds. We have several varieties now, such as the black, gray, and bronze turkeys, but these are all from the original wild species found in the woods in great numbers when America was discovered. These birds are still abundant in the woods of Arkansas and southern Missouri.

"Our turkey, with our corn and potatoes, have been carried to all parts of the world to bless the race, and we are quite willing it should be so.

"I can not close this article without an expression of sorrow that so good a blessing as corn should by the wicked devices of men be converted into whisky. At Peoria, Ill., more whisky is manufactured than at any other place on earth. Hundreds of thousands of bushels of Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas corn are annually there made into the vilest stuff imaginable. For one, I believe the boys and girls now growing up in our Sunday-schools and churches will some day put a stop to this miserable business."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Going to Springfield, the other day, there was seated in the car one of Holyoke's legal lights, accompanied by his wife and six-year-old son and heir, whose sole ambition in life at present is to learn to whistle. The window was open, and the boy had been holding on to his hat with one hand for fear it would blow away. The conductor coming in slammed the door, and for an instant the boy let go his hat. His father reached round through the window and whisked it off his head. The boy was disconsolate.

"Look straight ahead and whistle for it, and it will come back," said his father.

"I can't whistle, I'm too mad."

"Well, then, I'll try," and the dignified lawyer whistled a few bars of "Annie Rooney," and shortly afterward placed the hat on the boy's head, whose tears were now turned to smiles. Then he stood up in the seat, and snatching his father's new eight-dollar tile from his head deliberately threw it out of the car window, saying: "Whistle for it again, papa."—Northampton Journal.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

How to Read.—When a boy I began to read very earnestly, but at the foot of every page I read I stopped and obliged myself to give an account of what I had read on that page. At first I had to read it three or four times before I got my mind firmly fixed; but I compelled myself to comply with the plan, until now after I have read a book through once I can almost recite it from beginning to end. It is a very simple habit to form in early life, and is invaluable as a means of making our reading serve the best purpose.—Lord Macaulay.

HOUSEHOLD.

The True Home Spirit.

The hardest questions that come to us are those that strive to settle a balance, fair and just, between our several duties. How far are we justified in excluding all outside questions from our active interests? And, still harder, how shall we decide the division of interests in the home, keeping a loving, firm touch on each? We all see homes and husbands suffer from too much housekeeping. We all know women who perceive no difference between housekeeping and homekeeping. That man whose wife knows the difference between the two professions, and chooses to belong to the latter, is a fortunate man. Perhaps no question that faces a wife is harder to decide than how she shall be a perfect mother and yet a perfect wife. It is so hard for a mother to educate herself to a little wholesome neglect of her children, that she may be the companion of their father. Yet how can a man find companionship in his home if the mother of his children becomes their nurse at the expense of every other duty or pleasure?

The saddest experience that can come to any husband or wife is an acquiescent separation, and this experience is lived in too many homes. One, and sometimes both, are looking forward to the time when the first days of their married life will be lived over again; when there will be more money to hire servants, or when the children will be grown. If we could count on the future, there would be a degree of safety in trusting this future time for happiness. But death, mental growth for one and not for the other, and loss of mental power are the terrible possibilities that stand in the path of that future. Each month, yes, each day, is a link in a chain, or a bar between two souls who are interdependent for their happiness, responsible for the happiness of all who share the home or house they create.

A mother who sacrifices her husband's companionship to the children that are alike the bond and the burden of each is not a wise mother; the short-sightedness that is at the root of her misconception prevents the clear spiritual perception necessary to the true mother. The first essential in every home is love, and it is not the quantity in the home, but the quality and disposition of it, that makes its happiness. No outer and visible bond can hold the souls of a husband and wife in unison. Companionship, close and intimate, that has in it the spiritual power to shut out every object in life at times except each other, and find heaven and God in those moments, is the only true relation between husband and wife. The children are better loved, more wisely governed, more spiritually trained, when the two souls made one by love are their guardians. That is a home rather than a house where such love is, and the children are nearer perfection when it is a united force, not a divided power, that makes the law and light under which they live.—Christian Union.

The Necessity of Independence for Woman.—Even supposing that young women do not find the bread of dependence to be either scant in quantity or bitter in quality, they can not safely count upon its continuing sweet and abundant. Wealth may come and wealth may go. It is an every-day occurrence for men to be thrown out of employment, or to become disabled, or to die. What would become of the clinging vine if the sturdy oak should by no fault of its own be transformed into a broken reed? One's heart aches for the ornamental daughters of suddenly improverished business men, for grief-stricken widows whose "prop" has been taken from them, and who have waited till they were thrown on their own resources before they discovered how useless these resources were. Is it not strange that parents who give their daughters the costliest education and the rarest luxuries, fail to insure their thorough equipment against the danger that may befall any woman—the danger of impending pauperism? A practical knowledge of some work by which a living may be earned is the first necessity of every self-respecting woman.—Wives and Daughters (London, Canada).

SCIENTIFIC.

Artesian Wells.

Whether water can be obtained by artesian borings in any district, or not, depends upon the geological structure. All rocks contain more or less water. Sandy formations absorb water mechanically, and fine sand can take in about one-third of its bulk of water, and if a well be sunk into it, and regularly pumped from, nearly all of this moisture can be drawn out. Chalk, and similar rocks, which are made up of very fine particles, closely compacted together, contain a very large proportion of water, but from the capillary attraction of this rock, very little of this water will drain into a well sunk into it. But as there are often wide crevices in chalk rocks, through which water flows in much greater quantity than the rock can retain in its pores, wells sunk into chalk formations often secure water. There is another formation, that of the clays, through which water does not percolate, and a well sunk in this rock can not secure water. In the geological strata of the earth, the veins which are impervious to water and those through which the water readily penetrates may occur in alternating layers, and when in this manner a pervious bed of earth lies between two impervious ones, it is plain that we have a formation altogether favorable to the objects of the artesian well. For, if a perforation be made through the retentive rock, into the water-logged strata below, the moisture there contained will rise through the bore to a height depending upon the pressure of water which has accumulated in the confined space between the two impervious veins. When, as so often happens, especially when the surface of the country is uneven, the vein of water yielding sand may run beneath the surface of the earth to a level far above the point where the boring has been made, the water will rise rapidly in the well to the surface of the earth, and often higher, and will then flow continuously by hydrostatic pressure. As veins of sand or pervious rock run through the earth everywhere, there seem to be few places where the process of boring can not secure water at less or greater depth. Many artesian wells have been made in the deserts; in Sahara a number of wells made in this way are transforming a perfectly arid land into a fertile, beautiful country. And as surface waters are continually percolating into the strata from which the artesian well draws, such wells seldom fail, even after many years of usage. There are such wells in the Old World that have been in use for centuries.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Scientific and Practical Knowledge.—Some one has truthfully said that all knowledge is comprised in two classes. The first is that effect of mind which is the result of curiosity, that species of human instinct that prompts us to inquire the reason for everything we see, every action which takes place among others, among all living beings, among the elements and among the celestial bodies. Mankind being endowed with reason, the next impulse is to apply the knowledge so gained to some useful purpose, to produce some benefit to ourselves. The first of these two classes is called "scientific investigation," the second is called "applied science." For instance, we notice for the first time a light from which smoke arises, we investigate, we perceive heat, and that it produces a disagreeable sensation. These are the first scientific facts. We apply the knowledge so gained by resolving never to touch fire. This is applied science. We have employed curiosity to find out the facts. We now employ caution to guard ourselves against damage, and we determine never to touch fire. All knowledge so gained is by this process. We may be told a thousand times that fire will burn, but we feel that that is only theory. We want facts, and we obtain them by a course of scientific investigation. We use these facts and thus gain experience, knowledge, at first scientific, next practical; and these two conditions make up the sum of all knowledge. Science is the foundation, practice the superstructure.—Scientific American.

IN THE SPRING

Avoid Sickness by Purifying the Blood and Toning up the System.

DR. KING'S

Royal Germetuer

Does this more pleasantly, more safely and more surely than any remedy known to medical science.

These Five Things

In which it differs from other medicines account largely for its wondrous popularity:

1. It does not taste like medicine. It is as pleasant as lemonade, and, sweetened, makes a most refreshing drink. Persons who object to all other medicines take this with real pleasure, because it is good.

2. It never nauseates. The most delicate stomach finds in this a perfect remedy without a single objection.

3. It never swaps off one disease for another. It does not set up one form of disease in order to relieve another, as is the case with so many deadly drugs.

4. It does not patch simply. It cures. It reaches, as nothing else does, to the hidden sources of disease in the blood, and removes the cause. It does this with an ease and power that have never been equaled.

5. It is harmless, and may be safely given to a babe one day old. It is free from Alcohol and Opium.

All persons living in a malarial district should keep this great family remedy on hand. It will break any fever in half the time required by quinine and anti-pyrine, and leave none of their unpleasant and hurtful effects.

For Malaria, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sick Headache, Kidney Trouble, and Blood and Skin diseases, there is nothing to be compared with it. For Ladies and Children it is far the best.

OBITUARIES.

COLTHARP—CORA, only child of Charles Coltharp and Mamie B. McClellan, was born Dec. 8, 1886; died April 29, 1891.

Yes, she is gone! Grandfather's playmate, grandmother's pet, auntie's darling, father's and mother's all; their pride, their joy, their comfort; the incentive for every effort, and hope of declining years. The bright little presence that lightened every labor and solaced every hour; the baby smile that filled her mother's life with so much sweetness; the loving heart, the radiant face, the prattling tongue that brought sunshine and gladness into the hearts and home, now sad, lonely and desolate. For, oh! we loved her so, and sigh in vain for a touch of the hand that is vanished, and a sound of the voice that is still." Had she been less lovely in person, mind and heart, it would have seemed less hard to give her up; but, aside from the indulgence of our fondest love, we hoped for so much comfort and happiness in the years which are to come from her wonderful, God-given endowments. However, we may hope that under the Master's hand she will reach higher developments and greater happiness than ever our tenderest love could bestow; that the warp of her life which we so longed to fill may be woven into a pattern of more exquisite beauty than our mortal minds can conceive. For after all "there is no death; what seems so is transition," and earth feels drearier and heaven nearer since our precious Cora is there. AUNTIE.

DAVIS—EISEY DRAUGHON, widow of Louis H. Davis, died in Clinton, La., Dec. 22, 1890, in the seventy-fifth year of her age.

It is indeed joyous to contemplate the future of one so well prepared for death, as was dear Sister Davis. For fifty years her naturally quiet and unobtrusive life was Christian, positive and lustrous. During all these years, crowded, as they were, with a great diversity of experience, she was the same cheerful, loyal, loving, hopeful spirit. The writer's acquaintance with Sister Davis began with and continued through a three years' pastorate of the church in Clinton, La., of which she was a devout and truly helpful member. How often she would lament her lack of ability to do more for the cause of the Master, whom she loved with a constancy and a devotion which challenged the admiration of all who knew her intimately. This writer, saddened and discouraged, has often received fresh courage from her quiet, trustful expressions of approval and commendation. She was not conscious of the impartation of the Spirit of the Blessed Master.

She leaves a widowed daughter, whose life has been sorely saddened by her departure. But soon—yes, very soon—there will be a joyous reunion on the other shore. "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me." C. A. POWELL.

RUSH—SARAH RUSH (nee Smith) was born in Richardson county, N. C., July 27, 1850, and died of pneumonia at her home, near DeKalb, Kemper county, Miss., April 4, 1891, aged forty years eight months and seven days. She was happily married to W. M. Rush, March, 1876. During a meeting at Pleasant Ridge Church, in the summer of 1886, she professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South.

I only knew Sister Rush a few months before her departure from this world, but learned in this short time to regard her as a woman of deep piety, thoroughly consecrated to God. She was regular in her attendance at church, and always seemed to enjoy the preaching of God's Word. Only two Sundays before her death she attended church and partook of the broken body and shed blood of the blessed Savior, with whom she was soon to dwell. From near the beginning of her illness she seemed conscious of approaching death, and talked frequently of her willingness to die and of her hope of heaven. She leaves a husband, one son and a host of relatives and friends to mourn her death. May God help the bereft husband and son to meet the sainted wife and mother in heaven, according to her dying request! R. A. IBELAND, P. C.

MEEK—TOMMIE MEEK was born March 27, 1870, and died Feb. 2, 1891.

He was just growing into manhood with his plans laid for a future of joy and happiness when death came and bore him away. His home had been built and preparations made for his marriage when he was stricken down with la grippe. Though not a member of the church, he was considered a moral young man, and only a few days before he died he expressed his intention of joining the church and being a better man.

May the Lord tenderly heal the wounded hearts of those who loved him! W.

GOWER—Mr. ABEL B. GOWER was born July 10, 1817, and died at his home, near Lake City, Miss., Feb. 13, 1891.

Bro. Gower was not only a member of the church, but was a liberal supporter of it. He was a loving husband, a kind and affectionate father and a true friend. May the Lord sustain the bereaved ones in their hour of deep sorrow! HIS PASTOR.

BROWN—The wife of J. M. Brown departed this life from her home, April 17, 1891, aged nearly fifty-seven years. She was a true member of the M. E. Church, South, for a number of years. She leaves a most beautiful testimony, which will be a great guide for us through this vale of tears.

While life lingered hope whispered that the death angel might leave her with us; but the Savior, who makes no mistakes, called her to a brighter home. How she is missed in the home circle!—but, oh! heaven is brighter and nearer to us since our dear mother is there, resting on the sunny banks of sweet deliverance. She had no fear of death; told us to prepare to meet her in the sweet by-and-by, where we would part no more. When life's pilgrimage is over may we meet our mother and loved ones in that sun-bright clime, where God shall wipe away all tears! While her companion and six children are made to weep, yet we can weep differently to these who have no hope. Her last words were these: "All is well with my soul." May we so live that all will meet her over there, where death can come no more! Is the hope of her daughter, J. L. B.

LLOYD—ETTIE MAY LLOYD, daughter of William and Fannie Cheek, was born near Burtonton, Miss., May 18, 1861. She was married to W. L. Lloyd, Jr., Jan. 23, 1881, and her life-boat safely anchored in the peaceful harbor of eternal rest, April 9, 1891. These dates are embraced in less than twenty-seven years—short time for human life, yet sufficient to develop the attributes of a noble and lovely womanhood. She was a devoted and self-sacrificing wife and mother.

Another home circle is broken, another cherished chair is vacant, another sweet flower from the tree of our affections has faded forever from our view. She leaves a husband, two little boys, mother and sisters to mourn her loss. May God comfort and sustain them, as he alone can do! SISTER.

WILBURN—TOMMIE PORTSE, daughter of Bro. J. C. and Sister Agnes Wilburn, was born Feb. 12, 1890, and died Feb. 11, 1891. Tommie was a good baby, giving her mother almost no trouble, and scarcely ever crying. She was a quiet, gentle, sweet baby—just such an one as it would seem the Savior would have taken up into his arms and blessed. She was the pride and joy of her affectionate parents and the idol of the other children. Her stay was short; but what a bright sunbeam she was to the home circle!

May the Lord, by thus removing her to the heavenly home, draw the hearts of those who loved her closer to his own tenderly sympathetic heart! L.

LYLES—Died, near Loyd's Bridge, La., April 6, 1891, little Lucy, daughter of W. H. and Susan C. Lyles, aged three years three months and twenty-seven days.

She was a child loved by everyone, because of her winning ways and sunny, unselfish disposition. Her death was a sad blow to father and mother and also to the remaining brother and sister—her little brother William "refusing to be comforted." The heart-stricken parents are not without hope, for dear little Lucy is now safe in the arms of him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." G. E. GREENE.

LLOYD—Just as the sun was sinking behind the western horizon, on May 14, the sweet spirit of ROBERTUS ETTIE, little son of W. L. and E. M. Lloyd, passed away, to be planted a bright star in the diadem of the Sun of Righteousness. Too sweet and pure for earth, God took him to be with mama before his innocent soul was blighted by sin; one more link in the golden chain that unites heaven and earth. Heaven comes nearer and grows more attractive as we think of loved ones there. Sorrow not, dear papa. AUNT FANNIE.

SHARP—EDWARD R. SHARP was born Sept. 10, 1885, and died November, 1890.

"That kiss of God," which kills, but does not harm, has been laid upon our beautiful baby boy, and he has been transferred to that lovely world beyond "these chilling winds and gloomy portals." May the hearts that yearn so bitterly to hear his voice again be consoled by the thought that he has gone on before to open the pearly gate for them! MAMA.

A Good Record.

There are few things in this life more satisfactory than a good record. Drs. Starkey & Palen enjoy this distinction. You may examine the results of the use of the Compound Oxygen Treatment during the last 20 years from any point of view, and you will fail to find anything like it in the annals of remedial agents. The Compound Oxygen Treatment began its good work by curing Dr. Starkey himself of a desperate disease. He developed the Treatment for that purpose, and his success in his own case led to trying what might be done for others. What is the result? During 20 years thousands of invalids have been restored to health by its use. Thousands of restored men and women gratefully admit that they have been cured, and if you would like to know whom the Compound Oxygen Treatment has restored to health, all you have to do is to ask Drs. Starkey & Palen. You will get the information without charge, by return mail, and with it the testimonials of many well-known men and women with their names and addresses. If you are sick, you can have some downright encouragement from their testimony. Not so much the encouragement of argument, but the assurance of genuine experience, for the book has many instances to strengthen the most faint-hearted. All the evidence has weight. First, the weight of character, for it comes from men and women of thorough reliability, many of them known throughout the United States, and, secondly, there is the element of quantity, for there are not only all these pages of testimonials, but Drs. Starkey & Palen publish a quarterly review of eight large pages filled with the names and addresses of men and women cured by their treatment. Send for the book or the quarterly. Address Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1520 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

The cross is the concord of Scriptures, and, as it were, the boundary and border-land of old and new things. The cross confederates heaven and earth: the cross rejoins men and angels in the unanimity of their ancient concord. The cross is the death of vice, and the fountain and life of all virtue. The cross is the courage of those that are fighting bravely; the recovery of those that are fallen; the crown of those that are victorious. The cross subjects us to a momentary death, and recompenses us with eternal life.—Peter Damiani.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A monument to the late Robert Morris, LL.D., poet laureate of free masonry, was dedicated at La Grange, Ky., on May 30.

The Louisiana Press Association, after a most harmonious session of nearly a week at Ruston, with pleasing excursions to neighboring towns and institutions, has adjourned to meet next year at Alexandria.

There is much destitution in the coke regions of Pennsylvania. Hundreds of the old miners, who were in the strike, are drifting from one place to another seeking work, but their applications are unheeded or rejected.

Dr. John B. Hamilton, surgeon general of the marine hospital service, has resigned that office and accepted the position of professor of the principles of surgery and surgical pathology in Rush Medical College, Chicago, Ill.

Memorial Day, May 30, was observed in this city. The graves of the Union soldiers at Chalmette National Cemetery were decorated by their surviving comrades and veterans of the Confederate army. Bishop Mallalieu, of the M. E. Church, delivered the oration.

The committee on foreign affairs of the World's Fair decided to send the following named gentlemen to Europe in aid of the Exposition: Major Handy, chief of the bureau of publicity and promotion; Commissioner J. M. Waller, of Connecticut; Secretary Butterworth, of Ohio; Hon. Carl Schurz, of New York, and ex-Senator Eustis, of Louisiana.

It is believed that no action will be taken by the State Department in regard to rescinding the exequatur of Consul Corte, as requested by Mayor Shakspeare and Governor Nicholls, unless Corte should return to New Orleans again as consul. His utterances just prior to his departure for Europe are regarded in official quarters as extraordinary in an official and sufficient ground for his rejection.

Ex-Senator Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, in an interview, said the third party movement will not amount to much in the South. A party founded on one idea, and that a false one, he does not think can survive long. The sub-treasury plan, he says, is not only impracticable and unwise, but is unconstitutional. All that is necessary to destroy it is to discuss it and expose its absurdity and unconstitutionality. The best lawyers in the Senate, he says, agree that it is not constitutional.

The Postoffice Department will in a week or ten days advertise the mail contracts under the mail subsidy act. Officials think New Orleans, with her deep water port and her proximity to Mexican, Central American, Caribbean and West India ports, could, with proper facilities, control the mail service of the gulf. The amount of the first appropriation under the bill is only $1,250,000, but it is said that the postmaster general feels authorized to go ahead with the contracts on a larger scale, relying upon Congress to supply the deficiencies.

FOREIGN.

Three thousand printers are out on a strike in Vienna.

The United States warship Charleston was at Callao, Peru, on May 28. In her chase of the Itata, the insurgent warship, from San Francisco, Cal., to Callao, the United States warship was outdistanced.

The municipal council of Berlin has approved the proposition that, in view of the bad harvest prospects, the Reichstag be asked for an immediate suspension of the tariff on cereals, followed by an early abolition of the taxes.

The expulsions continue in St. Petersburg, where groups of Jews, including well-dressed women, are to be seen in the streets under the escort of gendarmes going to the police stations before they are started for the frontier.

It is reported that Germany and Austria have informed Switzerland, Italy, Roumania and Servia that they must conclude treaties jointly with Germany and Austria, or else renounce the treaties which they have at present with the two countries.

An experiment has been made on a railroad, running from Rome to Frascati, with a new combustible composed of lignite, large quantities of which have been discovered in Italy. The fuel is expected to prove a valuable one, as it will do away with the necessity of the importation of coal.

The recent quarantine of Canadian lambs at Buffalo and other points West, when they are shipped to the United States, has been so severely felt that it is likely some effort will be made to have the quarantine removed. The American market has hitherto been practically the only one for Canadian lambs outside of a comparatively limited number taken for local consumption.

Dispatches received from Chili state that the insurgents, contrary to the promises, now threaten to bombard the city of Valparaiso. In view of these threats the defenses of Valparaiso are being hurriedly strengthened. If the insurgents should attempt to bombard Valparaiso it is more than probable that the foreign ministers there would enter an energetic protest, based on the fact that the foreign interests in that city are larger than the native Chilian interests.

Lord Rothschild has presented a memorial to Lord Salisbury asking the British government to initiate a concerted action by the powers to assist a wholesale emigration of Jews to Palestine. The Rothschilds, the Goldsmiths and all the leading Jews of England concur in the opinion that the settlement of the Jews in Palestine is the best plan. They aim to obtain European recognition of a great wave of emigration as necessary to the solution of the Jewish problem.

"Don't feel well," and yet you are not sick enough to consult a doctor—we will tell you just what you need. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which will lift you out of that uncertain, uncomfortable, dangerous condition, into a state of good health, confidence and cheerfulness.

The Young Preacher—No. 12.

BY AN OLD MINISTER.

PULPIT VARIETY.

God in nature teaches the lesson of variety in countless illustrations. The Bible, beyond all books, abounds in variety. God in calling men to the work of the ministry has largely regarded the element of variety. These patent facts should teach us the necessity and importance of variety in our sermons. There is in the Bible, in nature and in the various characteristics and conditions of men, ample materials for the largest and most careful variety. Of course, reading, close thought and wakeful observation will be imperatively necessary to secure this variety. But the benefits will more than repay the outlay of labor to secure it. Variety will save us from being a hobbyist, from outgrowing into a rut, and from being wearisomely monotonous.

I knew a preacher once who could preach instructive, hearable sermons for some three months; then, like a wet weather stream, he ran dry, and before the year ended was an intolerable bore. How he could do so well three months, and why he could not do more, I do not know.

Do not fall into the mistake that because a doctrine may be important, much discussion will bear increasing repetition. I have heard an old preacher of rather fixed habits who was called to a certain pulpit. He preached on "Repentance." He followed it with another discourse on the same doctrine, and so on for quite a while. The officials remonstrated and insisted on a more varied bill of fare. But he answered, by asking, "Have all the congregation repented?" They had not. Then said he, "That's the first step, and nothing can be done, no advance be made until this step is taken, and I must continue to insist on repentance." This was certainly a misseen view of his pulpit duty.

Our old, eminent preachers fifty and seventy-five years ago were not men of large pulpit variety. The frequent changes, the largeness of their field, and the infrequency of preaching to the same congregations, rendered such variety unnecessary.

They selected a few of the most important themes, studied them thoroughly, and delivered them with great eloquence and power. But conditions have changed; the charges are not so large, and the pastoral terms are longer, and the people generally are better informed.

Of course, the cardinal doctrines, the commandments, the graces of character, and the duties of life's various relations, have their limits; but a finite and temporary creature like man can never reach the limit of the phases of their presentation.

There are but a few primary colors, but there are thousands of shades, seen alone. There are few notes in music, but there are known to be more than fifty thousand tunes or airs in Christendom. We have more than a hundred thousand words or combinations of our alphabet in our large dictionaries.

The art of variety in the presentation of a comparatively few cardinal truths is the art of turning a large diamond so that each of its facets shall flash a distinct light. Some, alas! appear to have little versatility; and as they grow older, and, perhaps, read and investigate less, they shrink within narrower lines and have less and less variety. I knew long ago a respectable local minister, who was said to have but two sermons, which, however, he was able to preach with earnestness and fervor.

Another I knew, a traveling minister of respectable standing, who married, located, became considerably absorbed in secularities, neglected study and pulpit preparation until it was commonly reported of him that he had but one sermon that he would venture to preach.

Our mental constitution demands variety. It is said men tire on a diet of the most toothsome roast turkey if it be repeated for any considerable length of time. Be on the lookout, and the vast and varied landscape of truth will be ever revealing some new and beautiful aspect that you never saw before. The Bible has a many-sidedness that makes an exhaustive presentation impossible to a finite mind. As you read and grasp more and more of Revelation, you will be forced to exclaim, "The half has never been told." So labor to bring out of the divine treasury of thought things new and old, that you may be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

Atlanta, Ga.

MR. EDITOR: This is the third time I have taken in hand to write you from this place, and have been unable to collect thoughts and material; so discontinued. As the "third time is a charm," I may succeed now. By advice of my physician, and consent—yea, and much more—of my congregation, I am tarrying in these parts for a short while, seeking relief from malaria and effects of la grippe. Truly the lines have fallen to me in pleasant places, that I should serve so generous a people, and find, while away from my own home, such delightful quarters and hearty welcome in the home of my quondam friend and school-fellow, Dr. B. H. Catching. The many friends who have known him so favorably and well in Mississippi, both as a dentist and a worker in the church, will be glad to learn that while he has succeeded well in his profession, his zeal for the Master has grown none the less. As a worker in the church, he is instant in season and out of season—has "grown in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord."

To me this city is a constant wonder. Situated among the mountain spurs of North Georgia, and surrounded on all sides by a poor, sandy country, without any natural advantages, it has, within the past three decades, increased its population fivefold. Within two hundred miles of Charleston and Savannah, with their seaport advantages, its growth, in every respect, has been marvelous, and the young "Gate City" bids fair to outstrip its older and more fortunate neighbors. In the geographies of twenty-five years ago, when I was yet in that department at school, when old Milledgeville was the capital, this city was scarcely worthy of a place on the maps. From a population of less than twenty thousand, when Mr. Sherman came on his unwelcome visit, the city has grown to nearly one hundred thousand inhabitants. With its smooth, shady, undulating streets, it is a place of great beauty. Should any old soldier chance to see this, and would like to know what remains to tell of his life here in camp and ditch, I have to say that the city has grown over the old breastworks; and where once was heard the crack of the deadly rifle and the sound of martial music, is now heard the merry laugh of children and the rattle of the street car. Only one fort, with its four old guns, and named for Gen. Walker, who fell on the same day that Gen. McPherson did on the other side, remains. The city has included it, with about two hundred yards of breastworks, within a park. While walking over this fort and in these ditches (my first experience behind breastworks), I thought how many of the gallant fellows who wore the gray had fallen even there in defense of all they held sacred and dear. My heart was moved within me, and I said, "Thank God! it's all over; and may our fair land never suffer such again!" One significant feature is, that in the midst of the fort is a monument of stone from Indiana. Why must it be that they who conquered should furnish the stone as a constant reminder to the conquered? Georgia has some pretty marble and beautiful granite; why didn't the city use that?

Evidently the faith of the real estate owners in Atlanta's future growth is great. Old fields, hills and hollows, smooth and rough, level and steep (however, not much level), are bought, leveled down, filled in, laid out into lots, and sold for big prices. Hundreds of scrapers are busy on all sides of the city now, digging down the hills preparatory to building houses.

Still, more and more the wonder grows as to what supports such a city and such life. My conclusion is, influence of railroads, enterprise and push.

Methodism is strong here, and is keeping pace with the rapid growth. There are twelve or fifteen churches, and as many pastors, in the city.

I must close, or this will get to be too long for your columns.

I see the familiar face of the ADVOCATE every week. Dr. Catching continues his subscription, and says it is necessary for the completion of his list. May she live long and prosper! More anon. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

May 30, 1891.

Is It Binding or Not?

"Will you be subject to the discipline of the church, attend upon its ordinances, and support its institutions?" "I will endeavor so to do, God being my helper."

Everyone received into our church takes upon himself this solemn obligation. Alas! there are many who never realize what duties, self-denial, obligations, etc., are thus assumed. Some ministers are careless about impressing upon the candidates for admission the importance of the step they are taking, even admitting them into full membership when they have not even read the rules of the church and articles of faith, thus allowing them, in a time of religious excitement, to vow to do they know not what. Do thoughtless members ever think that the mind and heart of the minister would be governed, to a great extent, by physical fatigue? His best efforts can not be put forth when finances are so low that he knows not where he can get money for his next supplies, for the day of multiplying loaves seems passed.

Fancy a masonic lodge, or any club in our cities, keeping up fine balls, temples, club-rooms, and giving to charitable purposes, if most of their members paid nothing to the support of these societies. How long are their members considered in good standing after they cease to pay their dues? I have been told their names are soon dropped from the roll.

I once heard an old minister talk to a congregation in a large city about paying their minister. Not being interested himself, he spoke very plainly. "My friends, you pay your butcher's bill, your grocer's bill, your doctor's bill, your lawyer's bill; pay your preacher. You engage him to do a pastor's work—preach, visit the sick, advise, etc.; pay him as you do others who work for you. The members owe the preacher's salary as much as any other debt they contract."

Some people think the preacher and his wife should go with bowed heads and meek looks, because the preacher is to be paid for work which is not plowing or splitting rails. A physician and wife might just as well go around bowing to the neighborhood—a ride, a feeling of somebody's pulse, the measuring a bit of medicine. Paid for the visit? Of course; he is the doctor.

All can not give much; but the widow's mite, being all she could "afford," was blessed, and the action recorded for the reading and cheering of all God's people who fail to count their hundreds. Those who decide not to pay for the support of the church should have their names erased from the roll. To wait till they are independently rich might mean to do nothing, for life might end ere plenty is acquired. What must the world think of penurious church members! We complain of poor sermons. Can a preacher do his best when his quarter's pay has been neglected, and he wonders how he can meet his expenses? No member should fail to pay something every quarter. How thoughtless many are till nearly Conference time! Even the stewards seem to think a house and God's free air sufficient till the third quarter. Members, put yourselves in his place, and pay him, and help him carry on the work, as you would like to be paid and be helped. "Small salaries" will not bring the preacher and people nearer together. Only the love of God shed abroad in his and their hearts, and earnest working in a common cause, will accomplish that; and the preacher well supported will please his people better than the one whose salary is small, and its payment delayed till the poor man has no confidence in anyone but God. Many of our old church members think if they have surplus cash, it is right to pay; if not, they seem to think it right not to pay. They struggle to keep up appearances, to gain possession of this world's goods; they should also struggle to acquire their portion of the church assessments. In no other way can they keep their vow "to support the institutions of the church," for money is necessary to carry on the work successfully. Our members generally do not understand church government. A class in every church should yearly be instructed in their duties as members, and, among other things, be taught to pay as well as pray. A question to every member: The second quarter is nearly gone; how much have you paid into the Lord's treasury? If nothing, hasten to redeem your vow. A MEMBER.

Notes from Japan.

The reports from all parts of our work in Japan indicate that the interest in Christianity continues, and that God is blessing the labors of our hands. The following, gathered from private letters and personal observation, will show, in part, how the cause of the Master is doing.

On the Matsuyama circuit six persons have recently been baptized. Steps are being taken to open a chapel, and place a native worker at a point where eight Christians of different churches stand ready to unite with the first church that enters the place.

At Oita a missionary residence has just been erected, and a church-building is being planned, for the land is already in the possession of the mission. This is the place where the native Christians endured such persecution last year; but all held out faithfully, and the work has gone on with good promise.

At Kitsuki, on the same circuit, two were added to the church, a few Sundays ago, on profession of faith.

On the Hiroshima circuit, at Qwakuni, three were baptized last month. Here a zealous native worker has gathered around him the nucleus of a very promising church. He has received sufficient money to purchase a church lot, and has enough left over to insure—with added help from our native Church Extension Society and the members of the mission—the erection of a church-house.

At Yamaguchi, a point opened only last February, there is now an interesting class of twelve probationers, besides many enquirers. At a recent service there, Dr. J. W. Lambuth preached in a private house to over one hundred attentive hearers.

On the Osaka circuit six or seven men and women have come into the church recently, and there are several probationers. During the past week between thirty and forty handed in their names as enquirers.

The work in Kobe is still advancing. At our boys' school six were baptized last quarter, and three more will come into the church from this school in a Sunday or two. In the night school, connected with the Palmore Institute, there is an interesting class of fourteen probationers from among the students. In the Kobe church five have recently been received on profession of faith, and two more will be baptized to-morrow.

The above statements are but partial reports of the work that is going on among us at present, and are not intended as a complete account of our mission work, by any means, but are only such as have come to me personally. If time permitted, much might be said about our school work, which is growing, and is proving an efficient evangelistic agency; but of this in the future. Enough has been written to show that the work here is constantly advancing, that souls are being saved, and that the "best of all is, God is with us." W. E. TOWSON.

The Brandon District Conference.

The Brandon District Conference convened Thursday, May 28, and adjourned Saturday, May 30. It was a most pleasant and profitable session. Everybody present seemed to enjoy it. The hospitality of Hickory and vicinity was equal to the occasion, and was enjoyed by the visitors. The occasion will not soon be forgotten. The brethren and friends of the church at Hickory had overhauled, added to, and furnished in good style their house of worship. The preachers and some friends of the district "watched" their presiding elder and wife, not with a jealous eye, but with a memento each, not to be soon forgotten. Every interest of the church was looked into, and the business of the Conference attended to in a quiet, earnest way that was gratifying to all. We had with us the wife of one of our missionaries, Mrs. J. M. Weems, which added much to the interest of the occasion.

On Friday, at ten A. M., Sister Weems gave an interesting account of the work in Mexico, after which there was a free-will offering of $47.50 to the special fund to build a church in the City of Mexico. This amount has been forwarded to Dr. John. Sister Weems came from Hickory to Forest. While here she received the painful intelligence that Bro. Weems was sick with pneumonia. She dispatched yesterday, and received the glad news that he was up and doing well. We hope that the Bishop will order him home, that he may have a couple of months' needed rest.

Bro. Watkins, agent of Millsaps College, was present, and gave an account of his work, and lifted a collection, amounting to $180, for the Clara Chrisman scholarship.

The district is gradually improving, and we are praying and looking for a sweeping revival this year. There is distress in most of the district now for want of rain. Many of the farmers failed to get their crops in in time to get a third up. In many places the drouth struck them before they could break their lands; and as these lands are of prairie nature, they can not break them now; hence this distress.

Sunday was a high day. The Conference love-feast was enjoyed by about three hundred persons. It was good to be there. The sacramental service was one of the most solemn and beautiful I ever attended.

Sister Weems, in the afternoon, talked to the children and to a large audience; and Mrs. Johnston, with the aid of the pastor, succeeded in organizing a Woman's and Juvenile Missionary Society.

The evening service closed a delightful occasion. P. A. JOHNSTON.

Railroad Travel.

ITS CONVENIENCE, AND OTHER THOUGHTS.

The great convenience of railroad travel to-day can not well be appreciated by the young man of this time. The old man who began his experience forty years ago, when Conferences embraced three and four times the extent of territory they do now, knows something of the benefits of the change. Then, at times, it required ten days or two weeks' travel on horseback in winter over muddy roads, across swollen streams, through days of incessant rain, storms of sleet and snow, with boots encased in ice, to reach the seat of the Conference sessions; then repeat or duplicate the same trip to reach his future field of labor. He is able now to fill his appointment in some remote part of the Conference on Sunday before the meeting of Conference on Wednesday, and answer to the first roll-call, spend one Sunday at Conference, and on the Sunday following preach on his charge for the ensuing year, making these trips in a car, in many respects, more comfortable than any home he then had. In the preacher's regular work he often finds railroad travel cheaper than keeping a horse. In many instances he can start from home on Sunday morning, and preach at several appointments, which he could not reach by any private conveyance; and then, with this method of conveyance, he can so connect his secular business with his ministerial duties as to attend to these worldly interests with little or no prejudice to his spiritual work. I knew a preacher who filled his appointment on Sunday morning, at eleven o'clock; took the train that afternoon, traveled seventy-five miles, and on Monday morning was ready to take up the line of his secular affairs, and carry on his daily tasks without a break.

I have some knowledge of a division of railroad—say 225 miles long—over which four engines, drawing passenger trains, pass every Sunday. It is said that each of these engines must make for the company $100 every Sunday, or the company loses money. This Sunday running aggregates $20,800 per annum. I suppose there are twenty-five preachers living on, or near, this division of road. To avail themselves of its Sunday conveniences, they must pay their assessed or charged amount. Perhaps this is twenty-five cents for each preacher, making $13 apiece. This would make a total of $325. This seems a small per cent. of the grand total; but without that grand total no trains would run on Sunday for the public; and though they might run for the public without this small ministerial investment, yet the preacher who refuses to pay his assessed or charged installment, the railroad company positively refuses to run on Sunday for him. So his quota must be promptly paid, in order to move the train for himself.

There are preachers who see nothing in this transaction peculiar to the sacred calling of the minister, nor to the sanctity of the holy Sabbath day. The privilege bought and paid for by them assumes, in their eyes, the actual business feature common with every merchant, drummer, artisan, mechanic, farmer, show or theater man, who, by the same business form, purchases a like privilege of travel with the preacher on these Sunday trains. It is worthy of remark that these are saintly men whose godly bearing, whose Christly lives, whose spiritual-mindedness and whose heavenly temper exemplify and commend the gospel they preach wherever they go. J. D. NEWSOM.

Revivals and Religious Education.

Some regard revivals as the chief, if not the only means of promoting the growth of the church. Others place the main dependence upon the religious education of the children of the church. There is no antagonism between these two things. So long as there are large numbers of sinners unconverted we need revivals of religion to bring these multitudes to Christ and into the church. So long as there are large numbers of children connected with our congregations, it is of the utmost importance that they be taught in the truth and guided in the path of life. It would be a mistake either to unduly exalt or disparage either of these methods. The church needs to use both with wisdom, because each may be exalted unwisely.

We firmly believe that children may grow up in piety and grace. We do not hold the idea that it is necessary for them to spend any part of their lives in the service of sin and Satan. We need a fuller recognition of child piety in the church. It is not necessary that the children should wait till they grow up to maturity before they enlist in Christ's service. But, on the other hand, there is danger of assuming because the children of Christian parents have been familiar with the truths of religion, and associated with the church from infancy, that, therefore, they are all right religiously and need no special experience of saving grace. Thousands grow up in association with Christian churches without the living faith that unites to Christ. The form of godliness may exist without the power. Churches may come to be largely made up of nominal Christians whose spiritual life is feeble. This is a danger to be guarded against on that side.

Then, there is danger that undue dependence may be placed on the more demonstrative outward symptoms of revivals. While thousands of useful Christians have been brought into the church by revival services, yet they also have their weak points. In revivals the appeal is generally made largely to the emotions. This is not said with the idea that the emotions have nothing to do with religion. But in times of great religious excitement, there is danger that they may not be as much sober thinking as there ought to be. From religious excitement, as from all kinds of excitement, there is a natural reaction which has to be guarded against. While this is admitted, it is beyond doubt that stolid religious indifference does ten times more harm than religious excitement. It is also a serious mistake to cherish the idea that no progress need be looked for except by means of revivals, conducted either by special evangelists or the pastor. As the gates of heaven stand open night and day, the gates of God's mercy are always open to receive returning prodigals. None need wait for any time or service. We are disposed to give a prominent place in the process of conversion to an earnest decision with God's help to forsake what is wrong and do what is right. We have referred to these two methods not to disparage either, but to urge the importance of plying both with discretion. In all these things "wisdom is profitable to direct."—Christian Guardian.

GOD'S WAY.

BY EDITH EVERETT.

To one 'tis given
To drink life's wine from joy's full cup, to give,
To be, to bless—true child of God—to live,
On earth, in heaven.

Another life
Toils wearily along its thorny track,
Unloved, alone, distressed upon the rack
Of love's fierce strife.

O child of pain!
Thy will is weakness, God's is strength. Who take His cross and bravely strives to follow makes Defeat but gain.

God's loving power,
If thou but raise thy heart all burned with pain
To him, will be as gentle summer rain
To thirsty flower.

Heart sore, distressed,
Thy well-meant and unselfish acts of love,
Though haply all unwisdom, God above
O'errules for best.

Thou shalt at last
Find rest; for he will make the balance good,
And show his plan, complete, so understood
That sorrow past.

Will lose in bliss
Its pain, and unto thy worn soul disclose
A calm and peace the untried soul's repose
Perhaps may miss.

Of Wrath Also.

Is it not about time some one was emphasizing the doctrine of God's anger towards the sinner and his awful hatred of sin? We hear so much now-a-days about love itself that we are in danger of forgetting the tremendous sanctions of that law whose fulfilling love is. So far, at least, as this world goes the evidences of God's anger are quite as plain as those of his love. In fact, the two are, to the common mind, inseparable; one can not be understood without the other. If "God so loved the world as to give his Son," he so hated sin as to suffer the tragedy of the cross. We first hate sin and then love God; else were there no need of conversion. And to this latter end, one most dangerous, many are liable to be led by the undue exaltation of what they conceive to be love.

"God only knows the love of God," is true as to both the essence and the limits of the divine passion. There is as much danger sometimes in experimenting with righteousness as there is in fooling with sin. As "doing the will" is the condition of correctness in doctrine, so "keeping the commandments" is the test of love. His is a rare case who can just sit down and love God and feel good and get happy.

Of course, in this bad world we want more of love than we find among men. But there is a tendency with some to dream about it, and refine upon its nature and indulge in its sentimentalities which leads to much irreverence in song and prayer and conversation, meant to be religious. It may be that we offend the ear of the Almighty with our endearments, our familiar love talk when we come into his presence.

Who can read without fascination that little pamphlet, "The Greatest Thing in the World"? What an exquisite analysis of love it is! What a charming field of thought it opens to the contemplative mind! How we do wish, as we read, that sin was out of the world, and our neighbor more amiable, so that we might just love him with all our soul. Or that sin was not as bad as it is, so that we might love the sinner without having to condemn his sin. The doctrine of love as the absorbing passion of the human soul is strong meat. Too much dwelling upon it—too much "inwardness" regarding it, tends in most persons to produce a spiritual dyspepsia which can be corrected only by a return to "milk for babes." There may be natures that can bear such food; but it must be taken with caution, even by the strongest. Prof. Drummond, it seems, could not bear it long, for we find him raised to such a height by the enthusiasm of love that humanity appears in the distance only "a little sunken," requiring to be raised.

The average Christian will do well to keep always in mind the cost of the world's redemption. The trouble with the world is not a matter of levels or of distance, but of sin, for which the Apostle Paul, who had the language of both worlds at command, could find no synonym but "Sin, working death."

There is a precious passage of Scripture that receives a great deal of one-sided emphasis. "Thank God!" people sometimes say, "for that little word 'so.'" But the grand thing for a poor sinner is, not that "God so loved the world," that he loved the world so, but that God so loved the world as to do something for it; to give his Son, "that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." The solemn fact is, that the recovery of a ruined world is a triumph, not of rhetoric, but of redemption. "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift!"

A realization of God's anger toward the sinner will go far to quicken our Christian energies and give practical character to the kindly feeling which a consciousness of his love inspires. It takes both to change benevolence into beneficence. "Feed my sheep," was the Savior's answer to Peter's repeated avowals of devotion. There are Peters in the church to-day who need to be checked on the eve of a shout by an exhortation to service.

Men are to be constrained by "the love of Christ," says the apostle; yet none the less are they to be "persuaded" by the "terrors of the Lord." And that is a wholesome thought for the preachers of our time: the road to Canaan goes by Sinai yet.

The safest, perhaps, the only safe expression of love for most of us is a gift or a good deed; and he who loves most will find himself too busy doing good to spend much time shouting or singing love songs to the Lord. But shout, brother, make a loud noise unto the Lord, if your raptures find natural vent that way; yet do not forget that for every moment spent in merely feeling good, when we might have been doing it, God will bring us into judgment. The time presses; let not the sun go down upon your love!

Getting Ready.

Since I have been in Wesson the desire to have Bro. Inge visit us has been often expressed; recently it has intensified. At the suggestion of a layman, the spirit of the town on this subject was carefully tested, and it resulted in an invitation to Bro. Inge to move his big tent down here as soon as he finished at Hazlehurst. This invitation was from all the Protestant Churches in Wesson. As Wesson had some correspondence with him on this subject before, he consented to come. Last Sunday our pulpits touched on revivals generally, and our coming meeting especially. At the suggestion of a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church, we have been holding union prayer meetings this week. Tuesday evening we had a delightful union prayer meeting at the Baptist Church, led by Bro. Dale, a layman of the Baptist Church. Wednesday evening a large crowd worshipped at the Methodist Church. Bro. Long, of the Presbyterian Church, conducted the service. Thursday evening we met at the Presbyterian Church; Bro. Lindrose, a Methodist, led.

In these prayer meetings we had several interesting talks by laymen. They are lending readily a helping hand. Some one remarked that much good has already been accomplished. Last evening we had a song service under the big tent, conducted by Prof. Evans, who leads the singing for Bro. Inge. The first sermon of the meeting will be preached to-morrow at eleven A. M.

At the close of the meeting we will write a word about the results. Fifty-seven names have been added to the roll of our church here this year. Our congregations have been quite large, prayer meetings well attended, and we are at peace with each other.

An International Medical Congress.

The managers of the National Prohibition Park, of Staten Island, invite representative medical men from all localities in the United States and the Dominion of Canada to meet in conference on July 15 and 16, next, in the great Auditorium Building of the Park. The chief object of the meeting is to be the comparison of views on the relationship of physiology and alcohol. Among the questions to be discussed will be the following:

What Are the Hereditary Effects of Drunkenness?

Are there any Hereditary Effects that Follow Moderate Drinking?

To What Diseases are Inebriates More Especially Exposed?

Is Alcohol a Poison?

Is Alcohol in Any Sense a Food?

What are the Proper Uses of Alcohol as a Medicine?

Is there Danger of Producing the Drink Habit from the Prescribing of Alcoholic Medicines?

How Large a Percentage of Deaths May Be Attributed, Directly or Indirectly, to the Use of Strong Drink?

Should Alcoholic Liquors Ever Be Used Except under the Direction of a Medical Adviser?

At this conference all views will be given an impartial hearing. No restraint will be placed upon the discussion save that of the time limit. Many well-known medical men have already signified their willingness to participate in such a conference. No harm, but much good, may come from this conference of views by leading physicians. The general subject is a most urgent one. An eminent New York physician, the late Dr. Willard Parker, in his preface to the lectures of Dr. Richardson, of London, said:

Alcohol has no place in the healthy system, but is an "irritant poison," producing a diseased condition of body and mind. Statistics show that ten per cent. of the annual number of deaths in this country are due to alcohol; that fully thirty-five per cent. of our insane are so either directly or indirectly from its use; and that from seventy-five to ninety per cent. of the inmates of our penal and pauper institutions owe their condition to its influence. Besides this, we find that forty-five per cent. of the inmates of our asylums for idiots are the offspring of parents addicted to drink.

Destroying, as it does, the will, the judgment and the moral sense, may we not with propriety consider it a cause of that low state of public and private integrity which permits, even in our very midst, the formation of those shameful combinations to defraud and steal, commonly known as "rings"? . . . If the habitual use of distilled liquors increases as rapidly within the opening century as it has during the one just ending, how sad the outlook! I can discern nothing in the future but a wreck of national honor, and the sinking to a lower standard of civilization and morality, unless public sentiment in this regard be changed.

Some time since, Mr. Gladstone, in a speech in the House of Commons, declared that the drink evil in England has wrought more mischief than had the three great historic sources, war, famine and pestilence combined. Certainly, a question which so involves the health and general well-being of society as does this question of the use of alcoholic liquor should interest no class of our citizens more deeply than physicians.

The congress will assemble at 10 A. M., July 15 and 16, and continue its session for two days. It is expected that arrangements will be made for reduced railroad fares.

Revival at Hazlehurst, Miss.

The George S. Inge meeting, of this town, conducted under his big tent, closed last Sunday night, after fifteen days' service, with the most gratifying results. Eighty-five persons made application for church membership; several others will join soon. The preaching was in demonstration and great power. The singing had much to do with the success of the meeting. It was conducted by a Bro. Evans. It is said he is one of the best. The congregations were large from the beginning to the end. The interest increased from the beginning to the last. All denominations took a lively interest in the meeting, and the greatest Christian fellowship prevailed. Much credit may be given Bro. Cooper, our pastor, for all those things. He is one of the best managers of such meetings; and now that he is made a D. D., we look for still better success. No one in this country ever witnessed such demonstrations of God's power. There were some of the most startling confessions on the part of some very wicked men. One man got up on the stand, or platform, one night, with a little box in his hand. He was very much affected. He stated that what was in that box cost him one hundred thousand dollars; that he was guilty of every crime except stealing. He then opened the box. The first thing he took out was a white lily, and said that was the only thing in the box that cost him nothing; that his little daughter came to him that evening, sat down by him, and began to talk about the meeting, and said she wanted to go. He told her yes, she might, and she gave him the lily. He was wooing all the time. He then took out a pistol, and gave it to Bro. Inge; said he did not want it any more; then a bottle of whisky, then a deck of cards, then some things they call poker chips—gave them all to the preacher. He joined the church, went home and held family prayers. Altogether, it was the grandest meeting ever held in this country, and has made impressions for good far out in the future. One thing I never saw before: the Jews turned out en masse, night and day; let their clerks go in the day. Some of them gave the preacher their hands, to be prayed for, and gave their money to the support of the preacher. The Methodist Church got some very valuable members that will strengthen her cords; and so of other churches. Bros. Inge and Evans were well pleased with their visit to our town of Hazlehurst; but, Mr. Editor, a number refused to yield. Some would not go to the meeting; some will die in their sins, and be lost in spite of all these influences.

Letter from Florida.

I completed my fourscore years March 12, last. General health is fair. My strength is weakness. "They that look out of the windows" are being more darkened; so that the pleasure of reading is very limited. The grinders have become so few that a good deal of gumming has to be done in disposing of my food. My needs are met by a stringent economy. My trust is in God; my life is in Christ; my comfort in the Spirit; my hope and treasure in heaven. I am neither pessimist nor optimist. Our church is increasing more in numbers than in graces, I am afraid. No use in making a big crop, and let it go to waste, or make careless disposition of it. Evangelists are a part of the force constituted by the Head of the church for the salvation of sinners; but the would-be's are as much damage as the would-be preacher. The spirit of the prophets ought to be subject to the prophets. They ought to be controlled.

You all in Louisiana have my sympathy, particularly now, as you are battling with money-wickedness—the Lottery.

I won't tax your time by a long scrawl from me. I only intend to let you know that I am alive. Kind remembrance to the family and brethren.

Millsaps College Notes.

The college endowment fund was increased by a collection of $177.50 at Rehoboth, in Copiah county, on Sunday, May 17, and collections amounting to $116.25 at Brandywine, in Claiborne, and Lehanon, in Jefferson, on Sunday, May 24. These places are all in the pastoral charge of Rev. A. D. Miller, to whom the agent is under many obligations for hearty co-operation and encouragement.

The writer attended the session of the Brandon District Conference at Hickory, last week, where he made a statement of the condition of our college affairs, and where, under the inspiration of Presiding Elder Johnston and Pastor Morse, the congregation subscribed $180 toward the "Clara Chrisman Scholarship."

A PASSPORT OF POWER.—The world has not yet wholly confessed Christ its King and owned his word as its law; but there are instances in which a common action or a general forbearance is acknowledgment of his divine authority. The King's warrant runs. A few years since, three small children—a boy and two tiny maidens—traveled from Kulm, in Germany, to St. Louis, in the United States. The oldest was ten, and the youngest four. Escort they had none. They were innocent of any language but the tongue of the fatherland. Their parents had gone before and had worked and saved, and at last sent home the money to bring out the bairns. It seemed a reckless thing to send such young and defenseless children a journey of four thousand miles; but they were tenderly committed to God's providence, and they had a passport. The guardian who saw them off, no doubt, with many a tremor, gave the elder girl a copy of the New Testament, and told her in every case of difficulty or doubt to show the fly-leaf to the interrogator. The children's names stood there, and their destination; and something more was added, viz.: these words: "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me." The little traveler obeyed her orders, and the text was indeed her protection, and the children's charge of Christian sympathy and aid honored until they reached their emigrant abode and their waiting friends. They had journeyed safely in the shadow of a royal proclamation.—The Quiver.

We desire to again call attention to one peculiarity of the Lottery bill, now before the people by virtue of the three to two decision, such as was never before possessed by a measure creating a corporation; and that peculiarity is the fact that the corporation that bill creates can not be sued. No matter what cause of action a man might have against it, he could find no court to go into. No matter what wrong he might suffer at its hands, there would be no tribunal in which to right it. A man might pay his money for a ticket, and draw the capital prize a dozen times; but if the company did not choose to pay him, it could not be compelled to do so. If it is created, it will be lawproof. This is a broad statement, a most serious charge; but it is susceptible of a demonstration.

You can not sue any person in a personal action, except in a court having jurisdiction of him. Courts get this jurisdiction in pursuance of law. No court can take jurisdiction of a person except in pursuance of a specific law authorizing it to do so. The code of Louisiana provides that a natural person is subject to the jurisdiction of the court of his or her domicile; hence any natural person can be sued at the place where he lives. But there is no general law similar to the above fixing the place where a corporation (a fictitious person created by the law) could be sued.

A corporation, being an imaginary, unreal, impalpable person, can have no actual domicile, a place where it resides. Hence, whenever the law creates such a person, it always creates such a residence, by declaring where its domicile shall be, thereby giving some court jurisdiction over it. If such a declaration is not in the act, no court can take jurisdiction. We think no lawyer will dispute this proposition.

The act of the Legislature creating the present iniquity recognized this, and vile as was the Legislature of 1868, it was not vile enough to create a corporation over and above the law, and out of the reach of the courts. The first article of the act creating the present Lottery Company (Act 25 of 1868), after declaring what the name and title of the company shall be, says:

And the domicile thereof shall be in the City of New Orleans, State of Louisiana.

But you may search the villainous bill introduced by Shattuck, of Calcasieu, as "House Bill 214," and which the Supreme Court has ordered to be voted upon, from title to repealing clause, and nowhere in it will you find any domicile fixed for this proposed company. Where, then, would you sue it? It is impossible that all courts in the State could have jurisdiction over it. Which one court would? There is no law giving the Civil District Court of New Orleans any more jurisdiction than the district court in Shreveport. You can not sue except at the domicile of the defendant. Where is that domicile?

Then, again, a corporation is an impersonal thing. The sheriff serves citation on an individual by giving him or her a copy; but he can not give a copy to that fictitious thing—a corporation. Consequently, when the law creates a corporation, it always specifies upon whom citation shall be served. Even the aggregation of scoundrelism known as the Legislature of 1868 respected this rule enough to put into the charter of the present company this clause:

Sec. 4. The president of the Board of Directors shall be the proper person upon whom to serve citations, notices and other legal process wherein this corporation may be interested.

But you may search the present Lottery amendment from beginning to end, and you will find no person designated as the party upon whom to serve process. Hence, even if you had a court with power to issue process, you have no one upon whom to serve.

Nor can the Legislature cure this defect. If the Lottery amendment is adopted, it will be a part of the Constitution, and any change of it would be an amendment of the Constitution, which is beyond the power of the Legislature alone. Here you have a lawproof corporation, able to do as it pleases, regardless of the law, beyond the power of the courts and out of the reach of justice. Can American citizens gain their own consent to create this power higher than the law which governs them, and which they all must respect and obey?—New Delta.

The District Conference.

The District Conference is, or should be, a pioneer. Having but few prescribed duties, and these having an indefinite range, it is left free to survey and enter the broad field of the church, to observe and study its economy in a practical way and fix upon salient points anywhere. It is sufficiently removed from all legislation and executive action to admit of calm and comprehensive thought, and yet sufficiently close at hand to admit of familiarity with the practical workings. Matters may be discussed without hurry and confusion, and in an original way. Measures may be originated, projected and reviewed in such way as to be of great value to the church. The important work of other bodies may be shaped and prepared here in such degree as greatly to facilitate the whole economy. One section of the district is brought in contact with others, and thus becomes suggestive and stimulating, while at the same time the detail working of the whole machinery of the church comes up with such a view as to present the finest opportunity for increasing the efficiency of the whole.

The strongest element, however, of this Conference is the facility that it offers for developing the spiritual power of the district, and thus giving energy to all church enterprise. Some District Conferences are sorry affairs, and, as far as we could judge, worth nothing to the cause; and yet the best and most profitable meetings we have ever known have been some of these Conferences. We have seen a whole district sprung into life by one of these meetings, and the results being developed for months and even years after. The success depends upon the manner and spirit in which they are conducted. A District Conference in a strait-jacket is not worth the fully prepared programme, and you put it where it can not breathe. Start or awe it with the announcement of presence of great dignitaries and set it back with eyes and mouth ready to drink in the wonders, ready for no thought or work. make it free, free to study the interest of the church and to do good in every way, fix its eyes upon the glory of God and the salvation of men, and give it the power of God's spirit, and you make your Conference a center light and life that will radiate to every quarter of the district and to regions beyond.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

Bishop Wilson on Missions.

Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, recently returned from his third episcopal visit around the world, delivered a lecture one evening last week on the subject of missions, in Trinity M. E. Church, replete with much encouraging intelligence from foreign lands. His address commanded the most profound attention from an appreciative audience. He spoke of the great changes that had taken place in foreign lands even since his first tour around the world. He said the world had come down. Heathen nations had become peaceable. In Burmah the government makes full recompense for property destroyed. Missionaries can now go safely anywhere except in locked-up Thibet. A century ago there was no safety anywhere for missionaries, not even in Japan. The changes wrought in the last century are more than in all the history of the past. Since six years ago, on my first visit to China, great changes have taken place. Then it was not safe for a foreigner to travel in the interior, but now he can go anywhere with perfect safety. We have been praying for open doors, and now we have got it. As the Lord has opened the way, there is no excuse for Christians not entering into every land and with large force occupying fields of labor everywhere ripe for the harvest.

I went out of my way to visit Siam in a little boat. I found there a Baptist missionary laboring among the Chinese, who are overflowing and filling up countries in all Southern Asia. The American Presbyterians have five missions in Siam with about twenty missionaries, male and female. Many others are there. There seemed to be considerable apathy among these missionaries. They said to me, "Do not some of your Methodist missionaries come here to stir us up with their fire and enthusiasm." Bangkok, the beautiful capital of Siam, with 600,000 inhabitants, is as open to missions as any where in the United States. A missionary could enter the king's palace and preach there with perfect safety. The whole of that kingdom contains ten millions of people have only one Baptist and twenty Presbyterian missionaries. The people are most interesting, and my spirit was stirred within me at our neglect.—Exchange.

The Religious Newspaper.

The religious newspaper is as necessary to men's intellectual as to their spiritual growth. Men without it may be keen and eager in their business, and women without it may be zealous to maintain their social standing. They may keep informed through the secular press of passing events; but the interests of culture, no less than of religion, require them to study present problems in the light of Christianity. There would not be motive enough to keep the intellectual nature of the ordinary man or woman alive if the questions which engage their attention, related to society and the world at large, were divorced from religion. The great questions which society is striving to answer are moral problems, and in their last analyses are questions of personal duty depending on divine sanctions. The integrity of the family, the relations between employers and employed, the education of the people by schools and platforms and pulpits, and by literature, the social habits of the people in eating and drinking and amusements; the discoveries, inventions and methods which effect social and business life in their moral relations; the making of nations by law and policy, and the dealings of nations with each other—all these pass under review in the religious newspaper; and each one's duty in relation to them is interpreted by the position he holds, or ought to hold, in the kingdom of God.

For these reasons, and others like these, we counsel every head of a family to take the best religious newspaper he can find; to furnish it to sons and daughters as they go out from their homes; to see that it is present in the new homes they found for themselves; and to commend it heartily to their neighbors and friends. Perhaps it would seem, should hardly need counsel. They can have no more effective ally in building up the churches. It speaks when they must be silent, and it carries to their firesides many messages which they would be glad to give concerning themselves and their personal relations to their people, but which, in their position, they are compelled to withhold. For the sake of the family, the Church, the State and the kingdom of God, extend the circulation and influence of the religious journal.—Exchange.

THE POWER OF GOODNESS.—Goodness is sometimes better than greatness. A missionary in India was so fearfully and wonderfully, that he could not learn the language. After some years he was to be recalled, frankly saying that he had not sufficient intellect for the work. A dozen missionaries, however, petitioned his Board not to grant the request, saying that his goodness gave him a wider influence among the natives than any other missionary at the station. A convert when asked, "What is it to be a Christian?" replied, "It is to be like Mr. ——," naming the good missionary. He was kept in India. He never preached a sermon; but when he died, hundreds of heathen, as well as many Christians, mourned his loss and testified to his holy life and character.—Missionary Review.

No man is more miserable than he that hath no adversity; that man is not tried whether he be good or bad, and God never crowns those virtues which are only faculties and dispositions; but every act of virtue is an ingredient into reward—God so dresses us for heaven.—Jeremy Taylor.

INTRODUCTORY.

Between the death of Hezekiah, the good king, and Josiah, the better king, the throne of Judah was occupied by two exceedingly wicked men, Manasseh and Amon. The former of these reigned fifty-five years; for the greater part of this time, he was a thoroughgoing idolater. Amon's rule was of only two years' duration; his biography may be made up of a single sentence, "He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord." His son Josiah was a marked improvement upon him. Of him one it is said, "While he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David, his father." Truly a good ruler is the greatest blessing a people can have. "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice."

I.—THE BOOK FOUND.

Thirty-seven years had passed since the death of Hezekiah. During this time the land had been twice deluged with all the evils of idolatry. The people was again in a sadly dilapidated condition. Josiah set about to imitate the example of King Joash. He appointed officers to levy a general collection for the purpose of repairing and putting in shape the house of the Lord. His labors are recounted in these words, "In the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem." How great was the need for some such action! It is no easy task to counteract the evils of two generations' standing. He destroyed the high places of Baal, ground the images to powder, and broke down all the heathen idols. This aggressive side finished, he determined to repair the Lord's house.

While the men were engaged in this work a most important discovery was made. "Hilkiah, the priest, found a book of the law of the Lord given by Moses." This was, perhaps, one that had been in the possession of some of the priests. There were several copies or parts of the Law, varying in length from the whole to the small part written upon the door post or worn as a frontlet by the devout Jew. The book entrusted to the king had, of course, been destroyed by those wicked monarchs. The rabbins say that Manasseh and Amon tried to destroy all the copies, but that this present one was preserved by being hid under a standing stone. However this may be, whatever were the instruments, it is certain that Providence was in the whole affair. God's Word is indestructible. It is the Word of Life; it can live amid the polluting influences of the basest heathenism and when he calls it will come forth in all the power of its uncontaminated truth. Satan may seek to destroy; Kings may burn; Popes may interdict; Bishops may forbid the publishing of God's message to mankind: but the Word of the Lord is not bound, it shall endure forever.

The Bible is a great light which can come through all manner of false teaching. Our degradation is manifest when we allow our eyes to be so blinded by sin as not to behold that light.

II.—THE IMPRESSION IT MADE.

The finder of this great treasure immediately delivered the book to Shaphan, the official representative of the crown, and this courtier carried it to the king, together with his report of the work accomplished at the Temple. After he had given a full account of the labor performed there, he announced the fact that Hilkiah had found the Law. This information was given cautiously, because he was uncertain how the king would receive it. Presumably at the command of his sovereign, Shaphan read a portion of the roll. The effect was marvelous! "When the king heard the words of the Law, he rent his clothes." See the effect the Word of the Lord had! Note also when, and when only, it has its effect! The Word is not always accompanied by such immediate results. Why? The fault is not with it. The seed is the Word of God. It is good seed, surely. Good seed in good soil always produces good fruit. Evidently, logic compels us to admit that where fruit is lacking, there is a corresponding dearth of good soil. It always depends upon the heart as to how far the Word will profit. Josiah's heart was "tender." Here was a man that had never even seen the Word of God, much less heard it, and yet, at the first appeal to him, his heart broke and he came in humility, and, brought face to face with his great responsibility, he cried aloud for mercy.

Oh! ye possessors of hearts made up of stony ground; which instead of blossoming fair as Eden, and fruiting abundantly, are being hardened by the continued treading of sin, and scorched under the blighting breath of evil thoughts and unholy desires; ye that have heard the Word of the Lord a thousand times, and yet its warnings are but the freazy of a nightmare, and its promises the utopian dreams of a visionary enthusiast; little wonder that no impression is made on your heart! It is not "good" soil. Break up your fallow ground, and see if the Lord will not rain his blessing down.

The king trembled at the denunciations of God's law; but trembling is not true. That is the mark of a culprit. Felix, the arrogant, insolent, iniquitous debauchee, can tremble; Josiah, the man of the tender conscience and humble heart, goes a step further and repents. His sorrow was of that, rare, yet godly sort.

Now, the Bible is assuredly the greatest boon to mortals; but the Bible, unread, unstudied, misinterpreted, is the most fearful of curses and will rise up in the judgment to condemn those who have neglected so great salvation. "Go inquire of the Lord for me," said the king. If you want knowledge on any point, go to the source of knowledge in regard to that particular thing. You have legal doubts and want enlightenment—go to the leader of the bar; your mercantile experience is limited—consult your most successful tradesman. Use the same discretion in spiritual affairs. Do you desire religious light? "Go inquire of the Lord."

If we once grant the fact of revelation, we should be the last to repudiate the idea of the Spirit's office in shedding light upon the sacred page. If once his presence were necessary, why not now? Is the present reader of Scripture any less in need of guidance than was Paul? True, the age of prophets and prophetesses is past; they served their successive generations, and served them well. We have a better guide—the Spirit of all truth. Prophecies may fail; but the Omniscient One points, with unerring finger, to the path of duty and of happiness.

As a practical application: Is not the Bible a lost book to some of us? God's law is there, but we have not found it; his cheering promises are there, but we have not appropriated them; heaven is there, but we have not entered into its blest realities; Christ is there, but we have not found him. How can we find all these? Repair the temple. God's earthly temple is your heart. Yield it to the renewing influences of the Holy Spirit, and you, too, will rejoice in the discovery that God will, indeed, dwell upon earth.

Mississippi Items.

A fire in Durant, on the night of June 5, destroyed several buildings, including the home of the Durant News.

The Jackson Clarion-Ledger states that the last line of the "History of Mississippi," by ex-Governor Lowry and Col. Wm. H. McCardle, has been printed and will soon be ready for delivery. It will sell for $3.50.

The frame of the new Presbyterian Church at Scranton is now up, and the workmen are hard at work driving it on to completion. When it is finished it will be one of the best-looking edifices in town.—Democrat-Star.

Hancock county's financial condition is splendid. There is $15,000 in the treasury, and the county does not owe one cent. At the August meeting the Board of Supervisors proposed to reduce the rate of taxation.—Democrat-Star.

The census of 1890 gives Mississippi a population of 1,287,423, of which 539,706 are white and 747,720 are colored. In 1880, the population of the State was 1,129,689. The gain, therefore, is only 157,734, not near so great as was hoped for. Of this increase in population 97,429 are colored and 60,305 are white, the per cent. of increase being slightly (only slightly) in favor of the negro. Thirty-two of the seventy-five counties show a larger increase in the white population than in the colored, while six counties, Adams, Alcorn, Hinds, Marshall, Noxubee and Panola, all of the six except Alcorn being strong negro counties, show a larger loss of the negro than the white population. The Delta counties show the largest increase of population of any section in the State, and the increase is due largely to the influx of negroes into this section. In 1880 Washington county had a population of 3,617 whites and 21,861 negroes, or nearly seven negroes to one white. In 1890 the county contains 4,669 whites and 35,703 negroes, or only a fraction over seven negroes to one white. So the percentage of increase of the negroes over the whites, even in the Delta, is very slight.—Greenville Democrat.

Home Without a Mother.

The room's in disorder,
The cat's on the table,
The flower-stand upset, and the mischief to pay;
And Johnny is screaming
As loud as he's able,
For nothing goes right when mamma's away.

What a scene of discomfort and confusion home would be if mamma did not return. If your wife is slowly breaking down, from a combination of domestic cares and female disorders, make it your first business to restore her health. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is without a peer as a remedy for feeble and debilitated women, and is the only medicine for the class of maladies known as female diseases which is sold under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers that it will give satisfaction, or the money will be refunded. It is a positive cure for the most complicated cases of womb troubles.

Louisiana Notes.

The citizens of Alexandria have taken steps toward the organization of a Board of Trade.

The Farmers' Alliance have organized a general supply store at Boyce, with a capital stock of $5,000.

The annual reunion of the Confederate veterans of North Louisiana will be held at the Fair Grounds in Homer, on July 2.

The Louisiana Educational Association will hold its eighth annual convention at the Chautauqua grounds, on June 24-26.

The Farmers' State Union has appointed a committee to co-operate with the Anti-Lottery League in the campaign against the Louisiana State Lottery.

A company has been chartered in Bossier to construct and operate a railroad from Red river to the Arkansas line. The capital stock is $50,000, and the domicile is at Benton. The name of the corporation is the Red River and Ouachita Timber Belt Railroad Company.

The Clinton Brick and Tile Company is a new enterprise in East Feliciana. The capital stock is placed at $50,000, and the officers are Messrs. J. W. Viers, president; W. A. Cain, vice-president; J. P. Knox, secretary and treasurer.

Rev. H. H. Ahrens, of the Methodist Church, with the assistance of Rev. F. S. Parker, has been conducting a very successful protracted meeting this week. The congregations have been large both night and day; the night services especially have been very well attended, and much good work has been accomplished.—St. Mary Banner.

Madison Journal: The Fifth District Levee Board has placed under contract the work of rebuilding the Conoord levee which broke this Spring. The work was let to S. L. James at 20 cents per yard, and he will start work as soon as the state of the ground permits the engineers to run the line. Five hundred convicts will be put on the work, and they are expected to complete it in sixty days.

Baton Rouge is happy over its supply of pure potable artesian water, as established by analysis. The Advocate says:

This well was bored to a depth of 758 feet, at a total cost of $4,000, and has a capacity flow of 700,000 gallons per twenty-four hours. During the present unusual drouth the waterworks company has been furnishing about 300,000 gallons of water a day, less than one-half the capacity of the well, which is more than ample to supply even the greatest demands.

It may not be generally known, but it is a fact just the same that the Ouachita National Bank, of Monroe, enjoys the distinction of being on the roll of honor of the national banking system. This honor is only conferred upon those banks whose surplus exceed their capital and liabilities, and when it is taken into consideration that there are 3,567 national banks in the country and only 267 banks on the roll of honor with the Ouachita National, only four years old, the 113th on the roll, our readers can form an idea of the high rating of this bank in the financial world.—Telegraph-Bulletin.

Why Should We Always Attend Church?

1. It helps ourselves. The church services give vigor to the best thoughts and purposes, strengthen our integrity, develop and solidify right character, and feed the moral and religious part of our nature. We can not afford to lose those sweetening and strengthening influences for a single week.

2. It helps the minister. Nothing is more disheartening to a minister than simple neglect. What sense is there in preparing a message for those who do not come to hear it? How can he preach with vigor to empty pews? The dullness of any service is often to be laid to the account of the absent ones.

3. A church lives on the devotion of its friends. Nowhere is this devotion so fully shown, so quickly felt, or so plainly seen, as in the attendance on the Lord's Day—everyone in their place, and the church rejoices in a consciousness of strength and vitality, and goes forth with zeal and power to its appointed work. With half the seats vacant, there comes depression, and the church sinks into inaction. A live church helps the community. The moral tone of any community depends largely on its churches. If church goers become negligent, the outside community will not go to church. The example of every neglector of the Lord's Day worship is so far an obstruction placed before the door of the church to keep others away. If the friends of the church will attend, strangers will be sure to do so.—Church Union.

AT THE CLOSE OF DAY.—It is wise at night to read—but for a few minutes—some books which will compose and soothe the mind; which will bring us face to face with the true facts of life, death, and eternity; which will make us remember that man doth not live by bread alone; which will give us before we sleep a few thoughts worthy of a Christian man with an immortal soul in him. And, thank God, no one need go far to find such books. I do not mean merely religious books, excellent as they are in these days; I mean any books which help to make us better and wiser and soberer and more charitable persons; any books which will teach us to despise what is vulgar and mean, foul and cruel, and to love what is noble and high-minded, pure and just. In our own English language we may read hundreds books which will tell of all virtue and of all praise; the stories of good men and women; of gallant and heroic actions; and of deeds which we ourselves should be proud of doing; of persons whom we feel to be better, wiser, nobler than we are ourselves.—Charles Kingsley.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

THE LAST DAYS!
A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.
Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.
This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 35 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.
This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., Editor.

Thursday, June 11, 1891.

Commencement at Centenary College.

The commencement exercises of this venerable and popular institution of our church began on Sunday, May 31, with a sermon by Rev. C. F. Evans, D. D. We had not the pleasure of listening to the Doctor on that occasion, but we were told that his sermon was fully up to the level of his usual effort. At night Rev. A. E. Clay, pastor of our Dryades Street Church, in this city, instructed and edified a large audience by a discourse on "The Man with a Screw Loose." Monday was spent in gathering and marshalling forces, and when night-fall set in the preparatory department, under the skillful management of Prof. Wynn, was ready for its annual exhibition. This consisted in an oratorical contest for a gold medal, and was participated in by nine young gentlemen. The speeches were committed thoroughly to memory, and were, for the most part, excellently delivered. The Committee of Award, composed of learned gentlemen of different professions, after weighing carefully the merits and defects of each speaker, awarded the medal to our young friend from Berwick, Eugene A. Pharr.

Tuesday morning the closing exercises of the Union Literary Society were held in the beautiful hall occupied by it, and were interesting and entertaining from beginning to close. Several of the visitors were called upon for brief speeches, which added much to the liveliness of the occasion, and put everybody in frame for the other exercises of the day.

The Alumni Association held its annual session in the Young Men's Christian Association room, and elected as speaker for the annual meeting of 1892, Hon. W. L. Nugent, of Jackson, Miss., and as alternate our young friend, Sam Standifer, of Ruston, La. C. K. Lewis, of Ruston, La., was selected to read the poem on that occasion, and O. H. Simpson, of Lafayette, La., was elected as alternate. The address this year was delivered by Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., of Meridian, Miss. It was a familiar sight to look upon the magnificent form of Dr. Andrews upon the platform which he so long graced years ago by his commanding presence. The audience was good, and listening with all the ears as the Doctor spoke and argued and illustrated about successes and failures in life. The nearness of approach to the one and the other, and yet no realization of either, was brought out so distinctly at times as to make the hearer tremble.

In the evening the annual contest between speakers of the two literary societies for the "McGehee medal for oratory" came off. The speakers for the Union Literary Society were O'Beirn, Collins, and Poet; for the Franklin Institute, Gordy, Putnam, and Scales. The speeches were original and exhibited good thinking, and were delivered in a spirited and eloquent manner. The subject-matter and elocution of these speeches evinced that the young men had received careful training and had profited by it. After considerable time spent in conference on the subject, the committee awarded the medal to John L. Scales, of Mansfield, La. At this juncture the speaker chosen to address the Literary Societies, I. D. Wall, of Clinton, La., stepped upon the rostrum and for about twenty-five minutes entertained the audience by the earnest delivery of a well-conceived speech on "The Enthusiasm of Belief, a Condition of Success in Life." Close thought, apt words, well-rounded periods and earnest delivery combined to make the address a successful one.

Wednesday morning the closing exercises of the Franklin Institute were held in its luxurious hall. These exercises were similar to those usually held on such occasions, and were attended by a "jam of people," and interested all who were fortunate enough to get within the hall. The graduating class came on the boards at eleven o'clock. They are John A. Pharr, B. A.; W. W. Drake, B. S.; George J. Woodside, B. S. W. W. Drake, a son of late Prof. H. W. Drake, formerly professor of languages of the college, delivered the salutatory address, John A. Pharr delivered the valedictory, while Mr. Woodside delivered an excellent address, sandwiched between them. These young men spoke well, and their friends were made happy by their efforts. President Hunnicutt's baccalaureate was timely, abounding in choice thoughts and valuable suggestions to the young graduates. Bishop Keener gave one of his characteristic speeches, reviewing somewhat the history and struggles of the college and showing the institution still to be on the up-grade.

At night the closing exercises consisted in a senior debate on the question, "Shall Education be Compulsory?" On the affirmative was G. J. Woodside, and on the negative were W. W. Drake and John A. Pharr. We did not hear these speeches very distinctly, but the committee awarded the victory to G. J. Woodside; he, in their judgment, having overcome both his opponents in a fair encounter. Thus ended the exercises of the college for 1891.

The Board of Trustees had a good representation present and looked into all the affairs of the college with careful scrutiny. To fill vacancies in the Board, three new members were elected: A. H. Gay, Esq., of Plaquemine, for the Louisiana Conference, and Rev. J. W. Chambers and Hon. H. C. Newsom, of St. Helena parish, for the Mississippi Conference. The Board found that twenty-two licensed preachers and fifteen sons of preachers had been in attendance during the past session. These young preachers and sons of preachers all receive their tuition free of charge, but people generally do not stop to think how much it is that is thus donated by the college. At the average rate of tuition what was thus given last session is equal to $1,800, which is equal to an endowment of $30,000 at six per cent. That is what the Board of Trustees of Centenary College did last session for the education of young Methodist preachers in Mississippi and Louisiana, and we say it is no slight thing, and the act deserves the gratitude of every Methodist in the bounds of the two States. Through President Hunnicutt, the Board received two letters, each containing one thousand dollars to be added to the endowment. One was from Mrs. E. J. Gay, of Plaquemine, La., and the other from C. W. Mills, of Georgia. The treasurer of the Board reported that the endowment fund had grown to about $61,000. Much good and solid repairing has been done on the buildings, and several rooms, including the museum, have been ceiled overhead and otherwise put in order. Prof. Sullivan has added somewhat to the scientific apparatus, and has repaired and brushed up the old instruments so that they do good illustrative work and "look as good as new." If some reader would send that young professor $500 for the purpose of refitting his laboratory and philosophical apparatus, it would be money invested where it would do good for generations. If anyone feels disposed to do this, and would know further of the matter, let him or her communicate with the editor of this paper.

The attendance during the past session was 138. The discipline of the school has been mild and firm, and the order for the most part good. The campus grows more beautiful every year. As the pines and magnolias enlarge their trunks and spread abroad their overhanging branches, we are more and more reminded of the descriptions the old poets give us of the "shady grove surrounding Helicon." The Board of Trustees made provision for the election of an additional professor to take some of the burden off the shoulders of the venerable and faithful Wiley. This professor will be selected to fill the chair of Latin. The matter is left in the hands of the presidents of the Board and Faculty. Bishop E. R. Hendrix was elected to preach the next annual sermon.

The Board was much gratified with the progress made during the past year, and its members are still very hopeful of the future, and think that Centenary College is destined to play no unimportant part in the future campaigns of the Methodist Church in the Southwest.

And now the editor will whisper two suggestions to the faculty. When the exercises are advertised to begin at eight o'clock, don't delay beginning till nine o'clock. That is an imposition upon the patience of the audience which people will not forgive. Abolish at once that Wednesday evening debate. It is a sort of annex to the regular exercises which may cause inflammation. Better suppress it before it gets beyond control.

Columbus District Conference.

The twenty-first District Conference of Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference, has just closed a delightful session, held at Sturges, May 28-31. The preacher in charge, Bro. W. A. Dollar, and his helpers had made ample arrangement for the entertainment of their guests, and the good people of Sturges gave us a cordial welcome and a liberal hospitality. Both they and their guests found mutual enjoyment in the exercises of the Conference and in the social intercourse of the occasion. Many said this was the best District Conference they ever attended. The good effects must remain; much fruit will be gathered unto eternal life. Evidently there had been much prayer for the presence of the Holy Spirit; for his presence was manifest in the temper and work of the Conference. From the first the preaching was direct, earnest, practical, effective. It seemed that each preacher was called by the Master for the occasion, and each one strove to honor the Master in the delivery of his holy truth. Sage, Foster, Mitchell, Jones, Kendall and our own Bishop Galloway—they fed our souls with the Bread of Life. The Bishop, in his sermon on Saturday night and Sunday morning, used no untempered mortar in laying the stones of the Lord's truth into the great spiritual building. He seemed specially earnest and tender in his concern to win us all to the higher ways of Christian living, and so did all these preachers. And why should we all not be more intensely earnest, direct and spiritual in our preaching? Are we enough so? Does our consecration to this holy work reach an abandon of yearning for the souls of men; ought we to stop short of this? The Bishop put one point with startling emphasis: that we may even preach the gospel to others and yet be castaways.

The Conference began its work on Thursday morning, with the presiding elder in the chair. Various proper committees were appointed, and the reports of charges made in full, seriatim. Most reports were in writing, others in verbal statement, and all accompanied with questions to bring out and to emphasize chief points. In this way many brief, but lively, discussions of vital topics animated the proceedings.

On Friday morning Bishop Galloway arrived and took the chair. The work of the Conference was magnified by his wise counsel and the force of his gentle, but strong manner. Besides the emphasis he gave to various important matters in passing, he occupied twenty, or more, minutes in a speech on temperance, when the committee on that subject reported on Saturday afternoon. He dwelt on the present phases of the subject among ourselves; advised against a third party formed on prohibition; urged harmony and co-operation among all temperance workers, and renewed effort to rescue the perishing.

All the traveling preachers in the district were present but two, and they sent reports.

(a) The preachers and many members of their flocks are trying to fill up the measure of their high calling of God in Christ Jesus. (b) The temper and habits of the people towards strong drink have undergone a great change in the last dozen or less years. Very few of our members are addicted to drink at all now. Any connection with whisky—all intoxicants—lowers the social standing of the man and impeaches his trustworthiness. (c) There is growing interest in the value and methods of Sunday-school work; yet in many places there is a serious, if not criminal, neglect of this work on the part of too many adult members of the church. (d) The same may be said in reference to church-houses and parsonages. (e) Finances in most of the charges are at a low ebb. Some charges are well up in their payments, and nearly all the preachers have strong hope of reaching full collections. (f) The spiritual condition of the district was judged to be genuinely hopeful. There are in these charges not a few noble, earnest, consecrated workers—men and women. There are no schisms, only indifference, negligence and backsliding. Columbus station has felt the power of a great work of grace, and the signs are favorable all about.

On Saturday morning a special hour was given to the subject of Sunday-schools. Profs. Dabney Lipscomb and W. H. Smith brought out some valuable points with effective clearness and force, bearing on improvement in workers and work in the Sunday-school. An interesting Sunday-school service was held on Sunday afternoon; Bros. D. L. Mitchel, of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, A. P. Sage and G. W. Bachman being the speakers.

A delightful episode which occurred in the session of Friday afternoon must be given, because it illustrated both the condition of our work in some places and the fellowship of our sufferings. The brother in charge of Plattsburg circuit rendered his report, and was then put under searching question as to the allowance for his support, amount paid, rent of house, etc. His answers revealed a devotion and a need which moved an impromptu contribution for his relief. Bro. Luter led, and others followed, until nearly thirty dollars were put into the sum, and thirteen more for another needy brother in the field. As the giving went on the Holy Spirit came down, or, being within, showed himself, and the baptism from above was evident, and the grace of it in all hearts. It was more blessed to give than to receive.

Bro. D. L. Mitchel, business manager of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, was with us from Friday morning to the close. He added interest and pleasure to our sessions, and delighted all in the social circle. Besides the new subscribers he got for the paper, his personal contact with the people increased their interest in the enterprise. He led our love-feast Sunday morning—a joyful love-feast, which those who were present will not soon forget.

Bro. G. W. Bachman, our own Sunday-school agent and Conference colporteur, was with us, cheerful, earnest, brotherly, busy. What a power for good this brother-worker is in the simple, but great, matter of selling books and periodicals of our publication! Too much can not be done in helping on his blessed work. Let every hand lend him aid.

Europa, a new town, grown up rapidly, but solidly, on the G. P. road, in Webster county, was chosen as the seat of the next District Conference.

The lay delegates to the Annual Conference are: Prof. Dabney Lipscomb, W. H. Smith, W. L. Neal, and J. H. Barrentine.

The Conference directed our excellent secretary, R. M. Smith, to send certain reports of committees to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE for publication.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

West Point, Miss.

This is a railroad center with a population of about 3,000. Nearly every family is connected with either the Methodist, Baptist, Cumberland Presbyterian, Old School Presbyterian, Campbellite or Episcopal Churches, each of these denominations having an organization, and have church edifices, of which the Baptist is the finest. Our church and Sunday-school is the largest in numbers and has the greatest influence. It is under the wise and faithful pastor, Rev. Amos Kendall, who has increased the attendance at public worship, particularly at the Wednesday night prayer meeting. His ministry is effective, specially his pastoral work, in which he is ably aided by his zealous, prudent wife. The Sunday-school of our church at this place has enrolled 150 children, and is well conducted. It has over one-third as many children in attendance as are going to the public school. Five of the nine teachers in the latter are Methodists.

Bro. Kendall has a fully organized Epworth League, which is slowly developing the young people of his interesting charge. The Ladies' Aid and Woman's Missionary Society are live institutions in this church. The parsonage is one of the neatest, best built and most comfortable preachers' homes in this Columbus district, and, judging by the way Brother and Sister Kendall care for their guests, the preacher in charge is well provided with the good things of the land.

The Methodist Church building is a large brick edifice with a handsome auditorium, and were a few hundred dollars expended on its exterior, would be one of the most attractive churches in West Point.

The Young Men's Christian Association is doing good work, both among the young and old. A popular and useful service is held every Sunday evening, which is well attended by all denominations. A secretary is constantly engaged in its work. The association owns a neat and suitable building, eligibly located in the center of the town. It also has an excellent gymnasium.

M.

"Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and forever"—just as strong as when he stilled the tempest, just as mighty as when he overcame the darkness of death and led captivity captive.

Notes.

In the matter of salvation "man extremity is God's opportunity," when we realize the fact that there is other help in the universe.

"If a man looks for God, God knows that he is looking. He that seeks songht. Take trouble to win a blessing harder for you to get than others, and you shall have bestowed upon you better than you sought."

The New York Christian Advocate says:

The centenary of John Wesley's death was observed by a clergyman of the Church of England in Christ Church, New Zealand, who took a curious course, considering his position, of preaching to his parishioners on Sunday evenings a series of Wesley sermons.

Here is a paragraph from Luther which may be pondered with profit: "The world continually gapes after prodigies; it many a time mistakes chalk for cheese, and gladly believes in apparitions; believers keep to the Word and follow it. I have very often prayed my God that I might not see any vision or miracle, nor be informed in dreams, since I have enough to learn in His Word."

Nothing demonstrates the inefficiency of the city government of New Orleans so clearly as the fact that since it was founded a great river has poured its flood of waters right by its doors and yet in a drouth, like that we have had the past few months, thousands of people suffer for water! More than a hundred years has brought no remedy. If that is not inefficiency of the most glaring kind, what is it?

A missionary paper publishes the following, and we would be glad to know whether the "gigantic servant" was in Mississippi or Louisiana:

A minister in the South, who was a very small, slender man, once had a fervent prayer offered in his behalf commencing as follows: "O Lord, bless this thy gigantic servant, whom thou hast set over us for the extermination of the gospel! Bless him, O Lord, with unmitigated ages of the world to come!"

Dr. Parker, of London, says of pulpit eloquence that it is conversational in its base; that "the eloquence of memorized sentences is dead—except among the very young and the extremely feeble. The eloquence which meanders with the rills, floats with butterflies, languishes in pale moonlight, plashes in crested foam on the golden sand, bathes itself in crimson sunshine, and generally makes a fool of itself, is vanished into the nothingness out of which it came."

"To sit through two hours of commonplaces in order to preach a 10 minutes' peroration" is a penance. Perorations in sermons should be as frequent as heads. Monotony in matter and manner is fatal to attention. A close critic said to a young minister, "Why don't you strike fire sooner?" "Oh, it takes me about half an hour to wake up." "Then," said he; "you had better take the greater part of the half-hour in the cemetery behind, and come in when the steam is fairly up."

Oh! ye possessors of hearts made of stony ground; which instead of blossoming fair as Eden, and fruiting abundantly, are being hardened by continued treading of sin, and scorched under the blighting breath of vain thoughts and unholy desires; ye who have heard the Word of the Lord a thousand times, and yet its warnings are but the frenzy of a nightmare, and its promises the utopian dreams of a visionary enthusiast; little wonder that no impression is made on your hearts. It is not "good" soil. Break up your fallow ground, and see if the Lord will not rain his blessing down.

While listening to the speeches of the young men during the recent commencement exercises at Centenary College, we were gratified to see that upon every proper opportunity they did not hesitate to give the Lottery the whack! They regarded themselves and every young person in the State insulted by the infamous proposition that money filched by Lottery methods should be applied to the cause of education. Evidently those young men are being trained in the right direction, and some of them will vote next August, and we are sure all Centenary boys will vote solidly against the gambling institution.

The following significant paragraph is from the pen of Mr. Spurgeon. It is plain, but worth considering:

On looking back through thirty years of church life, we are compelled to come to the conclusion that the most unsatisfactory members we have ever had have been those who were best satisfied with themselves. One brother became so thoroughly sanctified that he could not live with his wife, and another had so clean escaped from faults of every sort that he quitted us all in disgust. We find in the Sabbath-school, the lay preachers' association, the Christian young men's meeting, and in all other forms of work, that as soon as any of the brethren or sisters begin to brag about their holiness, they become wholly useless, and before long the place that knew them knows them no more.

Personal and Otherwise.

We regret that we were out when Dr. Hoss, the editor of the Nashville, called.

The manager of Harper's Weekly, Richard Harding Davis, is just twenty-six years old!

Ex-President Hayes has been attacked by an illness which has deprived him of his voice.

We are glad to announce that Dr. Walker has recovered from his recent illness and filled his pulpit on Sunday.

A brother sends two dollars from Olive Branch, La., to pay his renewal, but does not sign his name. Who is he?

The New Delta did us the honor to publish in its Monday issue our article of last week on "The Lottery Amendment."

Prof. R. H. Jesse, formerly of Tulane University, was inaugurated president of the State University of Missouri, June 3.

Rev. J. M. Henry, of Shreveport, will preach the sermon before the Y. W. C. A. at Mansfield College, June 14.

Under the new emigration law polygamists are prohibited from coming to this country. Anti-polygamist Mormons are not disturbed.

The Standing Committee on Episcopacy of the diocese of Louisiana voted for the ordination of Phillips Brooks as Bishop of Massachusetts.

Bro. Sostenes Juarez, the senior member of the Central Mexico Conference, died on May 25. "He died as he had lived—in the triumphs of a living faith."

Alonzo S. Weed, the publisher of Zion's Herald, while attempting to board a train in Boston, June 4, was run over, and it is feared will die from injuries received.

We were glad to meet many old friends at the commencement of Centenary College. These yearly reunions of friendship are the pleasantest part of that yearly visit.

Sir John Macdonald, premier of Canada, died June 6, at the age of seventy-six. He has been prominent in Canadian politics for more than twenty-five years.

Dr. F. M. Grace, of Hiwassee College, gave us a pleasant call on Tuesday. He is traveling in the interest of his college, and for the present his address is Bunkie, La.

The lay delegates to the Annual Conference from Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference, are: Prof. Dabney Lipscomb, W. H. Smith, W. L. Neal and J. H. Barrentine.

We are indebted to Miss M. E. Compton, president of Port Gibson Female College, for an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of that flourishing institution, to begin June 12.

Dr. W. C. Black, of Jackson, Miss., will deliver the annual sermon for Port Gibson Female College, June 14, and President Hunnicutt, of Centenary College, will deliver the literary address, June 16.

The editor just had time to prepare his account of the Centenary commencement when he took his bed with a scorching fever. It took the doctor four days to bring him up again, just in time to see this issue go to press.

A rich treat is in store for the people who shall attend commencement exercises for Mansfield Female College, La. Rev. W. H. LaPrade, pastor of the Carondelet Street Church, New Orleans, is to preach the commencement sermon.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

A private note from Rev. A. D. McVoy, Jr., our preacher at Natchitoches, says that his health has been so poor all Spring as to unfit him for work, and that he will spend this month at Hot Springs, Ark., seeking physical restoration.

The Southern Presbyterian Assembly adopted with but little discussion the overture that women be not permitted to speak in public. If any of the sisters of that persuasion have been talking in public, they must now "hold their peace."

Last week we published a call for help for Bro. A. B. Nicholson, of the Mississippi Conference. We have received from a friend, who does not wish his name published, a check for twenty dollars for that good brother. Who now will follow that?

For years there has been conducted here a Sunday-school for the Chinese. A good number of these scholars have joined several of the churches here. They have recently raised money to support a Chinese Bible reader in the city of Canton, China. That is the right spirit. Our people might learn from these.

The Minutes of the District Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Sardis district, Mississippi Conference, show: Adult societies in district, 18; juvenile societies in district, 13; members in both, 687. Number of Woman's Missionary Advocates taken, 125. Societies organized since March, 1890, 10. Money raised since March, 1890, $345.

Postal Card Reports.

—Bro. Crisler, writing from Washington, Miss., says: "We have a good Sunday-school at Washington; fine Wednesday evening prayer meeting; Ladies' Aid Society. Kingston has a flourishing Sunday-school, Woman's Missionary Society, and Church Repair Society. Good Sunday-schools at Locust Grove and Linwood. Four members received this year."

—Rev. J. H. Smith, Weir, Miss., writes: "Last Sunday was observed as Children's Day. It was a delight to all. The children delivered themselves nicely and forcibly. Then we had a sermon to the children and preaching at night, at which time one of our Sunday-school children came forward and took the vows of our church. May the Lord help him to be useful to the church and save him in heaven!"

—Rev. T. W. Lewis writes from Greenville, Miss.: "We had a good day at Greenville, yesterday. The Sunday-school is flourishing, and Judge Trigg is happy. Good congregation at preaching. In the afternoon the Juvenile Missionary Society had a public meeting, which was instructive and inspiring. Miss Mamie Head presided like a Bishop, and Miss Susie Trigg, lady manager, deserves great credit. The Y. M. C. A. is about the livest thing we have in Greenville. Dr. Jones and the boys are having grand meetings every Sunday."

—Rev. S. J. Davies, Campo Bello, La., writes: "The revival fires are still burning. Since my last report eight more have joined the church on this charge, and many have been blessed. News came last night that Coushatta is aglow. Denson, Whatley, Williams and a visiting brother from Texas wrought valiantly for the Lord, with Bro. Harp at hand to direct the forces. We hope soon to see a report from the pastor in charge. Our district Conference convenes at Grand Cane on June 18. Como; a warm welcome awaits you. Shreveport is mobilizing her forces and looking around for a Joshua to lead. Many thanks are due Bro. John Foster for efficient help. We gladly give them."

—Rev. G. W. Bachman, colporteur of North Mississippi Conference, writes: "At the close of the first half of the Conference year I desire to make the following record: I have visited twenty-six churches in twenty-two pastoral charges (some of them more than once) and attended four District Conferences. More books, church papers and Sunday-school literature have been put in circulation than during the corresponding period of any previous year since our colportage work began. Many new acquaintances have been made and old ones renewed and friendships formed that I hope will felicitously abide through time and in eternity. God bless all who have helped the work and been kind to the workman. Thank God for ability, opportunities and success thus far, and may he guide and help us to greater results during the remainder of the year. I join my fellow-laborers in the ministry in daily prayer and effort for a genuine and general revival of religion in our Conference this year."

"Men as Trees Walking."

The fifth brother is still "trying to see the way clear" to become one of the ten to pay $100 annually to send a missionary to Japan and to keep him there. I am confident in his ability to open the way himself, and am now looking for the sixth man or woman, and so on to the tenth. What better way to invest money? What will pay better interest and give more joy in time or eternity? One man I know who pays $300 for cigars and less than $10 to missions. And others—waste more than $300 on self.

Keep the Soul on Top.

Little Bertie Blynn had just finished his dinner. He was in the cosy library, keeping still for a few minutes after eating, according to his mother's rule. She got it from the family doctor, and a good rule it is. Bertie was sitting in his own rocking-chair before the pleasant grate fire. He had in his hand two fine apples—a rich red and a green. His father sat at a window reading a newspaper. Presently he heard the child say:

"Thank you, little master."

Dropping his paper, he said:

"I thought we were alone, Bertie. Who was here just now?"

"Nobody, papa, only you and I."

"Didn't you say just now, 'Thank you, little master?'"

The child did not answer at first, but laughed a shy laugh. Soon he said: "I'm afraid you'll laugh at me, if I tell you, papa."

"Well, you have just laughed; and why mayn't I?"

"But I mean you'll make fun of me."

"No, I won't make fun of you; but perhaps I'll have fun with you. That will help us digest our roast beef."

"I'll tell you about it, papa. I had eaten my red apple, and wanted to eat the green one too. Just then I remembered something I'd learned in school about eating, and I thought that one big apple was enough. My stomach will be glad if I don't give it the green one to grind. It seemed to me for a minute, just as if it said to me, 'Thank you, little master;' but I know I said it myself."

"Bertie, what is it that Miss McLaren has been teaching you about eating?"

"She told us to be careful not to give our stomachs too much food to grind. If we do, she says, it will make bad blood, that will run into our brains and make them dull and stupid, so that we can't get our lessons well, and perhaps give us headaches, too. If we give our stomachs just enough work to do, they will give us pure, lively blood, that will make us feel bright and cheerful in school. Miss McLaren says that sometimes, when she eats too much of something that she likes very much, it seems almost as if her stomach moaned and complained, but when she denies herself, and doesn't eat too much, it seems as if it was thankful and glad."

"That's as good preaching as the minister's, Bertie. What more did Miss McLaren tell you about this matter?"

"She taught us a verse one day about keeping the soul on top. That wasn't just the words, but it's what it meant."

At this papa's paper went suddenly right up before his face. When, in a minute, it dropped down, there wasn't any laugh on his face as he said:

"Weren't these the words, 'I keep my body under?'"

"Oh, yes! that was it; but it means just the same. If I keep my body under, of course my soul is on top."

"Of course it is, my boy. Keep your soul on top, and you'll belong to the grandest style of man that walks the earth."—Anon.

Partners.

A sturdy little figure it was, trudging bravely by with a pail of water. So many times it had passed our gate that morning that curiosity prompted to further acquaintance.

"You are a busy little girl today?"

"Yes'm." The round face under the broad hat was turned toward us. It was freckled, flushed, and perspiring, but cheery withal. "Yes'm, it takes a heap of water to do a washin'."

"And do you bring it from the brook down there?"

"Oh, we have it in the cistern mostly, only it's been such a dry time lately."

"And there is nobody else to carry the water?"

"Nobody but mother, an' she's washin'."

It was not a well-considered compliment, and the little water-carrier evidently did not consider it one at all; for there was a look of surprise in her gray eyes, and an almost indignant tone in her voice as she answered: "Why, of course I help her. I always help her do things all the time; she hasn't anybody else. Mother'n me's pardners."

We looked after her as she picked up her pail and walked on, bending under her load a little, but resolute, and with no thought of complaining or shirking. A stout, old-fashioned, homely little body she was, but we called her mother a rich and happy woman.

"I've Got Orders Not to Go."

"I've got orders, positive orders not to go there; orders that I dare not disobey," said a youth who was being tempted to enter a smoking and gambling saloon.

"Come, don't be so womanish—come along like a man," shouted the youths.

"No, I can't break orders," said John.

"What special orders have you got: come, show 'em to us, if you can; show us your orders."

John took out a neat wallet from his pocket, and pulling out a neatly-folded paper: "It's here," he said, unfolding the paper, and showing it to the boys. They looked, and one of them read aloud: "Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of wicked men. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away."

"Now," said John, "you see my orders forbid me going with you; they are God's orders, and by his help I don't mean to break them."—Selected.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

"I'd Rather Do It."

Passing along a busy street the other day, I saw a little boy carrying a basket which seemed to tax his strength to its utmost capacity. Indeed, at times it looked by his jerks and extra efforts as if its weight would bear him down beneath it. I observed to him:

"My boy, that basket is rather heavy for you to carry, is it not?"

"Yes, sir," he replied. "But I'd rather carry it than that my mother should have to do it."

Brave boy! He had the right idea of life, although his clothes and general appearance would not lead anyone to suspect it. How many so-called accomplished young ladies are playing the piano or doing fancy work while their mother is busy with the cares of the household! Daughters, think how you can help to make your mother's life and labors lighter and less a burden.—Selected.

HOUSEHOLD.

Don't Hurry.

The famous answer to the man who said he had too little time to do a certain thing, that he had all the time there was, has apparently never been laid to heart by many active and energetic people. These restless and rushing persons seem to be under the impression that they have only a small bit of time, and that all they are to do in life must be done at once if it is to be done at all. Instead of drawing on time as if it was a large deposit, subject to constant demands as needed, these people attempt to draw out the whole amount at once. They impress one as having no reserve of leisure or opportunity. They are under the harrow of the present moment, and they are driven when they ought to guide and control. There is time enough in life for all rational people to do what they ought to do; time enough, without impatience or restlessness, or the hurry which destroys the sense of repose and saps the reserve force. To take life breathlessly is to miss the deepest and richest part of it! To be always on the run is to lose all the sweet delights and resources which come through an open mind and quiet observation. The hurried man or woman never has time for anything; not even for the thing in hand. For the work done in a hurry, and done to the exclusion of many other things, always bears the mark of incompleteness and haste; it is never a completed and finished product. To do is one of the great human obligations, but it is secondary to the obligation to grow. By all means do your work with your whole heart and with all your strength; but do it with quietness of spirit, that you may not only accomplish the thing in hand, but make it expressive of your own nature and receive back from it that strength and added power which constitutes the rich reaction of activity.—Christian Union.

THANK THE CHILDREN.—They run on our errands, upstairs for our books and slippers, our thimbles, our new magazines; downstairs to tell the servants this thing or that; over the way to carry our messages; to the postoffice with our letters and parcels.

They leave their work or their play a dozen times in a morning, to do something to oblige us who are grown up, bigger, stronger, and apt to be less absorbingly occupied than they.

No game of politics, or business in later life, will ever be so important to the man as ball and top to the little lad; and no future enjoyment of the little girl will ever be greater in degree and in kind than her present in her dolls and her play-house; yet Johnnie and Jennie fly at our bidding, arresting themselves in mid-career of the play which is their present work, and, alas! half the time we quite overlook our own obligation to be grateful.

We do not say, "I thank you!" And because we do not say it, we make it difficult for them to be as polite or simply courteous, as otherwise they would be by nature, and the imitation which is second nature to all children.—The Household.

WORTH THOUGHT.—There is a pathetic story in a late number of Good Housekeeping about the heartache of a little child whose mother had "a faculty" for doing everything. She superintended donation parties, Sunday-school picnics and Fourth of July celebrations. She was an adept in making the craziest of crazy quilts, of the kind which contains in itself "sufficient condensed disorder to start a lunatic asylum," but for two and a half years she never found time to dress a doll for her little girl. The child, left to amuse herself, wandered into a cold room, hugging the precious unrobed doll in her arms, and finally died from the exposure. No doubt this is an extreme case of thoughtless neglect, and yet we believe that children often suffer from having their interests thrust aside as of no account. It is by no means necessary to coddle children and never leave them to their own resources, in order to avoid this; but we do need to guard against starving their natures by withholding a due amount of sympathetic interest in their pursuits. There are times when even dressing a doll or making flannel rabbits is the noblest ministry a mother can give a child.—Congregationalist.

SCIENTIFIC.

Hypnotism as a Therapeutic Agent.

A discussion of hynotism as a therapeutic agent was held at a recent meeting of the Islington Medical Society, London, when Mr. Pridgin Teale and other speakers described some phenomena which they had witnessed. They were followed by Sir Andrew Clark, who characterized hypnotism as a "distortion of the partial sight of truth," and predicted that, like mesmerism years ago, it would have its day and follow into desuetude. Seeking for the physiological truth contained in the subject, he looked for the groundwork of many of the phenomena in the relation of will to the body. The communication of the will with the body, he said, brings about wonderful changes in it; and, independently of will, there is the exercise of attention, of expectation, and of concentration; and we know that without the introduction of any foreign agency—that is to say, the agency of any other person—attention, expectation, and concentration of will operating together bring about most remarkable results in the human body. There are many homely illustrations of this fact—as when one has a headache which disappears on the coming of some unexpected visitor, to return as soon as he is gone, or when a patient is relieved on the administration of a bread-pill. The speaker himself had been so interested in looking at a microscopic object that people had come into his room and spoken to him, and he had not heard or seen them. Looking at these physiological conditions, a great many things can be brought about which are described as being induced by the agency of another person. The speaker estimated the frequency with which such agencies can be made successful as in inverse proportion to the development of the higher ganglia. People are influenced by them in the inverse order of their intellectual faculties, and in the direct order of the automatic activities of the brain; hence the range in which such phenomena are capable of being seen and produced is practically what is called the neurotic range. This includes people whose nervous systems are movable, excitable, sensitive, irritable, or explosive. All such people are capable of manifesting phenomena which are brought about by attention, expectation, and concentration; and we find, too, that all these phenomena occur in people with a lowly developed nervous system, which is to a great extent automatic, and is manifestly enforced by emotion. The hypnotic phenomena which are related were supposed to be capable of explanation on the simple physiological grounds thus laid down, without the introduction of any person exercising a mysterious power.—Popular Science.

A New Discovery Wanted.

It does not appear at all probable that electric lighting, carried out on the present lines on a large scale, will ever be cheaper than gas lighting. Its superiority in so many other respects to gas lighting may ultimately lead to its very general adoption, but it must be obvious to everybody that complete success can not be hoped for until some entirely new system, by which a greater proportion of the available energy is converted into light, has been discovered. In a gas flame not more than one per cent. of the energy consumed appears in the useful form of light; and in the electric arc (our most efficient form of artificial light), the proportion of useful effect is only raised to 2 or 3 per cent. The remaining 98 or 97 per cent. being below the limit of the visible spectrum, is wasted in the form of invisible heat. Light waves produced by combustion or incandescence are invariably accompanied by an enormously larger proportion of waves of a lower pitch, which merely produce heat; or as Dr. Lodge puts it, "It is as though, in order to sound some little shrill octave of pipes in an organ, we were obliged to depress every key and every pedal, and to blow a young hurricane." The writer just quoted also predicts that a boy turning handle could, with his energy properly directed, produce as much light as is now produced by the consumption in massive mechanism of large quantities of fuel.

Certain recent investigations by Langley and Very with spectroscopic and thermal estimations were made, and the result was to show that the whole of the radiant energy of the firefly lies within the visible spectrum. No radiant heat, below the red end of the spectrum, could be detected by the bolometer, an instrument which has proved sufficiently delicate to measure the thermal radiation from the moon. It was concluded that insect light is associated with about one four-hundredth part of the heat which is ordinarily associated with the radiation of flames. "Nature thus produces light at about one four-hundredth part of the cost of the energy which is produced in the candle flame, and at but an insignificant fraction of the cost of the electric light."

These investigations of Langley and Very are of the greatest interest, as showing that the attainment of an enormously higher effieiency in the production of artificial light is contrary to no law of nature, and may suggest a system of electric lighting destined to supersede the enormously wasteful methods at present in use.—Electrical Review.

A Life Saved!

READ THE TWO STATEMENTS.

An Extraordinary Case!

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 22, 1890.

Last April I was attacked with Chagres Fever in Spanish Honduras and was given up to die by two physicians. During that spell and since I have used a pound of quinine and quantities of other medicines without any benefit. From three to four days out of every week I have been down and have suffered untold agonies. Between these spells I could scarcely walk more than two blocks at a time. I did not expect to live through the coming winter. Ten days ago I commenced using Dr. King's Royal Germetuer.. I have had no fever since. All the symptoms have entirely disappeared. I have no pain or trouble of any kind. Am gaining strength very fast. Can walk miles at a time. My sudden and rapid improvement is simply wonderful. Germetuer has been a God-send to me. I can not say too much in its praise. Any who wish to do so may call on me. DANIEL PAPPON, 481 Jersey Street.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1891.

My improvement continued, and soon after writing the above statement I was able to go to work and have been working ever since. My health is now perfect. I never felt better in my life. I give this testimony gladly, because I know that Germetuer saved my life. DANIEL PAPPON.

Chagres Fever is known to be not only a most dangerous form of sickness, but also very difficult to cure. Germetuer has been tried on a number of cases. In every known instance it has cured quickly and completely. It has a similar record as a remedy for Swamp Fever and Malarial troubles of all kinds. Properly used, it is the quickest and most unfailing remedy for Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Debility, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Dysentery and all diseases of the Blood and Skin.

These claims are sustained by evidences from thousands of the best people in the country, and the evidences multiply in our midst every day.

For sale by druggists and country merchants, and at the Germetuer office, 202 Canal St., New Orleans. For full information, circulars, etc., call on or address Kit Williams, Agent, 202 Canal St. $1 bottle; six bottles for $5.

OBITUARIES.

WATKINS—On Monday afternoon, April 27, 1891, we laid to rest in the cemetery in Natchez, beneath a mountain of flowers that loving hands had brought, all that was mortal of ELOISE, the wife of Dr. B. D. Watkins.

As the days of her illness passed, the public sympathy and interest became more and more enlisted, and when on Sunday afternoon her gentle spirit took its flight, many hearts in Natchez were bowed in grief and many eyes were filled with tears of sympathy and sorrow.

ELOISE RENNEA was the youngest daughter of Capt. D. G. and Mrs. Minnie G. Renner, and was born in Natchez, Miss., May 15, 1866. Most of her short life was spent in the beautiful city of her birth. Here she received her elementary education, and here, in early girlhood, she joined the Methodist Church.

In 1885 she went to Columbus as a student of the Industrial Institute and College, where she remained until the summer of 1887. While here she was converted, and the happy, thoughtless girl became the happy, thoughtful woman. Upon her return home she became deeply interested in the children of Wesley Chapel, among whom she organized a "Band of Hope," and with whom she continued to work until September, 1888, when, having been elected a member of the faculty of Whitworth College, she left Natchez for her new post of duty. At the college she soon became a favorite, winning her way into the hearts of all by the gentleness of her manner, the sunny brightness of her nature, and her consistent and abounding Christian zeal.

On June 11, 1889, she was married to Dr. Watkins, and in his home, sustained by his love, and happy in giving him the devotion of her heart, she entered upon a life that seemed filled with the promise of years of happiness and peace. But how little do we know of that which shall be! As I stood beside the broken-hearted husband, looking upon the flower-covered grave of the wife, and remembered the happy bride of little more than one year ago, I realized the desolation of a home and the wrecking of cherished hopes. What means this overturning of life's plans, this sinking of the sun of happiness in a great dark sea of sorrow? It means that there are elements in the solution of life's problem that we see not—forces that are beyond our control. It means that there are principles that are spiritual, powers that are too subtle for physical analysis, and that eternity enters into the sublime equation of human happiness. It means that "the things that are seen are temporal; the things not seen are eternal."

Eloise was singularly attractive. She was beautiful in face, graceful in movement, and gentle in manner. She combined in a remarkable degree the playfulness of a child and the dignity of a woman. Naturally affectionate, when her heart had been touched by the converting influences of the Holy Spirit, her love for those about her was intense and her zeal abounding.

While at Whitworth College she would gather the girls in her room for prayers on Friday evenings, and sometimes, surrounded by the great crowd of school-girls, she would pray for them so tenderly and sweetly that some of them would sob, and, sobbing, give their hearts to him who gave his life for them. I doubt not that the impress of her beautiful character has been stamped upon the heart of many a girl who at this time came within the circle of her influence.

She was not afraid to die, she said. She would like to stay; but was not afraid to go. She thought only of the loved ones she was leaving.

A beautiful, bright-eyed baby girl—baptized Eloise Renner—is left to cheer the lonely father's life, and warm the chilled heart of a sorrowing grandmother. May God bless the child, and may the holy influence of a sainted mother's life dwell in her heart forever!

A. F. WATKINS.

BAKER—Entered into rest, May 18, 1891, Mrs. ANNIE C. BAKER, wife of H. L. Baker, of Natchez, Miss. She had for some time been suffering with that dread disease, consumption. She knew that she would soon be called to her home in heaven, where she would be free from all pain, and she was fully prepared to meet her God.

Mrs. Baker was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, and although by reason of her illness she has been kept from being an active member for some time, yet by her sweet Christian influence she has been doing good work for her Master. At her request that beautiful hymn, "Gathering Home," was sung during the funeral services, and it is a comforting thought to her friends and loved ones that if they follow in her footsteps, they can meet her in that city, where one by one "God's children are gathering home."

We deeply sympathize with her family in this time of sad bereavement. But she has only gone before, and her dear ones can again be with her in the mansions prepared by the kind Father, where she will welcome them home.

GARLINGTON—Mrs. SARAH GARLINGTON, the wife of Rev. S. S. Garlington, and daughter of Jerry and Elizabeth Hackabery, was born in the State of Mississippi, June 24, 1819. Her mother died when she was only seven years old, and she was raised chiefly by her aunt. She was married in Franklin county, Miss., Dec. 21, 1840. She came with her husband to Claiborne parish, La., in 1842, where she resided until 1863, when they moved to Calcasieu parish, near Sugartown, and from there to Rapides in 1877, and settled near Spring Creek Camp Ground; lived there until she died, Nov. 21, 1890.

Sister Garlington was converted and joined the Methodist Church in 1860, and a more devoted Christian the writer never knew. To know her was to love her. I never knew a kinder mother, a more loving companion, a brighter Christian, than Sister Garlington was. She was patient and submissive to the will of her heavenly Father. She was ready and willing to die. She leaves four children and many friends to mourn her loss. She has gone to meet her loved ones gone before, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.

W. W. MONAGE.

PARKER—Mrs. MARY CORNELIA PARKER (nee Crawford) was born Dec. 15, 1852, in Copiah county, Miss., and died at her home, near Rocky Springs, Claiborne county, Miss., Feb. 25, 1891. She was happily married to B. F. Parker, April 18, 1875; joined the M. E. Church, South, in the seventeenth year of her age, and was converted at the same time, and ever after lived a devoted Christian life. When asked if she was resigned to die, she replied, "Oh, yes; I have made ready for that long ago!"

Her life is ended, but her gentle influence will ever live to brighten the lives of those she loved. She is lost to us for the present; but our loss is her gain, and we have a hope both sure and steadfast.

During her last illness her sweet little daughter, MAMIE, was taken violently ill with congestion, and in three short days after her mother's death, she, too, soared away to that blest home above, and mother and Mamie were again united.

She leaves behind a tender, loving husband; a son and three little daughters, an aged father and many dear relatives and friends to mourn her loss; but we mourn not as those who have no hope.

Hindrances to Prayer.

A man's head may be wrong: "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be an abomination" (Prov. xxviii, 9). God will not pour his blessings upon an inverted vessel. The man that will not hear and heed the law shall not enjoy the gospel. The soul that is deaf to the commandment is dead to the promise. A mind to hear and a heart to hold go together. Just as well try to fill an inverted goblet as to try to put God's answer to prayer in an inverted soul. Place yourself in an attitude to receive.

A man's faith may be wrong: "He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. xi, 6). Faith opens the heart to let the prayer out, and keeps it open to let the answer in. God will not waste his blessings upon a closed vessel. We must open our hearts, as the flowers open their petals to catch the dews, while God opens the windows of heaven. The hoit to heaven's door may be under God's thumb; the latch-string to our hearts is in our own hands.

A man's purpose may be wrong: "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it with your lusts" (James iv, 3). The Lord will not give his funds to a prodigal or selfish man. He will not pour oil into a leaking vessel. We must seek his gifts for holy uses. He does not bestow power upon us that we may destroy ourselves or wreck others; not for lusts, which mean ruin, but for love, which means redemption. Set our sails in the divine direction, and he will fill them with heavenly breezes. Change our purposes so that they will conform to God's will, and he will grant us power to serve.

A man's heart may be wrong: "If I regard iniquity in my heart, he will not hear me" (Psa. lxiv, 18). God will not pour the oil of grace into an unclean vessel, nor will he waste his wine of blessing by pouring it into a heart that is already filled with fraud and lies and hypocrisy. All iniquity must be purged away; all indwelling enemies be driven out. God will not abide in the heart where his foes are encamped and intrenched.

These hindrances are man-built, and can be removed by man. "Take ye away the stone," was the order of Jesus to the sisters of Lazarus. What man could do that he must do, and he is foolish to expect Omnipotence to stoop to the task. If more than man can do is needed, God will do it. Remove these hindrances, and let us ask and expect divine help.—Dr. G. A. Munhally, in Pulpit Treasury.

From Seven Thousand Dollars to Twenty-One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixty-Three Dollars.

Twenty-one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three dollars has just been paid by The Mutual Life Insurance Company on an original $7,000 insurance policy.

A result never equaled or even approached by any other company in the world. The fortunate assured was Mr. Charles Deilinger, of Mobile, Ala., who was forty-one years old when he became a member of the company.

RECAPITULATION.

1—Cash value of the dividends 100 per cent. of premiums.
2—Additions to policy 143 per cent. of premiums.
3—Insurance paid 312 per cent. of original amount.
4—Investment, 3 per cent. compound interest.
5—Insured 44 years, from age 41 to age 85.
6—No taxes, care or expense connected with the insurance.

Remember this company is purely mutual; all profits belong to the members. It is also the largest and most profitable company in the world. Mr. T. H. Bowles is the general agent, 120 Common street, New Orleans, La.

Faith is an improvable principle. It is subject to growth, to decay also. How important to our peace and safety that it be cultivated to the utmost vigor! Faith may be a little or a great faith; its littleness or greatness are dependent upon its culture. No telling how it grows; all growth is a mystery. It grows by feed. Faith is fed by meditating on God and reading and meditating on his Word. Faith is cultivated by fasting and prayer. These put iron in its blood and make its sinews strong. Practice makes perfect faith; it grows by exercise. Obedience helps it much. Faith aids in holy living; holy living strengthens faith. Works without faith are dead, but by works faith is made perfect. There is no principle more important, none so simple, none so little understood, none so rare, none so sadly neglected as faith.—St. Louis Advocate.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy care. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Caving banks at Southport carried away the lower end of the wharf of the Mississippi Valley railroad, and with it 1,500 sacks of wheat which had been placed there, entailing a loss of $20,000.

The lower House of the Michigan Legislature has passed a bill appropriating $100,000 for the State exhibit at the World's Fair. The committee of the whole agreed to vote $150,000, but the House did not concur. It is possible that the amount may be increased in the Senate.

The largest application for sugar bounty filed so far is that of the Western Beet Sugar Company, of Watsonville, Cal., which was received last week. The estimated amount of sugar to be produced next season is 8,000,000 pounds, which would give the company a bounty of $160,000.

Some time ago Collector Phillips secured a list of whalers who had obtained large quantities of whisky at Honolulu and then sailed for Alaska. The revenue cutters Rush and Bear have been instructed to overhaul all the whalers. All whisky, except small quantities for medical purposes, will be seized wherever found in order to keep liquor away from the natives.

The Indianapolis and Louisville fast train ran into a tornado near Crotlersville, Ind., last week, as it crossed the track. The engine and train swayed fearfully and passengers were panic-stricken. The engineer could not stop until the train had pierced through the cloud, the train going nearly fifty miles an hour. Its speed saved it from being wrecked.

President Polk, of the National Farmers' Alliance, has arranged through his forty State Alliance presidents to have mass meetings at several points in each of the forty States during the next four months, with a view of accomplishing the greatest amount of good. There will be hundreds of speakers (the president of the Alliance says) to educate the masses before the assembling of the Fifty-second Congress.

The plan prepared by Assistant Secretary Nettleton for restricting immigration into the United States has been submitted to the President and approved, and was embodied in a circular letter and sent to all steamship companies bringing emigrants to this country. The attention of steamship and other transportation companies is particularly called to the provisions of laws now in force excluding "persons likely to become a public charge." Doubtful cases should be excluded from the passenger lists.

Goes the story of the excellence of Hood's Sarsaparilla and what it has accomplished, and this is the strongest advertising which is done on behalf of this medicine. We endeavor to tell honestly what Hood's Sarsaparilla is and what it will do, but what it has done is far more important and far more potent. Its unequalled record of cures is sure to convince those who have never tried Hood's Sarsaparilla that it is an excellent medicine.

A-head of everything that can be used for washing and cleaning, is PEARLINE. If your work is heavy, it is a necessity; if your work is light, it is a luxury. It lessens the labor of washing, and helps everywhere in the housework. There's nothing so harmless—nothing so effective—nothing so popular and yet so new—it is rapidly succeeding soap. Try it for washing dishes—try it for washing anything—everything; only try it—for your own sake and ours. A house without Pearline is "behind the times."

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back.

he reports of preachers and dele- es from the various stations and cir- ts showed generally a good condi- n of affairs. Some things were to deplored; but there was much for ich to be thankful. Every sermon a good one. The fellowship was et, and brotherly love abounded.

There was a mutual, curious in- t that was awakening.

ut some one else must write up the rict Conference. I wanted to tell about the college. In the college , on Sunday morning and night, op Galloway preached two charm- sermons to densely packed audi- s—the one on the "Greatness of, ility," the other on the "Power Function of the Church in the e." These are our names for them. ice it to say, they were up to the sure. Thus was gracefully merged Conference into the commence- t exercises.

onday night was given to recita- , music, and a calisthenic sword l, all of which delighted the audi- , showing great artistic taste and ough training.

esday was commencement day. ten o'clock the hall was again ed. The large platform was ded with dignitaries from Church State, the faculty, and candidates graduation. Four young ladies, r reading their polished essays in best style, received diplomas. Miss de Myers was the valedictorian, Miss Eugenia Costly salutatorian. D., the orator of the , delivered a masterly address on "Biblical Archæology," which delighted and edified all that could take it in. His chief aim was to show that recent explorations into the buried past corroborate the truth of God's Word. The summing of the testimonies strikingly mark the age we live in.

Tuesday night was the children's night, in which every little boy and girl had a chance, by music and song, by recitation and calisthenic drill, to take part. The recitations were admirably selected and rendered, without exception. The hat drill by the little boys, the doll drill by the little girls, and the parasol drill by the young ladies, highly delighted the audience, showing the most thorough training. There was not a mistake throughout. To those only who deal much with children is it known how much of labor, taste and skill is necessary to train such numbers to such perfection in uniform action.

All praise to the faculty of Edward McGehee College. Woodville is to be congratulated on having an institution which affords the very best training for young ladies. President H. Walter Featherstun is an able writer, an accomplished scholar and thorough disciplinarian, and is beloved by his pupils. His accomplished wife, to whose genius and tasteful skill we were mostly indebted for the double menu afforded by the exercises, is a lady of rare artistic skill, both in painting and music. The halls of the college were literally covered with exquisite paintings and crayon work, the work of her own hands and that of her pupils of this and former years. This display of art was a happy surprise. The music on piano and violin showed that a mistress of the art, Miss Hallie Galloway, had charge of that department.

At the conclusion of the exercises five medals were awarded, as follows: To Miss Anna Belle Cain, for elocution; to Misses Odelo Hood McGehee and Miss Emma May Featherstun for music, and to Master John Semple and Miss Mamie Semple for scholarship in the primary and academic departments.

The writer is aware of the fulsomeness of accounts of this sort, generally; but he is in dead earnest, and thinks our community will join him in the assertion that the recent commencement of Edward McGehee College was evidence of first-class work in every department.

J. W. BROWN.

Prohibition.

Prohibition is a good thing. I have been a prohibitionist fifteen years. I first prohibited myself from drinking intoxicating liquors, and prohibited their use in my family. Next, I joined a temperance society, and tried to induce others to prohibit themselves from drinking intoxicants. Then our town took up the fight against saloons under the old petition system. We fought the saloons several years, with varying success. Sometimes we were counted out by a process that would have put to shame the 1876 eight-to-seven fraud. Afterwards the Legislature gave us the local option law, and under that law we have had two elections in our county, and each time prohibition triumphed by a good majority.

In all these fights, beginning with my total abstinence and coming on up through the petition and local option fights, I have been loyal to the foundation principle with which I started, viz: the complete overthrow of the liquor traffic. Never have I swerved for a moment from that avowed purpose.

But now a strange thing has happened. I am denounced as an "enemy to prohibition," "in league with the whisky power." Why? Am I opposed to State prohibition? No. I have ever been a constant believer in prohibition for State and nation. This has always been my avowed purpose. Then why am I denounced? Simply because I do not agree with some prohibitionists on a line of policy. They believe in attempting to force a vote on State prohibition, whether there appears any hope of success or not.

I am told local option is license. It allows saloons in counties that have not enough prohibitionists to vote them out, and is oblivious to the jug traffic. Now, let's take a practical illustration. My county voted for prohibition by 300 majority; the adjoining county voted for whisky by 1,000 majority. And now I am denounced as an enemy to prohibition because I favor a law that allows my county the benefit of its prohibition majority, rather than a measure by which my county and her neighbor will vote together, which will result in the two counties going for whisky by 700 majority. That is a beautiful theory and extraordinary logic. It need not be replied that no measure is proposed for two counties voting together. I know that. But it is proposed to wipe out local option because it is license, and let the whole State vote now on constitutional prohibition. As things now exist, it is clear to my mind that the vote would result as in case of the two counties above referred to. This is according to my best information and judgment. But I am met with the reply, "We think the time has already come when we can carry the State as a whole." Be it so. You and I differ on that. But is that any reason why you should denounce me as being in "league with the liquor traffic?"

A large part of Tennessee is now under prohibition by the five-mile law and other local option measures. But the five-mile law is license, because it allows saloons in counties where the benefits of the law have not been invoked. Suppose Tennessee had repealed its five-mile (license?) law before it took the vote for constitutional prohibition, what would have been the result? Whisky saloons in every county. I reckon all the five-mile districts are glad it was not repealed. Am I answered that it is not necessary to repeal our local option law till we see whether we carry the State? That answer will not do, because if local option is license—and so we are told by high authority—all good prohibitionists must seek its speedy repeal.

Again: If local option is to be held responsible for the jug trade in my county, is not State prohibition responsible for it in Bangor, Topeka, and other cities in prohibition States? Sauce for the gander must be sauce for the goose. But I expect to work on for the complete overthrow of the liquor traffic, despite all denunciations from other prohibitionists, until we have finally carried our State; then I expect to be denounced because I am not willing to give up prohibition in Mississippi till we can carry the United States at one time; and when we are nearing the time, after having carried State after State, when we can carry the United States, I expect to be denounced as "in league with the whisky traffic," because I am not willing to give up prohibition in the United States till we can carry the whole world at one time; and when we shall have carried nearly every country on the globe, and are about ready for the final triumph, shall I then be denounced as "in league with the whisky traffic," because I am not willing to give up all we have gained, and leave the whole question to a combined vote of both earth and hell?

If no other man will have prohibition, I will; if no other family will have prohibition, I want it for mine; if no other town, I want it for mine; if no other county, I want it for mine; and I will help all others just as fast as I can. But, in the meantime, if everybody will not accept it at once, do not denounce me for claiming it for myself to just as great an extent as I can possibly get.

MISSISSIPPI.

The June number of the W. M. Advocate has an editorial on the above subject, which, while written in a kind spirit, is hardly a fair statement of the case. This writer has publicly objected to the executive sessions, and, therefore, feels constrained to explain further. In the article referred to four points are taken:

1. The executive sessions are "erroneously called secret sessions." If so, they are not executive sessions. We do not hear of other religious bodies in the bounds of the M. E. Church, South, resorting to executive sessions, but in things political the term designates a secret session. The United States Senate holds executive sessions, which are secret, and are held for the purpose of securing and preserving absolute secrecy.

2. "Bodies of this kind have the liberty to enter into these executive sessions." "Bodies of this kind" is too indefinite to be good logic. Other religious representative bodies do not seem to have this right. In political affairs secret meetings open the way for fraud and corruption; witness the Farmer's Alliance. Spectators may be a wholesome restraint.

3. There are points of character of missionaries, and changes in the work, which it would be unkind to make public, "even if it could be done without consuming time in making explanations." This sounds reasonable; but the editor controverts her own argument in the last sentence of her article, thus: "Conference secretaries will inform district and auxiliary secretaries, so that every auxiliary may know everything that has been done by the Board, and the reason for such action, if desired." If all may know through Conference secretaries, why may they not know directly from the Board? Second-hand information is not the most satisfactory. This argument of the editor clearly admits that members of the W. M. S. must see affairs only through the eyes of Conference secretaries. As the Conference secretaries assist in the proceedings, their vision may not be the clearest. Moreover, this argument gives the impression that executive sessions are held only to consider such delicate matters as the character of missionaries; but the editor of the W. M. Advocate knows that the executive session which roused opposition was held solely to consider the training-school. What was there in the training-school that required secrecy, or even privacy? It was important and interesting, but no delicate question of character. Diligent inquiry, on the part of this writer, failed to unearth a reason. The only semblance of reason given was the plea of expediting business. Now, how can spectators retard business except by disorderly conduct? Are the visitors who attend the meetings of the Woman's Board riotous and disorderly? The suggestion is comical.

4. "In these sessions the Woman's Board is resolved into a committee of the whole. No committee ever works in public." Here is shown entire ignorance of parliamentary law on the point in question. "Committee of the whole," so far from being private, is the most public and informal session that can be held by a body. When a body goes into committee of the whole, it lays aside, for the time, its power to take final action, and is open to unlimited debate. Outsiders are not only admitted, but are allowed to address the assembly when they would not be allowed to do so in more formal sessions. The executive session of the Woman's Board is in no sense committee of the whole. As to the claim that no committee works in public, it can be said that no committee, unless in extraordinary cases, settles anything. A committee simply investigates, and brings in a report.

This is not written for the sake of controversy, but to defend the right as it appears to the undersigned.

MRS. ROBERT SOMERVILLE,
Dist. Sec. W. M. S.

Atlanta Again.

As I said in my previous communication, Atlanta is a wonderful place, and nothing small about it, if you believe the reports of her citizens. Not an adverse criticism have I heard since I came. Yes; one boy of about ten years old did tell me that he didn't like the school where he went. That was an honest boy, Mr. Editor, for who ever heard of a ten-year-old boy loving anything that pertains to a school-room? So the Atlantaan construed that into an evidence of the excellency of her school system.

Atlanta boasts of the marvel of the age in house-building in her magnificent capitol, containing more than 120 rooms. It was built within the time specified; and of the one million dollars appropriated, more than one hundred was returned to the treasury. Well, that is a marvel in this day of supplemental appropriations, when all work done for the State, or government, is charged for at higher rates than for private parties, and with the expectation of a supplement to complete. The building is three stories high, and of oolitic limestone from Indiana and Georgia marble.

I visited the Georgia Soldiers' Home—a monument to the energy of the lamented Henry Grady, as familiarly called here. It is now ready for occupancy, but is waiting for an appropriation from the State for the support of those who may enter it. I hear a diversity of sentiment. Some think it a wise investment; others consider it a useless expenditure built upon a sentimentality, and destined to a failure. I much prefer the Mississippi plan of appropriating so much money (only it should be more per capita), and let every disabled old soldier feel independent and free to select his own home.

There has been quite an excitement in the city over the action of the council enforcing the Sunday law last Sunday. The soda water venders complained a little; but the cigar and cigarette smokers rose up in wrath and indignation. Both of the city papers express themselves freely on what they styled the "moral spasms of the council." As usual, they cried out for personal liberty, individual rights, oppression of the will of the people. When will our newspapers learn that the law-abiding Christian people have some rights and views that are as worthy of respect as those of the wicked, dissipating, law-breaking rabble? When will they stop long enough to examine and see that it is the one that supports all good governments, while from the other we get the jail-birds and inmates for our penitentiaries?

There was a call for a citizens' meeting for the establishing of another paper, which would be the exponent of the views of the better class of people.

I enjoyed a delightful entertainment, given by Dr. Catching's sixteen-year-old son, a few nights ago, at the home. Being of a mechanical and scientific turn of mind, he has, with his own hands, made quite a complete set of electric and chemical apparatus. The power and uses of electricity are demonstrated fully and forcibly by means of his miniature motor and other machines (all the work of his own hands). His demonstration of the effects of the gases, as obtained from different sources, was perfect and highly entertaining. Such ingenuity and talent in this day of invention has before it not only a wide field, but great promise of success. His laboratory is his recreation-room.

You will see that this is from Lithia Springs, where I stop for a few days to try the "air and water." Were I a little later in the season, I might take in the Chautauqua exercise here. These grounds are beautiful, and buildings roomy. More anon.

Letter from Japan.

MR. EDITOR: Many thanks for your excellent paper, which comes to me by every mail, and we read it with a great deal of pleasure and profit. Our kind Christian friends can not realize how eagerly we look and wait for our home mail, and sometimes we are disappointed. Now and then we hear some one say, "Well, I did not get a single letter," and it was evident there was a disappointment. Our situation is different, vastly different from that of Christians in the home-land, and especially so in the case of those of our number who live away in the country, and surrounded only by a heathen people. A few lines from Christian friends to the missionary in a heathen land brings great joy to his heart. It fills him with hope, and gives him fresh strength to go forward with his work. I know this from happy experience, for there have been times in my life when I have gone to preach the Word of God to a heathen congregation, and the Word seemed to fall upon hard, stony ground, and I felt discouraged. But, on going home with a burdened heart, and weeping over the hardness of those to whom I preached, I have been cheered by words of encouragement from some dear brother or sister just at the time when I needed such encouragement, and it always gave me a new and fresh impulse to go forward with my work, trusting in the Lord. We have thousands around us who care nothing for the message of love we bring to them; but the few who have come out from the darkness into the light give us much encouragement by their faithfulness. And the many promises from God's Word brings trust and confidence to our hearts, and we know that his Word never changes.

I would urge Christian friends to write to their missionaries among the heathen, and encourage them by words of sympathy, and it will not only be a blessing to your own souls, but it will infuse new life into a brother or sister's heart who toils daily to lead the heathen to Christ for salvation.

The Lord is blessing the work in the midst of a great deal of opposition, and many here and there are being gathered into the church in Japan and China. Glorious news comes from the land of Sinim of many hundreds and thousands being converted. We praise God for these tokens of his love to fallen man, and we rejoice that through his great mercy we are permitted to see this day. Do the majority of Christians fully appreciate the glorious day in which they live? If so, it seems to me the signs of the times would be a wonderful incentive to a closer walk with God, and more earnest endeavor to extend the kingdom of Christ among men. When I look to our own Christian land, and to Christian England and Germany, and see the many thousands rising up to make known the way of life through Christ; and when I see such an earnest spirit in many missionaries in many lands, who not only give their money, many of them, but give themselves to aid in the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom, my heart is filled with thanksgiving and praise to God that we live to see this day. We ask an interest in the prayers of the whole church.

I send in this a notice of an attack on the Czarowitz, Prince of Russia, while visiting in Japan. I will quote from one of the papers of Kobe:

"An attack was made on the Czarowitz, Prince of Russia, not far from Kyoto, by a policeman. The Czarowitz and party—including Prince George of Greece, Prince Arisugawanomiya, the Russian minister, and several Japanese officers—left the hotel at Kyoto on the eleventh, about nine A. M., for the town of Otsu, on Lake Biwa, about nine miles distant. The foreign party were all in citizens' dress, and rode in jinrickshas. They visited several places of interest at Otsu, and then went to the official building for lunch. On leaving there returning to Kyoto, while riding in a jinricksha, a policeman cut at the Prince with his sword, striking him on the head, and inflicted quite a wound. Before the policeman could make another cut, Prince George of Greece, who was riding immediately behind the Czarowitz, jumped out of his jinricksha and struck the man with his cane, which partly stunned him. Another policeman cut the would-be assassin on the left side of his head and his shoulder. This was about two P. M. on the eleventh. The Prince returned to the official building and had his head dressed, and then returned to Kyoto to the hotel. The man who made the attack on the Prince has since died of the wound he received. The Prince is said not to be in any danger, but is recovering. It has produced a great sensation in Japan, and will all over the world."

The Emperor of Japan came down at once from Tokyo to see the Prince, and deeply regrets the sad affair. Telegrams from Russia have called the Prince home. What the result will be no one can tell.

Ever yours, J. W. LAMBUTH.

What Others Think of Us.

In the circuit court in Jackson, Miss., the other day, two parties pleaded guilty to the charge of selling lottery tickets. Judge Chrisman said on that occasion:

If public rumor could be trusted in respect to the extent of the traffic in Jackson, and the failure to indict other persons than the defendants, there must be a very lax public sentiment in respect to the duty of enforcing the law. It is hardly possible that any considerable number of this community want to buy, and are not, therefore, opposed to the sale. The patriotic and moral element in the State of Louisiana are just now engaged in a hand-to-hand fight for deliverance from the corrupting influence of the Louisiana State Lottery.

This organized political iniquity is threatening to take possession of the executive, legislative and judicial departments of the government of that State. No such vile instrumentality for evil could be licensed or would dare to precipitate such a struggle in any other State of the Union. This result is not because the people of that State are worse than other communities, but because this political villainy got a foothold in the State when the carpet-baggers had possession and had invaded with its money and intimidated with its thugs, overshadowed with its influence men in every department of the State government. Let us take warning and not allow it to get a foothold here, and the time will never come when this people will fall so low in the scale of civilization as to make such a contest as is being waged in Louisiana, doubtful here.

CLOUD LAND.

BY EMILY HAWTHORNE.

The clouds, ever-changing clouds,
Floating airily by,
Weaving webs in the sky—
The beautiful, silvery clouds.

The clouds, the luminous clouds,
And clouds like lace,
Nearly veiling the face
Of the luminous, sunset clouds.

* * * * * *

The clouds, most glorious clouds,
Rising higher and higher—
Great pillars of fire—
The grandest of glorious clouds.

The clouds, the terrible clouds!
They gather and roll,
Like despair o'er the soul—
Most terrible, threatening clouds!

* * * * * *

The beautiful, beautiful clouds!
Oh, could I but write,
As I sit here to night,
All the grandeur, the beauty of clouds!

Small Salaries.

The word small is somewhat indefinite, as it does not designate any stipulated amount. Nor do I know whether it is used in the positive degree, exclusive of the comparative and superlative degrees or not. In that case, my messger information, learned by a year and five months' course in the smaller salary department of the ministry, is irrelevant to the subject in discussion, and I might well conclude my article just here by saying: Under peculiar circumstances, involving the success of a most unfortunately indisposed minister, a small salary might be utilized by the divine Father to bring him into tenderer sympathy and closer fellowship with the poor, and thus enlarge his usefulness manifold; but, under ordinary circumstances, a smaller salary is liable to curtail his usefulness and endanger his reputation. Of course, no preacher's character is "crippled because of small salaries," provided he has the economy and good management to steer clear of debts he can not pay; but to say it does not decrease a minister's success and cripple his reputation for a church to so financially embarrass him that he is forced to do without many of the real necessities of life or contract debts he can never liquidate, would be to disregard the unanimous testimony of all good people. That God overrules the hardships incurred by small salaries for the ultimate happiness of his servants, just as he makes all evil praise him, I think, is unquestionable; but that a small salary system intended for their specific present good is in accordance with the deliberate rulings of his providence, admits of many doubts. "Owe no man anything, but to love the brethren," I have always taken to be the Bible rule for the ministerial life, and that any theory discordant with it was untrue in sentiment and dangerous in practice. If I am wrong, I will be very grateful to some one to set me right.

Bro. Thompson says: "Bro. Medlock ought to contrast the present salaries of ministers to the sixty-four-dollar salary of primitive Methodist preachers. Who would intimate that their characters were crippled because of small salaries?" No one, I suppose. But surely Bro. Thompson would not "intimate" that the "sixty-four-dollar salary of primitive Methodist preachers" made them abler and more successful ministers, and that the preachers of the present day are less energetic, consecrated and useful because they receive larger salaries. This would give us a new chapter for the "History of Methodism," and an additional article of religion for our Discipline. But be it remembered, the "sixty-four-dollar salary" system of the earlier and formative period of itinerant Methodism was not adopted and practiced for its usefulness in keeping the preacher in sympathy with the poor and unfortunate. Who, for instance, would smirch the pure, saintly, immortal name of Bishop Asbury by insinuating that he was selfish, proud and covetous, and was forced by the church to live on a "sixty-four-dollar" salary to keep him humble and in companionship with the indigent? History has embalmed his name in the tenderest affections of every Methodist heart and emblazoned his character with the perennial glories of Christian gracefulness by telling us of his voluntary self-sacrificing labors for the poor lost souls of our American soil. Would it not be disreputable to intimate that he would have been less humble, gentle, loving, self-denying and abundant in labors if he had received an eight hundred or thousand-dollar salary?

And, in verity, are the preachers of the M. E. Church, South, of the present day proud and avaricious? Is it a fact that they need to be humiliated and brought to feel their Heaven-imposed responsibility? And can this be accomplished in no other and better way than by decreasing their pittance of a salary to the starvation limit? Surely no one will cast such a dark shadow on the men who are expending the life-energies of their consecrated manhood in the glorious strife that is so rapidly bringing the heathen to the divine Savior, and that will, ere long, under the halo illumination of the Holy Ghost, usher in the supernal glories of the millennial morn and present the world to Christ as his God-bequeathed patrimony. A single glance at anyone of our Conference journals will convince the most obstinate that such is not the case. Were they proud and penurious, they would not accept the appointments they fill with such joyous, enthusiastic interest and endeavor. What the average salary of the entire church is I am not prepared to say, but I don't believe I would run any risk in assuming that itinerant Methodist preachers get less for the kind and amount of work done than any other class of men, professional or otherwise. For culture, intelligence and industry the average minister will compare favorably with the average man of any profession or business, and if ease, pleasure and profit were the objects of his pursuit, he would be a "gourd-head," indeed, to seek them in the itinerant ministry. And how comes it to pass, pray tell me, that the lawyer standing at the bar of common justice, pleading his legal lore to save his client from jail, must be liberally remunerated for his service, while the God-commissioned herald of the cross, who prays, studies and labors night and day to save his immortal soul from the unquenchable fires of tophet, must live on starvation wages?

Bro. Thompson's quotations from Mr. Green are quite foreign to the subject. They are merely historical facts that prove nothing for either side. No intelligent Christian would, for a moment, entertain the idea that the Friars and other sects of the Middle Ages were better than other Christians because of their poverty. It was by no means necessary for them to subsist on the alms of the poor and possess neither money nor lands to be meek, humble, worthy disciples of the glorified Redeemer. If so, it is, ipso facto, necessary that everyone "that nameth the name of Christ" should be a common beggar. How far this comports with the teachings of the blessed Christ is readily seen by reading the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew. Christ there makes it one of the Christian duties of his followers to feed the hungry, clothe the nude and administer to the relief and comfort of the sick and imprisoned. I suppose he included ministers, too, in this work of "Good Samaritanism." If he did, and "they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel," as said one of his inspired apostles, they are not only to receive sufficient to feed and clothe themselves and families decently, but a surplus also to contribute to our unfortunate worthy poor. To appeal, then, to the life and teachings of Christ to prove that small salaries are right, would be worse than futility. Not a trace of sympathy for such a doctrine can be found in a single precept, promise or act of his. He lived and taught on the broad philanthropic principle that "the laborer is worthy of his meat." Whether herding his master's flocks on the grass-carpeted hills and plains of Judea at the still hours of night, with the stars that fleck the heavens with their meek-eyed beauty as his only companions, tilling the maternal soil that yields its luxuriant harvest in generous response to the hand of industry, or going to and fro through the earth as a Heaven-chosen vessel to carry light, peace and salvation to human homes and hearts, he "is worthy"—equally worthy in either employment—"of his meat." He sent out the seventy as heralds of his coming kingdom upon this broad, benevolent, divine principle of justice. He gave them instructions to carry with them neither money, scrip nor purse, for he deemed them worthy of their food and clothing; and that whatsoever city, town or hamlet would not receive them or minister to their needs should be condemned and doomed by the dust shaken from the soles of their sandals.

If a small salary system is the law of Christ's kingdom for the good of the ministry, it should be recognized and provided for by the laws regulating our itineranoy. That such provision has not been made is sufficient evidence that such conviction has not obtained. On the contrary, the laws governing the ministry of the M. E. Church, South, breathe the very same principle of divine justice that underlies and permeates all the teachings of Christ, the Lord. The preachers are sent forth as messengers of peace and good-will without any provision for their material support further than "the laborer is worthy of his meat." It is only when the people are known to be too poor to support the preacher sent them, or too ignorant of the Bible to appreciate its truths, that any other provision is made for his temporal wants. But even in this special provision, the small salary theory does not obtain. If any difference, the missionary is to be more liberally supported. The church before accepting his application and sending him to his field of labor makes all necessary provision for his material wants. The only difference in the missionary and the home preacher is, the latter is sent in answer to the call of an organized circuit or station that pledges itself in asking the Conference to send him, to give him a liberal support. The former is sent in response to the single voice of the Macedonian imploring the church for beneficent work. The entire church assumes the responsibility of supporting the one, and the individual circuit or station the responsibility of supporting the other. That the church, then, in sending out her preachers to proclaim the unsearchable riches of the gospel of Christ the Lord, anticipates that they will be cared for decently and comfortably, is unquestionable. That every preacher is to receive a salary sufficient to defray all his necessary expenses and keep him clear of debt, is implied in the questions asked and the vows taken when he enters the cavalry of our itinerant ranks. "Are you in debt so as to embarrass you?" is put to each individual preacher, and unless he answers in the negative he is refused. Immediately following this, he promises in the most solemn manner to give his entire time, talents, energies and activities to the work of the ministry as his highest and only employment. Therefore, until preachers become covetous, the ministry a lucrative business and the church over-liberal in her allowances and settlements of salaries, I can see no need for an editorial to stress the other side some, too.

Bro. Thompson says: "It is easy to theorize." But "to theorize" logically requires a great deal of thought and painstaking.

D. M. GEDDIE.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

How anyone can conscientiously read the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, or any other Advocate, without paying for it, and that, too, up to time always, I am unable to say. It requires money to run these papers; and from all I can gather, it requires cash money. To say the least of it, everything runs better on a cash basis. Even a preacher can preach better when he is backed up with the cash. The Committee on Publishing Interests reported during the last session of our Conference (Mississippi) that we had 3,147 subscribers within the bounds of our Conference to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and that more than one-half of these 3,147 subscribers had not paid up their subscriptions, and hence a debt of $5,259.15 due the ADVOCATE. When we remember that we have a membership of 37,658, and only 3,147 subscribers to our ADVOCATE, it is enough to make us blush; but when we remember that more than half of this number of subscribers are in debt to the ADVOCATE, it is enough to make us weep. No Methodist can be careless about his debts without dying spiritually, for his source of spiritual life is God, who gives only when his terms are complied with fully, and one of his terms is, "Owe no man anything." (Romans xiii, 8.) God hates dishonesty in every form. In collecting for the ADVOCATE, we are given names of subscribers whose postoffice is the same with ours; but they live in different charges, and, consequently, when we mention their indebtedness to the ADVOCATE, they claim it to be right for them to pay it to their preacher, which is right; but if they fail to do so, why, we are thought to be derelict as agents for the ADVOCATE. Whereas, if every subscriber would become so sensible of the necessity of paying his honest debts as to pay up promptly his subscription, there would be no further trouble, we think. Let every derelict try it.

Sunday-School.

(An essay read by Miss May Dickey, at Lewisburg, "Children's Day," and published by request).

The general idea of Sunday-school is soul culture. By a careful perusal of the Pentateuch you will find that the duty of teaching God's law to the young is very clearly set forth. Our modern Sunday-school is very unlike the parent institution. Its growth is so marvelous that it has been compared to that of a little seed which, being sown in good soil, brings forth a goodly tree to shower its blessings of fruit and flowers on all around. In olden times the Scriptures were taught in the Jewish synagogue in very much the same manner as in our Sunday-school to-day.

Sunday-school has done more towards the advancement of civilization than any other institution in the world (except the preaching of the gospel). Solomon's saying, "Train up a child in the way he should go," is very clearly demonstrated here. The two-fold object of Sunday-school work is to bring souls to Christ and to build them up in Christ. The chief instrument to be used for the accomplishment of this grand and glorious purpose is the written Word of God. In a Sunday-school children and adults, rich and poor, all meet together; hence it is here that we find the broadest field for dispensing divine truth and setting forth the unmistakable language of the Cross. The Sunday-school and church are very closely allied. The Sunday-school is as necessary to the church as sunshine and rain are to growing vegetation. An indispensable condition to success is week-day work. Sunday religion is like the polar summer. In order to secure the best results we must, therefore, choose men and women whose lives have been thoroughly regenerated by the saving grace of God, so that they will be ready to sacrifice personal interests and selfish pleasures to the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom. Teachers should seek to prepare themselves for this work as much so as for secular schools. The pastor may add greatly to the enthusiasm of the participants by manifesting interest and bestowing praise where it is due.

Another important thing that should be attended to is the finance. The best system ever adopted for securing Sunday-school contributions is that of regular weekly collections. In most places the school is left to provide for itself, and this is one potent reason why so many are compelled to go into "winter-quarters." The prevailing policy is to let the Sunday-school take care of itself. The result is that very few are properly equipped for work. It is the duty of every church to provide for the support of its own school. On an occasion such as we have met to celebrate to day, it is a great privilege for the children to be able to contribute their mites to this great work; but it is very wrong to require them to keep up the pecuniary interests of a home Sunday-school. It gives them a wrong conception of its object. My earnest request is that we take this matter under our careful consideration.

Methodism and Local Option.

When the General Conference of 1890 said, "We will continue to agitate the subject of prohibition as a great moral question in all its bearings on the life and work of the church, and strive, with all good citizens, by all proper and honorable means, to banish the horrible evil from our beloved church and country," did that body expect to be referred to in support of the extreme position that the principle of local option is false? And when in the General Conference of 1886 they said, "We recognize in the license system a sin against society," did they mean that local option was a sin? That was among the "means" then in operation by "good citizens" to secure prohibition. Did they mean, when they said "by all proper and honorable means," that improper and dishonorable means had been used, and expect us to read local option between the lines? The sense of the General Conference is determined by considering the clause, "by all proper and honorable means," and the purpose to "continue" them.

How to Develop Workers.

Every pastor has realized the painful fact that only a small per cent. of our membership are actively engaged in any way, and idleness is one of the great evils of the day. This is true, to some extent, in all our circuits and stations. It is the duty of the pastor to regulate the machinery of his charge, and give each member something to do. This is no small task where there are four or five hundred under his care. One man can not supervise such a large work. In this case I have found it good to appoint a class leader for every twenty or thirty members, and commit to his care the work of advising and reproving, as the case may require. These leaders should be selected with care. They should be men of sound piety. Let the pastor see them often, and inquire into their work; so that they may feel that they are required to give an account of their work. This will help the pastor greatly in his work, and, at the same time, place a responsibility on several men that will do them good.

The weekly prayer meeting is indispensable. The church can not prosper without the social meetings. This brings the pastor before his people each week, and the people expect him to make a prayer meeting interesting and profitable; so he carries all the responsibilities, and the people are left "at ease in Zion." In this case I have found it good to place the responsibility on the people, instead of the pastor, by putting the work in the hands of a committee, say, of three discreet persons, and change the committee by giving them one new member every month. This will give two of the old members and one new member to work together at the same time. Let this committee select a subject at one meeting for the next, and announce the subject, and request the people to read and think on the subject during the coming week. This prepares the people to understand the services of the hour. Let one of the committee be the organist, and select those songs that are appropriate to the subject. This helps the people to worship intelligently, and will provide better singing. Let another member of the committee have charge of the children, and once a month bring a few of the children before the people to recite some good pieces. After they have been well trained, the children will always acquit themselves well, and delight the audience, and this will train the children to do something for the Master. Let the third member of the committee provide two persons to address the people at each meeting. Give the speakers notice, at least, one week before the time, so they may prepare to speak to the point. Change the speakers every week. This will furnish a variety of talent and style. Let the pastor be present and conduct the devotional exercises, and advise with the committee about the selection of the subject. It is good to select such subjects as will remind the people of their duty, and warn them of their dangers. I have found those plans to be good, and with such methods you may succeed when seemingly others had failed. This insures progress and variety; hence the prayer meeting does not become monotonous, giving something new at every meeting. Always open and close the meeting with prayer, and oftener, if expedient; and intersperse freely with song.

W. W. WILLIAMS.

Louisville, Miss.

Brandon District Conference.

I attended the Brandon District Conference last week, at Hickory, Newton county, Miss. In the absence of a Bishop, Bro. P. A. Johnston, P. E., presided. It was a harmonious and profitable meeting. It was well represented. The reports from the several charges showed an improvement in all essentials. It is a fact that the district has improved under the administration of Bro. Johnston, and it is in a better spiritual condition than it has ever been heretofore. He is laborious and painstaking, full of energy and zeal, and consecrated to the Master's cause. This is his fourth and last year, and, therefore, the district will not have his services next year. He will leave us with our prayers and best wishes for his success.

The Sunday-school and educational interests received proper consideration, and the reports showed they were being encouraged and advanced as they should be.

The Brandon District High School is located at Montrose, in Jasper county, and is in a most flourishing condition. It is not out of place to mention the fact that in the bounds of the Brandon district there are twelve high schools and two colleges—one male and one female. (They are not all Methodist schools.)

The church-building at Hickory was not large enough, and recently it has been extended sixteen feet, and is now one of the handsomest churches in the district. It has been newly painted, the windows beautifully ornamented and the seats made comfortable.

The love-feast, Sunday morning, and communion service were precious seasons. It was estimated that one hundred persons communed. The preaching was spiritual and practical, and many mourners were at the altar.

Hickory is twenty-two miles west from Meridian on the Vicksburg and Alabama R. R. The country around it is fertile, and the farmers industrious and thrifty. The people of the town are intelligent, orderly and cultivated, and are a unit in every enterprise to build up the town. There is a flourishing high school there. No place can excel it for genuine hospitality. It was remarked that nothing like disorder occurred during the meeting and that the behavior was excellent. Every member of the Conference had a good home during his stay and felt that he was a welcome visitor. May God bless the good people of Hickory for their kindness and hospitality!

A VISITOR.

P. S.—The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE was not forgotten.

Shall Tired Men Go to Church?

Yes; most assuredly!

Where else should he find rest—rest for the weary soul? Many persons of both sexes oftimes imagine they are tired, when, in reality, they are not; they are only lazy. After a hard day's work, how many will go to a theatre, and enjoy it, and laugh as heartily, and go out between the acts "to see a man," as often as those who have not worked during the day? Some men and women will go to a ball, and dance all night, after a hard day's work. A man, now in this city, was telling me, only last Saturday, that for four years he averaged, at least, five nights a week at balls and parties, after working hard all day in the stock department of a wholesale house. He says he is now suffering from the evil effects of his actions.

Depend upon it, it is either laziness or unwillingness, or both, that keeps people from church. How often you will see aged, infirm, and crippled children of God being led into the house of worship! There would be more excuse for them to stay at home than there is for those who are able to do a good day's work, and are in health. Besides, our blessed Savior says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And where will you find closer communion with him than in the sanctuary?

I say unto you, men, women and children, there is no excuse at all for staying away from your church, your Sunday-school, unless you are actually bed-ridden. A trifling indisposition, which is often magnified by the occasion, will not suffice. You may be able to deceive your neighbor, but you can not deceive God, who knows why you stay away—and it is because you are tired!

The Finality of the Lottery Fight.

The fate of the Louisiana Lottery is in the hands of the people of this State. It remains for them to decide whether their fate shall be in the hands of the Lottery after the vote on the proposed constitutional amendment. It is unquestionably within their power now to limit the life of that institution to the term which they themselves fixed by the adoption of the present Constitution twelve years ago, and they can do so with the assurance that no public exigency has arisen in the meantime to render necessary the continuance of a form of gambling which they then regarded as so pernicious and dangerous that they formally and expressly deprived the Legislature of all power to legalize it. If they please, they have only to undertake to support the government of this State as the governments of other States are supported. They will have no new and no unusual burden or responsibility to assume; for it has never hitherto been supposed in this country that any State would cede the prerogatives of Statehood with the ability to maintain itself by legitimate means, and certainly no new State would be admitted into the Union that acknowledge its inability to do so.

But what we wish just here to impress upon the voters of this State is the finality of the action which the adherents of the Lottery cause ask them to take. If they adopt the proposed amendment, it will remain a part of the State's organic law for a quarter of a century and the majority of those will be dead before the Lottery has any occasion to ask for another extension. Once in the Constitution, the amendment can not be repealed except by another amendment, submitted to the people by a two-thirds vote of both Houses of the General Assembly. It is true that this formality might be avoided by a constitutional convention, but it is also true that the whole influence of the Lottery will be strenuously and continuously exerted to prevent the calling of a constitutional convention. No matter what necessity may arise for the assemblage of such a body, the Lottery will find means to prevent it.

It is easy to foresee that the adoption of the proposed amendment would be followed in a year, at most, by the agitation for its repeal. Everybody knows what a carnival of corruption and disorder prevailed in Louisiana under Warmoth and Kellogg, and no body can have forgotten what desperate measures the masses of the white people of the State were ready to adopt to put an end to it. But the influence which will control the State government in all its branches, if the Lottery triumphs in this contest, will be in no respect better than those which brought this commonwealth in debt and put its name to infamy during the reconstruction era. For twenty-five years the Lottery will continue, as now, to present the supreme issue and to draw the dividing line in Louisiana politics. It will be its effort to elect as large a majority as possible to every Legislature and to every convention which assembles in this State.

But what is to be hoped, and what not to be feared, from a Lottery Legislature? Corrupt politicians drawing one salary from the State and another from the Lottery, will no there be itching palms, eager to accept a bribe from any speculator in human venality who has a scheme to put through at the expense of the people. And what protection or redress can be expected by a Lottery governor backed up by Lottery courts? Of course, such a condition of affairs will force an agitation for the repeal of the amendment; but the die of fate will have been cast. The Lottery is already tightening its sinuous folds around every institution of the State with the crushing strength of an anaconda. The public man who dares to oppose it is a man marked for its vengeance. He must not be seen in the Legislature or to Congress; he must not have a judgeship, or an executive office high or low, but he must be pursued with misrepresentation and calumny, until he is driven from public life. Even in business circles the Lottery mafia has its hired stilettos at wages a war of intimidation.

The time to fight this monster is now. A combined and determined effort on the part of the good people of the State will bring relief to Louisiana. The result of the fight here, whatever it may be, will be final so far as this generation of Louisianians is concerned.—New Delta.

INTRODUCTORY.

Our lesson for this date recounts the events occurring at the time of the third invasion of the kingdom of Judah by Nebuchadnezzar. At this time, city and country formed a tributary province of the Chaldean king, having been made so on the deposition of Jehoiachin. Instead of this man, the Babylonian monarch had set upon the throne Mattaniah, under the name of Zedekiah. He was simply a vassal to Nebuchadnezzar. At the time of his elevation to the royal chair, Zedekiah was but twenty-one years of age. At the end of nine years of reign he foolishly made an alliance with Egypt, thereby rebelling against Babylon. He thus hoped to regain his sovereignty and throw off the yoke of his heathen overlord. But, no; human craft and scheming could not avert the impending doom. Not alone does every effect have an adequate cause; but every cause has inevitably a corresponding effect. Judah's sins, like Israel's, had been a monumental argument for total destruction; and the destruction came.

I.—THE CITY BESIEGED.

Thoroughly incensed at the perfidy of his vassal Zedekiah, Nebuchadnezzar came with a mighty army and marched against the city, and built forts around it, completely shutting it in. Jerusalem was, by the nature of its situation and by its splendid fortifications, incapable of capture by assault. He that would capture the city of David must be content to spend months and years at the task. The only method open to Nebuchadnezzar was to lay seige and quietly starve it into subjection. This he did with a patience and persistency that presaged victory to the city. Only once, and then for a very short time, was the seige raised. But the Chaldean army quickly returned, and for the space of one year and seven months never relaxed; nor did any help come to Zedekiah. God's prophet had foretold the doom awaiting Judah in these words: "The Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city and take it and burn it with fire."

The imprisoned king scorned the only escape allowed to him—that of surrender. He was too proud to acknowledge as conqueror the monarch who had betrayed. Not to draw a long comparison, but simply to point out a parallel, note the attitude of the prophet to the gospel. The good news comes to him shut up in the prison of sin and unbelief and sin, and promises to liberate him. But pride refuses to be cast out; sin has so blinded the man's spiritual sight that he can not see that he can only be made free from sin by becoming a prisoner of righteousness. The gospel calls for a full and unconditional surrender. Christ's law is to be followed; not to be debated and made to bend in directions of our own sinful indications.

Jerusalem's enemies were not all without her walls. Within the gates, a foe more to be dreaded than ten thousand armies, that spares not the helpless, that grants no armistice—Pestilent Famine stalked with murderous tread, slaying his thousands. In the fourth month this enemy prevailed. Resistence could no longer be offered, and then the Chaldeans poured in upon the ill-fated capital.

II.—THE CITY BREACHED.

Bread lacking, strength was gone; defenses could not be manned, and the way was clear for hostile forces to storm the walls. This they did with complete success. They made a breach on the north side of the city fortifications, and were soon busy gathering their prize. Evidently thinking the treasure secure, they delayed till morning. In the meantime Zedekiah, hearing of the disaster on the north side, made his exit through the south pathway into the plains of Jericho. Here soon after the Chaldeans overtook him, and, there being unable to offer resistance in his behalf, was captured and carried thence to Riblah, where judgment was given against him. His punishment was to be bound with fetters of brass; to see the two sons put to death, and to be deprived of sight and languish the rest of his life in a Babylonian dungeon. The condemnation came upon him for violating his oath to Nebuchadnezzar, and neglecting to announce the divine will made known by Jeremiah.

III.—THE CITY BURNED.

A month after the successful assault made upon the city, Nebuchadnezzar sent a captain of his guard to Jerusalem with orders to destroy the city utterly. He carried out the instructions to the letter. The houses of the Lord, of the king, and of every great man were consigned to the flames. What could not be burned was broken down; the army was set upon the walls and soon those magnificent structures were confused and shapeless masses. So great was the destruction in this line, that they were never again rebuilded till the time of Nehemiah. Then the people! Not only did God's temple and chosen city suffer, but his people, Judah, whom he had led as a flock, the apple of his eye; these were carried by the ruthless hand of the invader and carried away in exile. There, in the utter loneliness of their banishment, their hearts were filled with right to repentance; they hung their harps on the willows, weeping for sympathy for the captives; and though their heavy souls could arouse no melodies attuned to the sweet songs of the songs of Zion, yet they remembered Jerusalem. Let the tears mingled with the waters of the rivers of Babylon tell the story of a repentant nation. They were sincere. The Ishmaelitish was right. The Lord brought back the captivity of his people and caused them to rejoiced.

Two practical points: If Judah's sins brought about her destruction, what guarantee has the sinner that he will not die? Like causes, under like circumstances, produce like effects throughout the universe. If Judah's subsequent penitence secured pardon, what excuse has the sinner for not being saved?

Mississippi Items.

Vicksburg had a $60,000 fire on the sixth.

The mail rider on the route between Louisville to Ackerman was held up by a robber who rifled all the mail pouches.

The receipts of the refreshment booths kept by the ladies of the several churches during the "unveiling" at Jackson netted the neat sum of $1,200.

From our Mississippi exchanges we learn that the rains last week were general, and, as a consequence, crops of all kinds are beginning to show the good results.

The Mississippi papers are running over with politics, and we find it exceedingly difficult to glean any local items from them. Our brethren will do us a favor if they will send items of news from their several sections.

Pass Christian has thirteen artesinn wells, and in a few days will have two more. These thirteen wells furnish 1,210,800 gallons of good, pure water daily. This shows that the town is not only a watering place, but is well watered.—Coast Beacon.

The Queen and Crescent system designs to establish at Vicksburg a coaling station, with chutes and other appliances for loading vessels with coal. It is anticipated that immense quantities of Alabama coal will be handled.

Almost every paper gives an account of one or two or more "commencements," where the girls and boys exhibited the results of the training of the past scholastic year. We presume the boys are getting ready for Millsaps College, and the girls are prepared to assume—household cares!

Tupelo has a splendid brick schoolhouse, costing $15,000, just completed; seven churches, one furniture factory, one spoke factory, capacity 15,000 per day; six brick yards, one cotton compress, two live newspapers, two banks, one ice factory, one chair factory and two broom factories. There are three resident firms of cotton buyers doing business with Eastern and English mills. No town in North Mississippi has a brighter outlook or is pushing more rapidly to the front.

Cleopatra.

This beautiful Egyptian queen is said to have possessed wonderful charms of person. Our American women are prone to neglect their health, and should, when suffering from prostration, languor, female debility or weakness, use freely and regularly Creole Female Tonic, the best friend to woman.

Louisiana Notes.

Opelousas will soon have a brick factory.

A new $35,000 brick annex to the insane asylum was completed June 1.

The Baton Rouge Truth has just entered its tenth year. May it live long and prosper!

The Planters' General Supply Company, with a capital stock of $50,000, has been incorporated in Lake Charles.

W. W. Duson and associates have made application to the Comptroller of the Currency to establish a national bank in Crowley.

Opelousas Courier: Work on the United States government building is progressing rapidly. The brick work is nearly completed, and the structure begins to present an elegant appearance.

The Franklinton New Era says: "There will be no property sold at delinquent tax sale in Washington parish this year." How many papers in the State can say as good for their parish?

The Houma Times says: "The Lotteryites got a black eye last Sunday. According to their own report, 1,000 Democrats were present, and only 125 pledged themselves to support the Lottery. In other words, only that number joined the Progressive League. And this was given out to be a Lottery meeting, too."

The police jury of St. Mary parish have adopted an ordinance prohibiting drainage of sugar-house washing into the bayou under a penalty of $50 fine. This is a subject of great importance, as such drainage hitherto has polluted the waters of the Teche, rendering it unfit for use, killing the fish and causing a disagreeable odor, calculated to promote sickness. They also granted a public road from Campertown plantation directly to Franklin, decreasing the distance some five miles.

Gretna Courier: The Southern Pacific Railroad Company is building trestle work over its road in the parts that are inundated. A large force of laborers is now engaged at this work near the Ames' crevasse, and the company expects to have their trains running again in about six or eight weeks. Thus when the water recedes entirely from the track the main roadbed can be put in proper order while the trains are running overhead.

Brandon District High School.

To All Whom It May Concern, and Especially to the Methodists and Friends of Braudon District, Mississippi Conference:

The friends of education at Mt. Rose, through the influence of Bro. Massy, now deceased, built and presented to the district a nice and comfortable house, to which they wish to build an addition worth, when completed, $500. The whole property, when completed and painted, will be worth about $1,200. Up to this time it has not cost the district one dollar. To put the addition needed, $300 has been raised. Now, will the district and friends lend a helping hand? The school is located at Mt. Rose, sixteen miles south of Newton, and is known as the Brandon District High School. There were enrolled about 130 students the past session. When the addition is made we can accommodate 200 students. We must have the building; then we will have the students. The school is in a delightful community, healthy, and surrounded with bold springs of several kinds of water, freestone and mineral. This school is under the care of the M. E. Church, South, and is designed to prepare boys and girls for college. It is presided over by Prof. L. D. McLaurin. It is said in East Mississippi that when a McLaurin undertakes anything, it will succeed. The district is fortunate in having Bro. McLaurin at the head of this institution.

Brethren and friends, let us raise the other $200, and put our district property in first-class repair. There will be built this summer a first-class boarding-house. Anyone having a boy or girl they wish to send to a good school, to prepare them for college, free from the temptations of city and town life, you will not find anywhere a better school to send them. Board and tuition included, from ten to twelve dollars per month. For terms send to L. D. McLaurin, Mt. Rose, Miss. Of the commencement, what I saw, heard and felt, I could write much, nothing unfavorable; but I desist.

P. A. JOHNSTON.

"Can It Be False"—A Short Critique.

A good book is a blessing to everyone who reads it attentively, and an evil book a curse, however perused. I have read a fair number of works on the evidences of Christianity; but the book bearing the above title is the very best on the subject I have seen. Its style and diction approximate perfection. The author is as clear in his meaning as a sunbeam. If there is an introverted, awkward sentence, I failed to find it. As I read the wonder grew on me, that more had not been said about this really marvelous book. In a short prefatory note Bro. Howse disclaims any claim to originality. But he is original in his masterful genius for summarizing proofs and marshalling arguments. A great captain is praised because he marshals his armies, not because he makes them. Where other writers supposed the questions under discussion clearly vindicated and proven, he astonishes one by bringing in his most striking and convincing demonstrations. Jesus, Peter and Paul, each can be seen in the mind's eye, perhaps, as never before. Every preacher should read this book studiously and carefully, and thereby have his style improved, his mind furnished with important truths—in short, the entire man, mental and spiritual, elevated and quickened. But the book, the author intimates, is especially addressed to laymen. Then let them read and learn upon what a rock we stand.

Pardon me, Mr. Editor, if I trespass on your space or, worse still, on your patience; but if this article will induce others to read this book, I am assured my labor is not in vain.

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 35 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.

This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., Editor.

Thursday, June 18, 1891.

Briefs.

An exchange:

The Methodist missionaries in China number eighty-one—from our church, thirty-four; Church, South, thirteen; Wesleyans, twenty-two; all other Methodists, twelve. They have united in the China Methodist Union, and propose a common name for Chinese Methodism, a uniform course of study for native preachers, and one body of rules for native members.

The Missionary Review says that the chief religions of the world may be classified according to the number of adherents as follows: Christianity, 450,000,000; Confucianism, 390,000,000; Hindooism, 190,000,000; Mohammedanism, 18,000,000; Fetichism, 150,000,000; Buddhism, 100,000,000; Spirit Worship, 50,000,000; Shintoism, 22,000,000; Jews, 8,000,000; Parsees, 1,000,000. Total, 1,449,000,000.

The last census of Ireland shows that the Roman Catholics number 3,594,345, a decrease of 411,146 during the last decade. The Protestant Episcopals number 600,830, a decrease of 38,744; the Presbyterians, 446,687, a decrease of 24,047, and the Methodists 55,235, an increase of 6,396. According to the above, the Methodists are the only religionists that are on the increase in Ireland. They are a people that are right hard to head off anywhere.

With college commencements on every side and traveling teachers' institutes all about, the people of Louisiana have been kept in a ferment for several weeks. We venture to say that there are more colleges to the square inch in Louisiana than in any other State in the Union, and they are grinding out "graduates" by the score. If they do what they say, in a few years Louisiana will have the best-educated population of any State, South. Of course, then we don't need Lottery money.

Dr. Thomas Francis Gailor, newly elected Episcopal Bishop of Georgia, although now only thirty-five years of age, has, according to press reports, declined a $10,000 offer to become pastor of Trinity Church, Chicago, the chair of dogmatic theology in the General Seminary of New York, and the bishopric of Michigan, to which last, however, he was not elected. His name was on the list of candidates, and he begged to have it withdrawn. An unsuccessful attempt, too, was made to persuade him to take the deanship of Racine College. And now he declines the bishopric of Georgia. We think him very certainly a declining man, and his like is not a numerous tribe.

In these days when the very foundations of the Christian faith are so persistently and so resolutely attacked, the leaders of the hosts of Israel should seek to make themselves capable men. The struggle is tremendous, and nothing but thorough preparation and watchful vigilance will stand against the enemy, and nothing less than an enthusiastic aggressiveness will drive him from the field. There are two books which we specially recommend to our preachers at this time. They are, "The Supernatural Origin of the Bible, Inferred from Itself," by Henry Rogers, and "Modern Doubt and Christian Belief," by Theodore Christlieb. A thorough acquaintance with these two books will panoply anyone for the fight.

Sentiment and Service.

There are too many Christian people whose religion is a mere sentiment. They have settled opinions in regard to religious matters, and they take these opinions as religion. It is a good thing to have opinions, and it is a good thing to hold them strongly. People who frequent our churches are quite likely to have correct opinions, and denominational pride induces them to hold those opinions quite stoutly. The doctrines of our religion may be held very tenaciously; they may even be propagated with enthusiasm, and yet the religion of the holder and propagator may be, and often is, nothing more than a mere sentiment. Orthodoxy of belief is not inconsistent with heterodoxy of life.

As far as we have been able to learn the lessons of Scripture, it seems to us that there is nothing which is so intensely practical as the religion of Jesus Christ. If we study the doctrines, we find behind each one a great fact, and as we go still further back we discover that not only does each doctrine arise out of a preceding fact, but that all these facts have a common origin in one great principle. Going still further, we discover that this principle underlies the whole structure of the Christian religion. The whole thing is reared upon this basal rock. Not only so, but this principle governs every effort and every form of Christian life. Like the keynote in music, it may not be heard in every strain of melody, but its governing influence is always present.

From the beginning of time God has been endeavoring to teach men what this principle is. It lay at the foundation of the first command, and every succeeding command has been an effort to emphasize it to men's minds. From beginning to end the Bible is full of it, and the life of Jesus Christ has given to the world the clearest exemplification of it. It is the beginning and the end of both faith and love, and the only true evidence of each. It is the only thing that can clear the horizon of the clouds of doubt and distrust that are ever floating in the spiritual atmosphere. It is the only thing the world will acknowledge as valid evidence of the sincerity of a religious profession and the only thing upon which God looks to determine true spirituality. Besides this, it is the only thing known in the Scriptures or anywhere else as the cure for the doubts of an honest man! And yet from the first men have done everything that human ingenuity could devise to put a substitute in its place. The effort to do this is, to our mind, the irrefutable argument in favor of human depravity.

The life of our Lord is the one brilliant exhibition of the application of this fundamental principle to human conduct and to human affairs.

Long ages before the incarnation the prophetic spirit of Christ had said: "Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; burnt offering and sin offering hast thou not required. Then said I, lo, I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will O, my God." And when Jesus was in the full tide of his ministry he said: "I must work the works of him that sent me." And long after his ascension St. Peter said of him: "Who went about doing good." And it all meant service, uninterrupted, laborious, willing service. This was the law of his life. He recognized the fact that his life must not be an aimless one, but that it must be consecrated to the Father in the service of humanity. All his powers of mind and spirit were concentrated in the effort to fulfil that mission. If there ever lived on this earth a being continually busy in promoting the welfare of those about him, that one was Jesus Christ! If there was ever exhibited a religion helpful in every form of it and in every direction, it was the religion he exemplified in his human life. A thorough study of the Gospels brings us to the great fact that service was the law of Christ's life.

The foundation, then, the great underlying principle of all true religion, the one unvarying teaching of the Scriptures is, obedience to God. It is the beginning of faith, the evidence of love and the one motive for Christian effort. The spirit of a loving obedience must be in a man before he can take a single step in religion, and it alone gives elasticity to every succeeding step. Obedience to God here on earth simply means service for humanity. There is in our earthly condition no way to serve God but in serving men. God can not be personally profited by our obedience to him, but his representatives—men—must be the objects of our service.

Finally, worship is not service, as many suppose. Attending the house of the Lord is not service except in an indirect way. Praying is not service, but it brings power for it. But service, obedience to God in serving men, is the profoundest worship, because it is the best expression of the possession of the spirit of obedience to God's law. According to Jesus Christ, the last analysis of the whole matter is, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Then, service of men is the law of the Christion life, and without it all else is empty and vain.

Turn on the Light.

It has been quite a while since we came across anything so vigorous as the paragraph below, taken from last week's Wesleyan Christian Advocate. We commend the stirring exhortation to all our preachers. It is no time for "smooth words." The enemy must be shown up in all his hideons colors and horrid deformity.

Turn on the light! Drag sin out from its hiding-places. Expose its dual nature. Wash its painted cheeks. Disrobe it of its jewels and gaudy dress and let it, in its own nakedness, stand out the hideous thing that it is. Show up its deceitfulness, its hypocrisy and emptiness. Wake it up in its own den and behold it before its unkempt locks have been smoothed by fashion's hand, before its society smile has resumed its place. Hear its language of oaths and obscenity. Follow it into its secret chamber, where, unsuspecting detection, it plans for plunder. See the scroll in its hand with the names of widows and orphans to be defrauded and robbed by its deceitfulness and lying on to-morrow; go to its tombs and see hidden away despoiled virtue, corrupted character, and the rotting carcasses of the murdered. Turn on the light until all its retreats are discovered. Hold it up in its slime and filth until men and women will flee from it as from the breath of leprosy—until it shall not be allowed a home upon earth, nor an associate among men.

Close the door in its face as you would in the face of a murderer, though it comes with professions of decency and respectability. Make sin unpopular, disreputable, by withdrawing from the very appearance of it. Suffer not your children to enter its parlors, to be entertained with its cards, to drink its wine, or to be whirled to ruin in its dances. Let it find no tongue to apologize or plead for it from among the children of God. Show it no mercy, turn with disgust from its claims to innocency and harmlessness. If it has found its way into the church of God and has taken its place in choirs and services unchanged and unrepentant, expel it before its contagion shall spread.

In all this be ready with pity, and firmness, and boldness, to say to every deserter from its ranks, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

Victory at Last.

Several times during the last few years we have referred to a law suit instituted by our church on the Pacific Coast to gain entire control of Corvallis College, with all its belongings. The case went from court to court, and has finally been decided in our favor by the Supreme Court of Oregon. Here is the dispatch from Nashville conveying this good news:

Nashville, Tenn., June 10.—Bishop R. K. Hargrove has received a telegram from President D. Atkins, of Corvallis College, Oregon, stating that the Supreme Court of Oregon has decided the college suit in favor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This information will be very acceptable to the church.

The suit referred to in the telegram involved properly valued at over $3,000,000. The property has been in litigation for a number of years, and the result has been awaited with much interest.

Some years ago the government donated 90,000 acres of land in Oregon for the establishment of an agricultural college, but the time was limited. The period in which the State might avail itself of the liberal offer had nearly expired and nothing had been done.

The Legislature was in session, and a member, who is also a member of the Methodist Church, proposed in a bill to establish a college in connection with the Methodist College at Corvallis, agreeing that if the church be given the land, the church would give the State a college in perpetuity. This measure was passed and the school established.

In some way the Northern Methodist Church, which was trying to get this donation, got possession temporarily and put up several handsome buildings. When the time came and the State of Oregon attempted to rescind its action and take back the land, Bishop Hargrove, for the Southern Methodist Church, instituted suit, employing Judge Williams, who was in President Grant's Cabinet, to represent the church. After a legal fight of several years the suit has been decided in favor of the church, which now has one of the most valuable properties in the United States.—Times-Democrat.

An Itinerary.

After a most lengthy and oppressive drouth, copious showers of rain are falling on all this country, reviving and regaling vegetation and making glad the heart of man. We praise the Lord for these timely benefits.

Our religious and ecclesiastical affairs are in a state of hopefulness. We are conserving and building up on the foundations laid, and hope to "reap if we faint not."

Our Anti-Lottery League is in good working trim, and determined men and women intend to confront and defeat the monstrosity. A Fourth of July barbecue is projected by the Anti-Lottery League. The hospitality of this people is large, and the welcome to their houses is hearty and sincere.

That birthday party of a little eight-year-old New Orleans girl at that typical Southern home, where there were thirteen little children present (eleven little girls), intensified the satisfaction of that grandmother's heart, and gave those parents a glow of delight that thrilled their souls' depths, and also gave this pastor a rare opportunity to impress with religious thought, desire and prayer these young and plastic hearts. That continuous singing for most of the day was real, worshipful praise. Those songs of Zion were so appropriate for such an occasion. Bless the dear little children! They are the heritage of the church and the hope of the world!

That prayer meeting, the following Sunday night (by request of the Episcopal sister), was good to the use of spiritual edification. Bro. McGinnis and myself felt safe riding behind so faithful an animal as Nellie, but as we had such a guide in the darkness as Bro. Ben Hunter through those gates and field, we felt safer, and our pleasant reflection on retiring was, we have had a laborious, but pleasant Sabbath of the Lord.

Our good Sister Blanchard, by her personal energy and indomitable tact, has begged quite an amount of money for our parsonage. Our kind sister of the Episcopal Church, Mrs. Boyce, has donated and deeded a good lot opposite our church for the same; and now the prophet of the Lord will, in the near future, as we have right to believe, have a home, whence he can go out to break the Bread of Life to the people. And since Bro. John Grissom, who loves the church of his mother, and is skilled with such judgment and energy, is the chairman of the Building Committee, we expect the enterprise to be pushed to speedy consummation. Let all hands help, and the work will be light. I might mention other personals, but suffice to say: The interests of the Redeemer's kingdom are looked after. We have some seasons of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her," is a delightful strain of encouragement. To encourage to a better and holier life and a more blessed experience, seems the all-important work in the church to-day. We want our people converted; yea, "and the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. Brethren, pray for us."

"When to Pay Missionary Money."

In this ADVOCATE, of May 21, ultimo, Bro. D. W. Foster has the following sentences, viz.: "Ours is an agricultural country, and the staples produced for revenue are mainly rice, cotton and sugar, which are not marketed until the Fall. Evidently, then, it is a mistake to call upon the people for missionary money in the Spring, when all the seed for a crop even may not have been planted yet. The time to call for money for missionary purposes must be when the Lord has blessed the people with the harvest." Has Bro. Foster given us here a statement, sound and safe, which we may take as a rule in our church finances? For if his view holds good "for missionary money," why may it not for all moneys to be raised for church purposes? I am obliged to think his view seriously faulty.

1. While Mississippi and Louisiana, as well as some other States, are almost wholly agricultural, raising chiefly "rice, cotton and sugar," it must be borne in mind that the whole of these products is not marketed at once. Much of these crops lies over unsold until Spring, and gives a sound basis for taking collections, as well as for paying the preachers.

2. The great staples are not the only sources of revenue. There are various minor products of the farm, especially of the smaller farms near the towns—vegetables, poultry, milk and butter, etc. Many of our people are merchants, professional men, artisans and civil officers. All these are able to have money more or less during the year. The sum required from each person for all church purposes is small compared with what each spends for other things. If all our people would take part in paying, as their obligations require, the burden would be light and easily met. A little systematic care would, in most cases, enable our members to pay as the year goes by, by the week, the month, or quarter. It only needs the habit of system to relieve the strain in all our financial items. Of course, there will have to be some self-denial in this, a reduction of self-indulgence and luxuries. Whatever be the object for which the money is raised, I believe it is better to begin early in the Conference year and work steadily to the end. It is well to keep the claims of the church before the minds of the people, train them to giving; let them give something of the little they have when they get it. To defer the church claims to the end of the year embarrasses operations and puts the collection in peril.

Notes.

They have a brisk set of census takers in India. It is said they took the census in two days, last February. There are 280,000,000 people.

George W. Childs avows himself one of those who believe it a mistake to put off being generous until after one is dead. "In the first place," he says, "you lose the pleasure of witnessing the good that you may do; and, again, no one can administer your gifts for you as well as you can do for yourself."

We thought we had made a good arrangement to give our readers a full account of the unveiling at Jackson, Miss., on the third instant; but the best laid schemes sometimes come to naught. We waited and "held up the forms" to the last; but the communication did not come, nor has it yet arrived. We did the best we could—and failed, as we so often do.

The Methodist preacher who goes around with a "poor mouth" among the members of a congregation, with a view to persuade them to elections with the church authorities to have him appointed as their pastor, deserves to be placed upon the periphery of the itinerant wheel, that the first turn of the crank may send him whirling off at a tangent of forty-five degrees. That's what's we think about that!

The sweeping condemnation that throughout all the civilized world is being heaped upon the Prince of Wales in his connection with the baccarat scandal, shows the appreciation in which the evil of gambling is held. It is an outlaw everywhere but in Louisiana. Here it not only is respectable, but is impudent and impertinent enough to seek to entrench itself in the supreme law of the State. It will try to effect this by any means and by every means. If the backbone of the Christian people of this State is not made of pulp, it will be overwhelmingly defeated. Amen!

Perhaps you have often wondered how the editor of the "church organ" does his work. This is the way Lafferty sees it:

Not in quiet library on velvet chair shadowed by books are the editorials of the average church paper written. He hurries to his office with eyes rimmed with car dust, eyes turning in circles of cinders and sand, collar flabby from moisture on one side and glued to his neck by perspiration on the other side, face smeared with a solution of sweat and soot, hair standing stiff with loose dirt, to some waiting printers. Is a linen duster Urim and Thummim? Is there inspiration in it?

To the staid old Picayune, of the city, it seems a great scandal for the heir to the British throne to be trying around as the head-man of a gambling institution. Right; but what about the sovereign people of a great and growing commonwealth becoming the head of such a concern? What is the logic of condemning the Prince of Wales, and at the same time trying to persuade the people of Louisiana to adopt his role? Ah! "circumstances alter cases." There are two different oxen. The people are fools enough not to see the inconsistency. We believe the people are not such fools that!

Progressive theology is the ill-omened and fateful ignis fatuus that disinherits and draws away toward a vain and sometimes wisdom the minds of many. Though there have always been different interpretation put upon the word itself. That must ever be so. But when men have gone astray from the central and essential truth of the gospel, it has been safe to seek a cause in their own moral constituency. We trace their defections backward, finding for irregular training, having its source in disobedience or superficial conviction. Of one thing we feel sure, that it is impossible for any man to deny the proper and complete divinity of Jesus Christ, and his sole and sufficient work as the atoning Savior, to construct out of the remaining materials of the gospel a theory to which we can point as the source of power and virtue in his own life and of harmony with the will of God.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

The prosperity—the solid and enduring prosperity—of the community depends upon the fidelity of Christians to the common, every-day duties of life. Fidelity means to help the good cause and to give vice and error a whack every time they make an appearance. It means to stand firmly for the right and immovably against the wrong. When a great evil depends—such as a renewal of the lottery—the Christian that flickers or cowards and should be drummed out of the ranks. The fidelity of the Christian men and women of Louisiana about to be put to the severest test. Every one of them needs to study the unique picture of Jesus Christ, to study the money tables and driving in the nation the mountebanks and gamblers from the temple of the Lord! The courage for you to imitate!

Bros. Sawyer and Tom Carter carried on a good meeting for eight days at the Felicity Mission, on Annunciation street, which resulted in eight applicatinns for membership.

After about six weeks' absence the Pacific Methodist Advocate made its appearance on our desk last week. We welcome it again most warmly, for it gets brighter and cheerier all the while.

Major R. W. Jones, of the University of Mississippi, has been elected president of the Mississippi Industrial College. Having been president of this institution years ago, this election is a deserved compliment to a worthy man.

We are indebted to President Johnston for a catalogne of Tulane University for the past year. We are surprised to find the attendance during the past session so small; only 100 in the college classes and 159 in the high school.

Dr. D. C. Kelley has accepted the presidency of the Pacific Methodist College on condition that the Board of Trustees raised an endowment fund of $100,000. Dr. Kelley knows that no college can be operated successfully without an endowment.

The suit of our church in Oregon over the Corvallis College has been decided by the Supreme Court of that State in our favor. This gives our church one of the most valuable properties on the Pacific Coast. See special dispatch in another column.

Are no more revivals going on than are reported in the ADVOCATE? Brethren, snatch a little time to give to the world a brief note of what you are doing, spiritually and temporally: Your meetings, your church-building, your parsonage repairing, etc.

The membership in our church is now 1,218,561, which is an increase over last year of 41,411. So we are still growing, and, by God's grace, will continue so to do. The Northern Church has now 2,283,154 members, the gain last year being 46,691.

We received an invitation to attend the marriage of our young friend, Rev. N. B. Harmon, of the Mississippi Conference, which event was to be celebrated in the Methodist Church in Vicksburg, last Wednesday afternoon. We are sorry we could not be present.

Mrs. Dr. T. G. Richardson, of this city, has given $100,000 to the Board of Administrators of Tulane University for the purpose of building a new medical college. The building will be located on Canal street. We are waiting impatiently to make a like announcement of $100,000 given to Centenary College. Who will authorize us to make it?

We are obliged to Presiding Elder Mellen, of the Mississippi Conference, for a copy, in pamphlet form, of his sermon on the "Sabbath Day: Its Sanctity, Its Duties, Its Privileges." This sermon appeared several months ago in the columns of the ADVOCATE. It is now put in a more permanent form and re-introduced to the public with a few caustic "fore-words" to the author's critics.

Rev. W. E. Ballard continues distressingly feeble in his parsonage home in Natchez. His people of Jefferson Street Church love him greatly, and do all that can be done for his comfort. His brethren of the entire Conference hold him in high estsom as one of their superior preachers and of delightful Christian spirit. The Jefferson Street Church is in excellent condition, spiritually and financially. A superb Sunday-school and a well-attended prayer meeting. By what seems special providential favor, the pulpit has found a minister every Sabbath of Bro. Ballard's long illness. Rev. Mr. Hawley, of Arkansas, late from Vanderbilt University, will serve the church beginning this month.

The late scandal trial in England almost proved the Prince of Wales the head of a peripatetic gambling institution. If he were to come to Louisiana, doubtless he would be elected president of the Louisiana Lottery Company.

The first number of the Louisiana Educator we did not see, but number two is on our table, and we think it is a good number, reflecting credit on its editor and proprietor, T. Sambola Jones. It is published monthly at Baton Rouge, at $1 per annum, and is specially devoted to the educational interests of Louisiana. We wish it great success.

—Rev. T. S. West writes from Wesson, Miss.: "Wesson has been greatly moved under the earnest preaching of Rev. Geo. S. Inge. He was with us ten days. He holds the standard high, and many of our people say, by God's help, we will live up to it. He preaches a pure gospel from clean lips. He uses no low, vulgar expressions to draw and amuse the rabble; but he does draw and greatly entertains and benefits his audience. We report about one hundred accessions to the different churches."

—Rev. R. Havers writes of Pleasant Grove circuit: "At Pleasant Grove yesterday was Children's Day. We had a large attendance. At an early hour the friends and children began to gather in, so that the house was filled by ten o'clock. The service began with song, 'Open the door for the children;' then prayer. The recitations were good. Much praise is due our worthy Superintendent Wilson for the manner in which the services were conducted. Bro. Beeson and the writer gave short addresses, urging them to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and live as lights in the world. A collection was taken at the close of the service by the children. After a short intermission the writer gave a short sermon upon little things and great results (I. Kings xxii, 34), which was earnestly listened to by all. We hope good was accomplished. Our circuit is prospering. To God be all the glory."

—Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Belen, Miss., writes: "We have held one meeting at Belen with good success. Ten conversions are reported up to date, and we expect more at any service. The Epworth League, though organized but two months, proved to be very efficient throughout the week. I can not say too much in praise of this organization. It means the young people for Christ. From this League there must come a brave, educated host to grapple with the questions of church polity at the dawn of the next century. Rev. O. L. Savage gave us a solid gospel, plain, practical, and in demonstration of the Spirit during the week. Our people would give him a hearty welcome again. We expect to evangelize the entire county; will hold five more meetings during the year, the Lord willing. Never did I see a broader or more important field in one charge. Oh! the field is white. What a harvest we patiently look for! Our new church is nearing completion and is a credit to our faithful people at this place. Let every preacher or layman pray for us."

—Rev. W. D. McCullough reports from Indianola, Miss.: "There being no parsonage here, and the old one at Falsonia not being a suitable habitation nor location, we early began operations to build a preacher's house in Indianola, and after a long pull and a hard pull we are enjoying the luxury of a nice, comfortable parsonage. As soon as we were in our nice new home there came a storm upon us. The cloud was not noticed till its contents were being emptied in the dining-room; silver rang and china was poured out and the glass glistened. This skirting of cloud had scarcely cleared the sky, and there was heard a noise at the front, and, behold! coffee, sugar, and canned goods, etc. Then there came a calm, only to be broken, for there was yet hanging on the sky no small cloud, and, behold! this time came a barrel of flour, a nice dining table, sugar and coffee. Then came from all around vegetables, milk, butter and many other good things, and still they came. Did you ever hear of a shower of fried chickens on a Methodist preacher? Well, it rained chickens. These Delta pastors are justly proud of the faithful, courageous and noble women in this great land of greatness and goodness. There is to be seen above all else the pure, brave, loving mothers and sisters and wives waving to the kisses of the breezes and the eyes of men the religion of the pure. Pressing their way to the cross, they cry to others to follow. God bless these faithful women. We have just closed a series of services here, in which we were assisted by the eloquent and powerful M. D. Fly, of Water Valley, Miss., and our old friend and brother, A. J. Jones, McNutt's pastor. Results: Church comforted. No conversions, but deep interest. Bro. Fly was called home, and we cut the work short. We had Sister Goodale with us last night, who gave us a sound lecture on temperance. At the close of her lecture she organized a W. C. T. U. She told us she would not allow men to vote in her society, and we are resolved to follow as nearly as we can and pray for her success in this most worthy undertaking. Let all the people of God say, Amen! and pray for us."

Letter from Rev. A. B. Nicholson.

MR. EDITOR: I have just received a check for twenty dollars you sent to Bro. Cooper. He sent to the ADVOCATE a notice of my condition. As mortifying as it is, I met with an accident the first of January. I was called to a part of the town one night, very dark, and I knew nothing of that part of the town. I was walking on a sidewalk very fast, came to the end and stepped off several feet to the ground and fell. I was picked up, taken into a house; lay thirty days on my back, could not move nor get my clothes off. I was kept alive by opiates and stimulants for five months; could not get out of my house. I had three doctors, and my drug bills and nurse took all I had.

Bro. Cooper, knowing these things, sent that notice. Well, the good Lord only knows what I should have done if he had not done so. I have received about sixty dollars. I thank you for your kindness. May God bless you!

Yours respectfully,

A. B. NICHOLSON.

Hazlehurst, June 11.

Mr. P. D. D. Delacroix, Cypremort P. O., La., Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago as agent representing Dr. Davis' Coinpound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold. Remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

A BOY'S PROMISE.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

The school was out, and down the street
A noisy crowd came thronging;
The hue of health and gladness sweet,
To every face belonging.

Among them strode a little lad,
Who listened to another,
And mildly said, half grave, half sad:
"I can't—I promised mother."

A shout went up, a ringing shout,
Of boisterous derision;
But not one moment left in doubt
That manly, brave decision.

"Go where you please, do what you will,"
He calmly told the others;
"But I shall keep my word, boys, still:
I can't—I promised mother."

Ah! who could doubt the future course
Of one who thus had spoken?
Through manhood's struggle, gain and loss,
Could faith like this be broken?

God's blessing on that steadfast will,
Unyielding to another,
That bears all jeers and laughter still,
Because he promised mother.

Letter to Our Cousins.

Dear Cousins of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

Your letters in the ADVOCATE are read with much interest by your cousin who has never written a letter to you, but who likes you all very much. My name is a very old-fashioned one—Mary—and I am rather short for my age. I have been attending Sunday-schools some time, and have been in a number. One of the first Sunday-schools I went to had a little girl in it called Isabella Lowry who was blind, but she could do more than any of us could, for she repeated the whole of the 119th Psalm without a single mistake, and she could always tell about the sermon, too, and she always stayed to all-day's preaching; and the Sunday was a grand day for blind Isabella. We children always felt sorry for her, but she seemed happy, and I think she is very happy now in heaven, for she went there not long after I left that school. We had celebrations at some of our Sunday-schools, and one time when I was going away on the cars to another place, our train stopped at a little station near by, and what should I see on looking out of my window but a whole school of children close by with flowers and banners waving at me, and singing a pretty hymn, after which they all shouted out, "Good-by! good-by! don't forget the Sunday-school." I tell you that good-by brought large tears out of my eyes, and I just had to have a big cry in the cars before all the people, who looked curiously at me, a lone little thing. Well, I never forgot my first Sunday-school, and I have been trying to keep going to one or another somewhere. Just now I attend two Sunday-schools: one in the morning at nine o'clock, and one in the afternoon at two o'clock. We don't have a large number of pupils, but we all like the schools. There are very few girls in the nine o'clock school—mostly boys attend. They sing hymns, read in the Bible, recite texts and answer many questions the teacher asks them. They know many things about the Bible, and I have heard three or four of the boys tell the teacher that they wanted to see Jesus, and that they wanted to go to heaven, and they believed that Jesus rose from the grave. So these boys are thinking about what we learn in that Sunday-school. Our teacher had some books called "Pilgrim's Progress" for us to read from this morning, and those boys said they thought that Christian was a funny man to run away and leave his family behind. But we are to read more next time, if we can. The books are so badly printed that we can not read very easily. Do you have that book, and how much does it cost? Ours cost ten cents. I think it is too cheap to be good. If some friend could send us twenty copies, it would be nice.

In the other Sunday-school I attend there are no benches, no seats for the children, all have to sit upon the matted floor; but the children are very nice and do not make a fuss. We have hymns, catechisms, texts and Christian stories told the whole school. One thing they do in this school is to write from a blackboard whatever text is to be learned, and quite small girls have pencils and books and write very correctly. The Lord's prayer is recited in concert by the whole school; and each child has a paper of cakes and some kind of candy at the close, also a picture leaflet when the teacher can get them for the school. I expect it costs something to buy all these things for the Sunday school. Not one scholar in this school has a Christian father or mother living. One girl wants to be a Christian, and I think she will be, too. She has been praying about it for some time, and her father and mother are not teasing her so much as they did. So I think they have heard her praying to God to make them happy and to help them love Jesus. She is a nice girl and always sits near me, and I am glad to know her.

If you would like it, we will have a photo of this Sunday-school taken, and send you one each for twenty-five cents. Is that dear? When the children go away, each one bows to the teacher, and says, "Good-by," or, "Sayo wara." I must say the same now, and if Mr. Editor does not burn this up, I may write again some day. A loving good-by to you all from COUSIN MARY.

Boys will be interested in this tribute to the boy's hat, by a contributor to the Home Journal:

Did you ever pause to realize that a boy never had a dearer friend or more pleasant companion than his hat? Why, without it he would die of loneliness or sink into a melancholy incurable, would even abstain from fresh air, but his sister would have her share though she had been bonnetless for a month; but he—ah, no—he could not stir until the battered, shapeless article was found and securely jammed upon his head; then with a world of glory he vanishes until another serious accident occurs in relation to that precious treasure.

At what an utter loss would he be to give vent to his enthusiasm could he not swing his hat with a terrific hurrah to proclaim his anticipations; and while we gaze at the flying hat, and see it spinning round and round in the air, need we ask for a more perfect understanding of a boy's delight and patriotism?

A new hat—how inferior it is to the old, the dilapidated one that has captured butterflies by the hundred, has been daily knocked about and slept in the dew all night, that has served as a drinking cup from some neighboring brook and never known its rightful place. But the new—it is neatly placed in a box in the closet and worn on Sundays only, or extra occasions, while the boy is in misery during the time, and "feels at home" only when he has donned again the old one. Peace is regained, life worth something now, and the expensive straw in the bandbox is completely ignored and forgotten.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Which Is Worse?

A little girl came running in from her play one morning, and going up to her mama, said:

"Which is the worse, mama, to tell a lie or to steal?"

The mother replied that they both were so bad that she couldn't tell which was the worse.

"Well," said the little one, "I've been thinking a good deal about it, and I think that it is worse to lie than to steal. If you steal a thing, you can take it back, unless you've eaten it; and if you have eaten it, you can pay for it. But," and there was a look of awe on the little face, "a lie is forever."

KEEP A BRAVE HEART.—Said somebody to a woman in my hearing the other day: "My friend, I am afraid you are getting bitter. I detect it now and then in what you say and write. Not much, only enough to show some bee has stung the sound fiber of your nature, and left the rankle of its bite." If you have any spare prayers to offer, my dear, whoever you are who reads this paragraph to-day, get right down on your knees and implore Heaven to keep you from all cynicisms and bitterness. Try hard to preserve your faith in the ultimate victory of good over evil, and in the fair shining of an untroubled sun behind these flying clouds.

When you and I lose our hold on hope we join hands with despair, and despair is a guide that leads the soul downward. No matter how hard life may be, how the storm may beat, or however unceasing the grind may be, hold fast to your faith in the Captain who never lost a battle yet, nor ever signaled the trumpets to call retreat. Everything is coming out right in the end. Nothing can withstand the advance of an earnest soul.

There is not material force enough in the universe to keep it down. Difficulties vanish before a steady front. Was it not Thoreau who said, "As soon as Atlas got his back made up that was all that was required"? Brave backs go a-begging for burdens.—Chicago Herald.

CHOOSE A FEW BOOKS.—Keep them with you. Read them often. Acquire a taste for them. Be satisfied with nothing but the best. Begin by reading some parts of the Sacred Scriptures; for, apart from its being the Word of God, there is no higher poetry on earth than Isaiah, no higher prose than the parables of our Lord. Then we have "The Following of Christ," a book recognized even by infidels as a masterpiece. Think for a moment of the measureless influence which these book have on the lives of millions. Take lower books, like those of Sir Walter Scott; take Robinson Crusoe, which, by the way, is not a book merely for children; a great philosopher underlies it; it shows what a man, by exercising the energies God has given him, may do; it is a prose epic on the triumph of mind over matter. "The great masterpieces of the world are thus, quite apart from the solace they give us, the master-instruments of a solid education." If you leave school without a taste for good books, your education has partially failed. And so exacting has society become, so important is literature in life, that if you look on it as a mere amusement, a light and trifling amusement, you will have deep regrets your whole life long.—M. F. Egan.

DO SOMETHING WELL.—I would say to all young girls, whether rich or poor, educated or uneducated, make some one good thing a particular point in your life. If you will be a cook or housekeeper, be thoroughly good. Have a general knowledge of all matters of interest and importance; but have one particular branch perfect, so that, if the time came when you must face the world and carve your own fortune, you will be able to do that something well. No matter how homely the duty, its value is enhanced tenfold by being well done. It is as creditable to be a thorough housewife as to be a teacher or accountant. —Good Housekeeping.

The New York World recently offered a prize of $100 for the best recipe for keeping a husband at home. Quite a number of ladies contested for the prize, but the winner wrote: "Keep him at home by encouraging him to go out occasionally. Employ no arts of coquetry. Become his choicest comrade. Keep the details and worries of the household from him; he has his full share of worry outside. If after all this, he goes elsewhere, he is not worth keeping at home." This is true, especially the last clause.

owe their health to much outdoor life and physical exercise. In our Southern climate during the protracted summer, the broiling sun forbids exposure, but the use of Creole Female Tonic will be found of great service in all cases of female weakness, debility, suppression and prostration.

The Earth's Interior.

One of the most interesting questions relating to the earth considered as a planet is that of its interior constitution. Observations made in deep mines and borings indicate that the temperature increases as we go downward at the average rate of one degree Fahrenheit for every fifty-five feet of descent, so that if this rate of increase continued, the temperature at the depth of a mile would be more than one hundred degrees higher than at the surface, and, at the depth of forty miles, would be so high that everything, including the metals, would be in a fluid condition. This view of the condition of the earth's interior has been adopted by many, who hold that the crust of the earth on which we dwell is like a shell surrounding the molten interior. But calculation based upon the tidal effects that the attraction of the sun and moon would have upon a globe with a liquid interior have led Sir William Thomson and others to assert that such a condition is impossible, and that the interior of the earth must be solid and exceedingly rigid to its very center. To the objections that the phenomena of volcanoes contradict the assumption of a solid interior it is replied that unquestionably the heat is very great deep beneath the surface, and that reservoirs of molten rock exist under volcanic districts; but that taking the earth's interior, as a whole, the pressure is so great that the tendency to liquefaction caused by the heat is overbalanced thereby. The whole question, however, is yet an open one. According to the nebular hypothesis, which assumes that the bodies of the solar system once existed in a nebulous form and by gradual condensation and loss of heat have attained their present condition, it is probable that the earth is still slowly cooling off, and that, as we see it, it represents an intermediate stage between the hot vaporous globe of a planet like Jupiter and the cold and barren moon. If we accept this theory—and it is yearly gaining strength—then the habitable period in the earth's career appears to be but one chapter in its varied history. When it was yet molten and vaporous it could not support life, but it shed light like a star. Now it possesses a cool and solid crust on which innumerable tribes and species of animal and vegetable life swarm and flourish. Anon it will become cold and inert, its waters and its atmosphere retreating into its interior, and with them the life that depends upon their presence will disappear. This possible cause of the cessation of the life-supporting energies of the earth, it will be observed, is independent of the withdrawal of the light and heat of the sun, an ultimate catastrophe to which we have heretofore referred.—Prof. Garret P. Serviss, in Chautauquan.

Phenomena of Stream Currents.

In a paper on the flow and friction of water in open channels, read by Dr. D. T. Smith at the American Association, the questions were asked: Why are there streams? Why are the channels of streams trough-shaped? Why are streams higher in the middle than at the edges? Why is the greatest speed of streams not at the surface but at some distance beneath. Why do streams flowing into the sea through deltas have plural mouths? Why are the banks of rivers in deltas raised above the adjacent lands? Why do rivers, flowing down steep inclines, early come to an even rate of speed, and not increase in speed to the bottom of the incline as do solid bodies in falling? Why does drift move from the margins to the middle of rapid streams? Why are rivers deep just before entering the sea, yet entering with the bottom sloping upward? These phenomena, it was claimed, are all produced by movements in the water due to unequal friction. The particles of water rubbing against the sides of the channel are retarded more than those next within, and, as those outside fall behind, those next within move out and take their places, thus preserving the width of the stream. Those next within take the place of these, and so on to the middle of the stream at the bottom. As the water at the bottom moves out, that above settles down in the middle. As the water moves against the banks, it is raised up by the force with which it strikes, and the surface of the stream at this stage potentially represents a trough. The water from the edges of this trough flows back obliquely toward the middle, and by the time it reaches the middle it gains such momentum that the middle of the stream is made the highest. Every stream is by these forces resolved into two cylinders, revolving spirally on parallel axes in opposite directions—that is, outward at the bottom, upward at the edges, inward at the top, and downward through the middle. The principle is denominated "the law of the double spiral," and affords an explanation of all the phenomena in question. Since glaciers are subject to the same conditions, it is believed that they are subject to the same movements. It is believed to apply to air currents also, and that the Western blizzard and the Texas norther may be in part due to waves of cold air descending to take the place of that which friction has caused to ascend the Rocky Mountains.—Popular Science.

A Life Saved!

READ THE TWO STATEMENTS.

An Extraordinary Case!

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 22, 1890.

Last April I was attacked with Chagres Fever in Spanish Honduras and was given up to die by two physicians. During that spell and since I have used a pound of quinine and quantities of other medicines without any benefit. From three to four days out of every week I have been down and have suffered untold agonies. Between these spells I could scarcely walk more than two blocks at a time. I did not expect to live through the coming winter. Ten days ago I commenced using Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. I have had no fever since. All the symptoms have entirely disappeared. I have no pain or trouble of any kind. Am gaining strength very fast. Can walk miles at a time. My sudden and rapid improvement is simply wonderful. Germetuer has been a God-send to me. I can not say too much in its praise. Any who wish to do so may call on me. DANIEL PAPPON, 481 Jersey Street.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1891.

My improvement continued, and soon after writing the above statement I was able to go to work and have been working ever since. My health is now perfect. I never felt better in my life. I give this testimony gladly, because I know that Germetuer saved my life.

DANIEL PAPPON.

Chagres Fever is known to be not only a most dangerous form of sickness, but also very difficult to cure. Germetuer has been tried on a number of cases. In every known instance it has cured quickly and completely. It has a similar record as a remedy for Swamp Fever and Malarial troubles of all kinds. Properly used, it is the quickest and most unfailing remedy for Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Debility, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Dysentery and all diseases of the Blood and Skin.

These claims are sustained by evidences from thousands of the best people in the country, and the evidences multiply in our midst every day.

For sale by druggists and country merchants, and at the Germetuer office, 202 Canal St., New Orleans. For full information, circulars, etc., call on or address Kit Williams, Agent, 202 Canal St. $1 bottle; six bottles for $5.

OBITUARIES.

RICHARDSON—JOHN WESLEY RICHARDSON died at his residence, West Over, near Jeanerette, Iberia parish, La., May 17, 1891, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. He was the second son of Col. J. G. Richardson and Margaret Dubose, and was born in Washington county, Miss.

Early manhood found him in the commercial business in New Orleans, as Richardson & Dubose, where, in the midst of great prospective success, at the age of twenty-six, he became blind. To a nature like his the shock was terrible, and for a time it seemed as if he could not and would not survive it. But religion and reason prevailed, and enabled him to say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." And now in his grave, with fifty years of night behind him, this he has done to the wonder and admiration of his large circle of family and friends. With a mind gifted far beyond the common, he became the delight of the social circle, and it was hard to choose between his breathing flute and deep mellow voice in song. Literature became his delight, and his contributions were highly prized by journals of the day. Few old Louisianians but have dropped a tear over his "Visions of the Blind," and much of his manuscripts have not yet been given to the world.

In '47 he built his beautiful home, now almost classic, the joy and pride of his heart. A daughter by his first marriage and a son by his second, with his widow, survive him.

His success in life has been the talk of the Teche country for half a century. His work, as State agent in the printing house for the Blind will long be read of by those who wear God's signet in their sightless orbs.

After his loss of property, in common with us all, he made himself famous as a book agent, and bore off the prizes of the publishers. But it was in his hospitable home of other days, on his plantation, in his garden, amid fruits and flowers, when his family came to visit him in the winter, with a love that was never blind to their comforts and pleasure, his image will never die. Amid all the activities of his eventful life he allowed nothing to come between him and his Christian duties. As the chief pillar in his church at Jeanerette, he can never be forgotten, for in his darkness he always saw his way clear in this and never shirked a duty. Such a life is a benediction to the world. In his half-century of perpetual night, Luna-like, there has been reflected a brightness which has lighted up the pathway of many a weary pilgrim, showing where duty and trust will lead. All unconscious, in his own darkened existence, he never knew and the world will never know how many have been pointed by his bright example to a higher and nobler life.

WRIGHT—The church at Magnolia has sustained another loss in the death of Sister M. J. WRIGHT, the wife of Capt. D. C. Wright. It was on the evening of April 28, 1891, that her spirit left the home of clay and entered the realms "from whose bourne no traveler returneth."

In early life she, with the rest of her family, led a life of gaiety and pleasure; but at the age of twenty three, while in attendance at the old Carrollton Camp Meeting, she, with a sister, was happily converted to God—an event of no small importance not only to herself and her family, but to the entire community. Being apprehensive of her reception by her father, who was at the time a wicked man, she requested Dr. Abbey to return with her, which he did, and from the result it must have been well.

A young Methodist convert must work in order to live, for they, realizing that theirs is not a final gift of eternal life, understand that they must labor to inherit eternal life. So it was with her who is the subject of this sketch, for she was soon up and about raising the means for building a house of worship. The amount necessary was soon raised, and old Jordan Chapel, near Lexington, was solemnly dedicated to God. It still remains a monument of the early zeal of our departed sister. It was not long before her father was converted and licensed to preach. A little leaveneth the whole.

Sister Wright was happily married to Capt. D. C. Wright in 1859. Thirty-two years of married happiness must have made the twain as one. God alone sees and knows the anguish of lacerated hearts; but overwhelmingly pathetic were the words from calm, suffering lips—"I feel lost." And, oh! sad, sad were the words of the loving daughter who saw her no longer while living and the other who did—"My mother! Oh, my mother! Just one word!" But, alas! alas! those lips were closed forever. Did I say "forever"? Not so; for "we shall sleep, but not forever."

G. H. GALLOWAY, P. C.

BLYTHE—CASSIE, second daughter of Bro. J. and Sister Blythe, was born July 23, 1871, and, on the morning of April 19, 1891, Death, snatching from his wardrobe a mantle of icy coldness, cautiously approached her bedside, threw it around her form and fled with his precious burden. Another bright flower has been plucked by the gruff hand of Death. Loving and loved by all her friends, no wonder her death has cast such dark gloom over their hearts! But God knows best, and we believe his blessings were upon her, for she trusted Him to the last. Her parting injunction to her friends and parents was, "Meet me in heaven."

Fond parents, grieve not for her, for she is "safe in the arms of Jesus." So ended a short, but well-spent life; in many respects a model young girl and a devoted Christian.

May this stimulate others to a godly walk! Let the perfume of this life refresh others, and may He soon bless the bereaved and give them grace sufficient for this sad trial. Peace to her ashes as they rest in darkened silence to await the resurrection!

M. R. MANLY.

COPE—[illegible], daughter of Rev. Geo. and Sara Cope, was born in Jefferson county, Miss., Jan. 14, 1869, and died at Cannonsburg, Miss., Jan. 27, 1891.

By her quiet, kind disposition she endeared herself to all her friends, and especially to her family. Though an invalid for several years, her life was one of cheerfulness, and in her deepest affliction she was bright and happy. The hand of God relieved her of her sufferings, and carried her to the world beyond, where many loved ones had gone before, to await the ones left behind to mourn her departure.

May God bless the mother, sister and brother to take courage in the promise, that "he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live!"

M. L. BURTON.

BAKER—Mrs. A. C. BAKER was born in 1847, and died in Adams county, Miss., May 18, 1891. She was happily married to Mr. H. L. Baker, with whom she lived till her death.

She was a Christian from her childhood. She had been a sufferer for years; but since Dec. 17, 1890, she had been confined to her room, and for the greater part of the time to her bed. During all her affliction she was patiently resigned to the will of God, waiting and watching for the final summons from her heavenly Father to release her from this body of pain, and to carry her to the haven of rest beyond the Jordan of death. Only a few weeks before her death she desired to be carried from her home in Natchez to the country, thinking the change would be beneficial. But her anticipation was never fully realized.

During the latter part of her illness she frequently spoke to her mother and friends of her desire "to depart and be with Jesus." She exhorted her husband, children and loved ones to be faithful to God and meet her in heaven. She continued happy to the end, frequently singing hymns of praise, and she requested her friends to sing with her, "God be with you till we meet again," and at her funeral to sing, "God's children are gathering home."

Thus passed from earth to heaven a loving child, a kind mother, a devoted wife and a bright and happy Christian.

May God bless the mother, brother, husband, children and host of sorrowing friends with grace and strength to emulate her godly example, and by faith in God, and loyalty to him, to overcome the trials and temptations of this troublesome world, and at last reach the land of rest eternal!

W. E. B.

TURNER—Uncle SIMON T. TURNER was born near Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 3, 1809. When a boy his father moved to Tennessee. On May 21, 1831, he was married to Miss Martha Ann Eddings. This was a blessed union. In the year 1831 he gave his heart to God and his hand to the Methodist Church. He came to Mississippi in 1838, and in 1841 he found a home near Carrollton, where he lived and raised his family. He fell on sleep at his residence, April 5, 1891.

Bro. Turner was a child of God on earth for about sixty years, A good husband, a kind father and an every-day Christian! The whole family are in the church; eight in this part and three in the other part beyond the "river of death." He loved the church with his whole heart. The Saturday service was to him always precious. He was happy at all the services the last few years of his life. He lingered on the shores of time for a long while, but with such patience as but few have. He often talked of God's goodness to him. "I am just waiting for the call to go home," he said. Thus passed from us one much loved. The pastor will hear no more his words of cheer. No more will he occupy his accustomed chair by the pulpit. But he is at home with God.

God bless the widow, Thomas, Simon, William, Mollie, Benjamin, Samuel, Josephine and Sallie, with their loved ones, and bring them to meet above!

D. L. COGDELL.

BLYTH—On April 1, 1891, death made its inroad in the home of Bro. and Sister Blyth, and stole from their embrace their fourth and youngest daughter, LULA. An obedient, dutiful and beloved child has passed away from earth to heaven, to join the choir of those who sing around the throne the song of the redeemed.

Her disease was typhoid fever of a very severe type. I learned that through the greater part of her sickness she was unconscious, but when rational she endured it with patience. She left parents, brothers and sisters to mourn for their departed dead. Two of the sisters have since passed away, and have joined her in the songs of triumph on the shores of sweet deliverance. She was born May 2, 1880.

Weep not for her, dear parents; for your Lula is not dead, but sleepeth. Another bud has been plucked from the thorny garden of earth to blossom forever in the paradise of God. May the Lord pour his Spirit upon the bereaved family!

W. A. MANLEY.

HALE—S. P. HALE was born Nov. 16, 1846, and died May 29, 1891, in Kemper county, Miss.

Bro. Hale was a valued member of the Methodist Church, liberal and cheerful in his support of the ministry. His place will be hard to fill in the church.

He was sick only a week. His death was a surprise to many. Just before he died he called his wife to his bedside, and said, "Julia, meet me in heaven." He gave a parting blessing to his family. He then sang, "I will meet you in the city of the New Jerusalem."

He died perfectly happy. Lord, may we make a like happy escape, and may our last end be like his!

W. J. DAWSON, P. C.

ALSTON—Died at Sedan, Gonzales county, Texas, on May 6, 1891, Mrs. MARY CUSTIS ALSTON, aged forty years; formerly of Hinds and Issaquena counties, Miss. This Christian woman leaves a husband and five children, the youngest only three years old, to mourn her loss. Left an orphan herself at an early age, she was reared and educated to Methodist principles in New Orleans by her grandmother, Mrs. Bartlett, of Virginia. She was married in 1871 to Wm. P. Alston, at Raymond, Miss. After living there several years, they moved to Mayersville, and then to Texas, where she died.

W. H. SCUDDER.

CRITZ—FLORENCE BLANCHE CRITZ, daughter of P. P. and Alice Critz, was born March 17, 1886, and died April 1, 1891.

Though affectionate, beautiful and bright, she has gone to live with him who took little children in his arms, and said, "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

D. W. BANE.

It was Bon Johnson, we believe, who, when asked Mallock's question, "Is life worth living?" replied, "That depends on the liver." And Ben Johnson doubtless saw the double point to the pun. The liver active—quick—life rosy, everything bright, mountains of trouble melt like mountains of snow. The liver sluggish—life dull, everything blue, molehills of worry rise into mountains of anxiety, and as a result—sick headache, dizziness, constipation. Two ways are open. Cure permanently, or relieve temporarily. Take a pill and suffer, or take a pill and get well. Shock the system by an overdose, or coax it by a mild, pleasant way.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the mild means. They work effectively, without pain, and leave the system strong. One little, sugar-coated pellet is enough, although a whole vial costs but 25 cents.

Mild, gentle, soothing and healing is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Only 50 cents; by druggists.

He that is sensible of no evil but what he feels, has a hard heart; and he that can spare no kindness from himself, has a narrow soul.—Collier.

The committee of the Southern Press Association having in charge the raising of funds for the Davis monument are greatly encouraged at the outlook. The appeal has met a responsive chord throughout the entire South, and the indications are that there will be a very general effort made on the eighteenth to raise the requisite funds. The plan most generally adopted has been through the appointment of committees, who will devote the whole of the eighteenth to the work of soliciting and collecting the funds.

The formal agreement between the United States and Great Britain relative to the Behring Sea controversy has been announced by proclamation issued by President Harrison. Great Britain and the United States agree to prohibit their respective subjects or citizens from taking seals in Behring Sea until next May, except the small portion which the North American Company is to be permitted to take, by mutual agreement, to provide for the natives maintained upon the islands. Another section empowers the naval forces of either contracting party to capture all vessels found fishing in defiance of the agreement, but such trespassers are to be turned over for trial to the nationality to which they belong.

In our church there ndications of decline in personal In many things we have im- d, and are still improving. Our nes are becoming more and more al; they are better taught and understood than formerly. Our and periodicals are of a higher ; our ministry is better educated; schools and colleges are more ugh; our missionary spirit is y improved; our contributions to olence are larger, and we are ing better churches and parson- and we are building them faster ever before. But in personal piety re not advancing. This is indi- , first, by less regular attendance the means of grace. Second, by ct of family religion. It was expected that every parent would and sing and pray at home with ren. Third, by lack of zeal in ing up our churches at home. In Methodism every converted man woman was expected to be a er in God's vineyard. All were at as they ought to have been. Now, think that but little can be done ut an imported evangelist. h, by inconsistent living. Our Discipline is not as strict as it once was, and many of our people are living in sin. In former times, if one went astray, his brethren went immediately after him to bring him back to the fold. Fifth, our growth in grace and our growth in numbers are not in proportion to our opportunities. If we were right in everything else, this alone would show that we were wanting.

Now, how is this tendency to backsliding to be overcome, and such increased power for good, as the circumstances demand, to be secured? The one thing to which our attention is directed to-day is the proper use of the Sunday-school, and the Christian education and training of the young. We observe, first, that with all our backslidings and shortcomings, the church is gaining ground. The world is being filled with Bibles. Every part of the world will soon be occupied by ambassadors of Christ. The hearts of all people are being prepared, and millions are ready for the reception of the gospel. We observe, also, that the best educated people are the readiest to embrace the truth. Religious teachers are certainly the best educators, and a large portion of the teachers in our land are members of the church. There are in the United States about four hundred colleges and universities. Above eighty per cent. of these are owned by Christian Churches. Thirty years ago twenty-six per cent. of the students of these colleges were members of the Christian Church. Now fifty per cent. of the students are Christians, and it is said by high authority that revivals are of more frequent occurrence, longer continuance, of greater pervasiveness, and of a calmer and more intellectual character among college men than any other class of the community. Now, if these statements be true, and our text, "Train up a child," etc., be true, what we have to do is to educate and train our children properly, and they will become Christians of the highest and most permanent stamp. Every wise parent will select a Christian school for his child, and every wise parent will co-operate heartily with the Sunday-school. Our Sunday-schools are not yet used to the best advantage; and yet it is true that in this field of labor, also, we are constantly improving. Our Sunday-school books and papers are better than ever before; our teachers are more skillful, and recreations and amusements for the children better chosen. The purpose to put a Bible in the hands of every pupil that can read, suggested by the American Bible Society, is an admirable movement. Let every child have his own Bible, and hereafter let it be the first book given to a child. The organization of the Epworth League, though not immediately connected with the Sunday-school, if rightly worked, will fill the minds of the young with Christian truth and Christian philosophy. It will familiarize them with good books, make them acquainted with pure doctrine, fortify them against error, and aid them in forming good habits. Our young people, especially, need knowledge. Many of them are destroyed for lack of it; but "many are running to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." We lack a disposition to apply our knowledge of and faith in the truth. Parents know what the Bible says upon the subject of training children; but all do not make a practical use of their knowledge. They know also what wise men say on the subject, but believe it not, and heed it not. They know also what is said to have been the experience of the wise in securing happiness and heaven for their children. But the teachings of the Bible and of wise men, and the examples which they have given, are not followed by many, and the benefit thereof is lost to them. Too many of us love ease above duty; too many of us are ready to throw off responsibility, and the religious teaching of our children is surrendered to the pastor and Sunday-school. Now, when every Christian home shall become a Bethel, where God is daily worshipped in spirit and in truth; when every member of the family learns a lesson daily, and studies carefully a weekly one from the Word of God, and when parents choose religious teachers and go with their children to the Sunday-school, there will be but little backsliding and but little sluggish Christian life in the church; but there will be great aggressive force for the conversion of the world. By God's blessing we can make our children anything that we want them to be. Set head and heart about it, and they will become either doctors, lawyers, legislators, planters, or builders in the world; and, by the blessing of God, we can lead them to Christ, and they will become active Christian men and women. What our country is to be in future time will depend upon the education we give our children in the next ten years. It will become a nation of stability, sobriety, intelligence, virtue, righteousness, and wonderful prosperity, or it will be overthrown, and God will choose another people to represent himself. We are moving rapidly, and ten years will decide it. If Satan is in the school-house, we must drive him out, or he will drive us out. We must throw off our weakness, and put on the strength of God. We must awake to righteousness, and sin not. Give the rising generation a well-rounded character; educate the body, mind, heart and soul; and when the mind is full of knowledge, and the heart loves it, and the soul rejoices in it, God will be obeyed, his blessing secured, and he will add no sorrow with it.

Paul the Aged.

He was prematurely old. His candle of life burned at both ends, and was wasted by the passions of early and the superior fervors of late manhood. The effects of persistent disease, which is undoubtedly the "thorn in the flesh" to which he refers, must have "weakened his strength in the way," while the "fastings, scourgings and abundant labors," to say nothing of the "imprisonments and deaths oft," would have wrought a similar effect. The man who had been left for dead on the hillside of Lystra, and, perhaps, also in the arena of Ephesus, could hardly have escaped back to youth, or have gathered up more than the fragments of his strength from those scenes of wreck. The "cares of all the churches," too, would have bowed his frame, and the sorrow caused by the defection of many of those who had been warmed into greatness and into the superior beauty of Christian manhood and womanhood by contact with him, have planted wrinkles on his brow. It may be said of him that he was born to command; and though bred to civic life, the natural energy and intrepidity of his character placed him in the leadership of every movement with which he was connected during the whole period of his life. Whether on the march to Damascus, or in the trough of the sea, or by the suffrages of friends or enemies, he was, on every crimson field and under every black sky, at once pilot and commander. He did not have to wait for old age; its fruit of seniority fell into his grasp when yet a young man; but there is a dignity of age that adorns human character as nothing else does. Neither of the great trio—Alexander, Cæsar, or Bonaparte—lived to be old men, and their renown is so much curtailed by this circumstance that we never think of comparing them with one another, or of claiming for either the first place in military annals. The sunset of life, comparatively speaking, is far lovelier than its dawn. We gather fruit, not from the seedling, but the mature stock. It is a significant fact that the great apostle who, in his early ministry, had almost hurled imprecations at John Mark, took him into his service and found him most profitable as a servant, while that ministry was drawing to its close. Timotheus, when we hear him first mentioned, is a "fellow-laborer;" but, as the years go by, he becomes a blood relation and "mine own son in the gospel." Paul had made several visits to Ephesus the Golden, before there is any record of tears; but when he was there the last time they "fell on his neck and wept sore." When past sixty, as we might anticipate, he is no longer argumentative, as in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians, or sententious, as in those to the church at Thessalonica; but there is a coloring as of evening skies, and a pathetic tone as of one who views all loved objects and persons under a glamor of exile, as in Philippians, the pastorals to Timothy, and the short letter to Philemon. It is "such an one as Paul the aged," whom the hands of rhetoric can no longer detain, who furnishes to us in Colossians and Ephesians calcium-light views of his own inner man as one who, in the fervor of his pursuit after godliness, has overtaken the hope of glory and made it subjective, and who, at the same time, with prescience only less than divine, presents us with kaleidoscopic vistas of the world to come. His "strait and narrow" mountain-path is hearing him yet farther into the region of the "heavenlies," where he finds Hebrews, and choiring cherub and flashing seraph crowd upon his horizon until it seems lost in a saffron haze, and nothing makes him coherent to the ordinary reader but the tabernacle pattern which he holds up, as a mirror, to catch the radiance of the beyond. He wrote nothing, it would seem certain, until he had long passed middle life, when his stylus had become a veritable wand of enchantment; but even that excellent literary degree which he took in old age we can trace through advancing years by such graduating stages as doctrine, sentiment, and prophecy.

It has been said in the language of proverb that he who would be a reformer of the world's abuses must often stand alone, and the Holy Spirit, as if in confirmation of this sentiment, has given us two electrotypes of Paul at calendar extremes of his ministry—one at Athens, standing amid the decay of the world's learning; the other at Rome, above the embers which are kindling for the destruction of its empire. At the former place he proclaims the "unknown God" with Demosthenean strength and fire, and gains a convert from the Areopagus; but it is at Rome, confronting the lion of an hundred terrible tragedies, fierce Nero, an old man silver grey, and bent with toils and growing infirmities, so that he leans for support upon the chain binding him to the soldier-athlete at his side, and when there is good reason to believe that even faithful Luke is in hiding, that his attitude of loneliness is most striking, for under the spell of tragedy cast by that countenance which is said to have acquired the trick of scowling with the aid of a looking-glass, "all men forsook him and fled." "Nevertheless, the Lord stood with him," or he must have fallen from excess of emotion, not of fear, but of grief and shame; and by him the preaching was "fully known," even in this last of the strongholds of Satan, and Nero, illustrious for his conquests as for his vices, saw an enemy which Roman arms could not quell, and an example of valor which all the ages would study to profit. When we meditate upon this scene we try to compute how much the heroism of the world would have suffered if Paul had died before he attained three-score, or if the Paul of Athens, much given to oratory, had failed to grow up into the perfect stature of the Paul at Rome, who abates nothing of "the truth as it is in Jesus." "So fight I not as uncertainly," he wrote of his warfare in earlier years, and so might Alexander or Bonaparte most truthfully while prosecuting their campaigns for earthly conquest; but from the whole circuit of Alexander's wars or Bonaparte's empire of arms, there can not be obtained a faint counterfeit echo of that shout of victory with which the world's greatest soldier breaks through the armed barriers which death and hell oppose to him, exclaiming, "I have fought a good fight!" From that populous plain, a century before, the Romans having tendered a crown to their military idol, the blood of great Cæsar had cried to heaven, "All is lost;" now the ideal conqueror, if tragically, yet tearfully and trustfully meets his fate, crying, "Henceforth there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me." The process which hardens other men, and renders them impervious to the divine, has seemingly moistened this clay, as if from hidden tear ducts or wells opened beneath the surface, and brought it back to the protoplastic stage once more. The wrinkled visage is aglow as if some voice had cried to it from the veiled beyond, "Arise, shine, thy light is come!" The lip, stiff with imperious resolve, curls ecstatic; and the eye, dulled by age and dearth of worldly triumph, grows presageful, as if of "opening heavens that around him shine, as still reaching forward unto the things which are before." Paul the aged awaits the executioner's stroke. There on the Appian Way, where, when old and a prisoner, journeying to the world's metropolis, the "brethren at Rome" had met him with such stress of welcome as to take away all his melancholy and fear, the angels of God meet him en route to the metropolis of heaven, and in a quiet moment in which there is nothing to suggest Damascus midday or Philippian midnight, and in which there is everything of tragedy but drama, he exchanges cross and chain and black defeat for crown and sceptre and a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.—Oh, may we triumph so when all our warfare's past! The Christian and His Graces—No. 1.

BY AN OLD MINISTER.

How do we become, and how do we continue to be Christians? These are questions whose importance can not be overstated. They involve interests that immeasurably transcend all other interests. In reply to these important questions, we may say, first of all, we need some instruction about God, and the relation we sustain to him. For this instruction we are dependent on divine revelation. Man, by wisdom, can not find out God. His character and will can not be gathered from the assemblage of created things which we call "nature." It is true that material nature teaches by contrivance, design; and design shows there must be a designer, or designers, possessed of a wisdom and power immensely superior to man. But nature, independent of revelation, has never taught the unity and oneness of God; so that ninety-nine-hundredths of the world's population were not monotheist, but polytheist, until after the coming of Christ. The Jews were the only people at the advent of the Son of God who were worshippers of one only true and ever-living God. But we are by no means to infer that it was a Jewish discovery, for the history of the Jews for a thousand years showed a continual tendency to lapse in polytheism, and they were only cured of this by a severe captivity of seventy years in Babylon.

Material nature does not teach that God is holy, and abhors sin; that he is just, and means to punish unrepented, unpardoned sin. Nor does nature teach that God hears or answers prayer. Nor does it tell of any method by which a just God can pardon sin. Neither has nature ever brought immortality to light. The wisest and greatest of the ancient heathens knew nothing of it, but lived and died in the dark. The instruction in order to the religion of salvation, of which we stood in most imperative need, had to come from God as the only source of moral and spiritual illumination. This revelation has been given, divinely authenticated, and wonderfully adapted to our needs. It reveals the Eternal One as the God and Father of us all; revealing himself in Christ as the Savior, in the Holy Spirit as the Renewer and Comforter—in short, all we can need to know, do, or hope. The revealed Word instructs us perfectly in the way of the Lord, and makes us wise unto salvation.

To be a Christian, there is something to be believed, even the record God has given of his Son. By this we understand the whole inspired statement of the law and method of salvation through Christ. Without faith it is impossible to be a Christian. He that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed on the only begotten Son of God. He has rejected God's way, and the only possible way known to us by which God can be just, and yet pardon and save a sinner. Now, remember you are not asked to believe how God pardons sin; that's God's responsibility. Neither are you to believe anything about the experiences you may realize when you are pardoned. The making you "a new creature" is the work of the Holy Spirit—a mighty work wrought in you. This is not your care or work. You are to be done with sin, to renounce it wholly and forever. You are to trust in Christ's saving righteousness, and not any sort of self-righteousness, as prayers, tears, or good works, but in Christ as your only, all-sufficient and present Savior. There your duty and responsibility ends.

As a Christian, you are to believe in the great and precious promises, fully trusting in their truthfulness as "yea and amen in Christ Jesus," and confidently expecting their gracious fruition in your own experience, remembering it is written, Whatsoever ye ask in my name, it shall be done unto you, "for he that asketh receiveth," and "as thy days so shall be thy strength, for my grace is sufficient for thee." So we should, as Christians, be careful for nothing, be earnest, be diligent, not full of care, but in everything let your request be made known unto God, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your heart and mind through Christ Jesus. We are to live and to walk by faith. Indeed, as we can not tell what a day may bring forth, we can not do otherwise. We certainly have walked by faith in most all temporal and material things. It ought, therefore, not to appear singular and strange if we have to do so in things spiritual and unseen.

Arcadia Male and Female College.

The commencement exercises of the Arcadia Male and Female College have just closed. Rev. L. M. Pearce, of Shreveport, preached the commencement sermon, and it was timely, appropriate and good, and evinced an earnestness and spirituality that was appreciated. There were four young gentlemen graduated in literature, and two in the commercial course of the college. There were nine young ladies that graduated in literature and four in music. All the exercises were first-class. The young gentlemen and ladies of the graduating classes, in original essays, reflected much credit both upon themselves and their teachers. These schools are doing well, and merit the patronage of all. "Hard times"—scarcity of money—has militated much against the cause of education in these parts.

After the commencement exercises were over, the next day there was a general picnic, given by the town and neighborhood. Mr. Gulee, State lecturer for the Alliance, addressed the people, and for the size of the crowd of people present, I must say I never saw a more orderly one; everyone seemed to enjoy themselves to the full. It is said there were over three thousand persons in attendance.

We are adjusting ourselves for the coming of the District Conference, which is to convene here the second day of July. We should be glad to have our editor to look in upon us Thursday morning; and I do trust that all the preachers and delegates will come in the spirit of a revival, and that God may visit this part of his vineyard with a deep work of grace.

Intellectuality Not Religion.

There has never been an ecclesiastical conflict which did not stir passions to the bottom. Religion, like love, in its essence, lies in the emotions. Intellectuality is not religion, however intimately associated with it. Cross a man in his love, or in his religion, and you disturb his whole emotional nature. No wars have been so ferocious as religious wars; and no hatreds so deadly as religious hatreds, excepting those which arise from disconcerted love. When these emotions were not yet subdued by Christianity the vengeance of religious rancor could find no expression short of the stake. This peculiarity of the human mind lies in the nature of things, and however modified or restrained, it will always continue.

Now, for my own part I can not regard intellectuality as a necessary, nor as a part of the essence of religion. What Christ said is as true of to-day as it was when he said it—that spirituality is hidden from the wise and prudent and revealed unto babes. This is not saying that great intellects may not be the endowment of genuinely pious souls; but it is saying that preponderating intellectuality is not favorable to the fullest development of piety.

So, from philosophy as well as from instinct, I oppose violent measures in religion. Religion must be viewed, to be seen fully, by two eyes, one with its optic communicating with the brain, and the other communicating with the heart. "If thou believest with thine heart thou mayest be baptized." He who sees only with the intellect is half blind. Religious quarrels can never be subdued by argument or force. They can in nearly all cases be subdued through the touching of the heart.

But, of course, we must recognize that the old battle between conservatism and progress is to go on till the end of time—the old contention between authority and liberty. Both have learned wisdom by costly experience. Autocracy is always beaten in the end. Liberty runs to ruin in license. They ought to be mutual correctives and restraints, not mutual and irreconcilable foes.—Interior.

When the apostles were full of the Holy Ghost, they could speak the word with all boldness. He who has it not is weak in his faith, uncertain in his assurance, timid in his utterance, and fruitless in his toil. The need of these times is a bold, fearless, powerful ministry—men who know whereof they affirm, count not their lives dear unto them and, by their fearless, unctuous declaration of truth, "turn the world upside down."—Selected.

MY SOUL, COME IN.

BY LLEWELLYN A. MORRISON.

"While I was musing the fire burned."—Ps. 39:3.

My soul, come in from the world to-night,
Thou art far too burdened with all its care;
Thou hast never a moment of sweet delight,
Shut in from its din with thy Lord in prayer.
Come in, thou hast tarried too long abroad,
To thy holy of holies to night return.
And hold communion alone with God,
And while thou art musing the fire will burn.

Come in, my soul! Thou art all alone
In the busy mart, with its bustle and blare;
The chamber of prayer is beside the Throne;
There is strength and healing, and solace there
Come in and talk with thy risen Lord,
He waits for thy coming and will not spurn
Thy utter trust in his princely Word
And while he is speaking the fire will burn.

Thou needest the fire to purge thy dross,
To leaven with life and to cast out sin;
The spell of power for thee is the cross,
And prayer brings the fire of Pentecost in.
Then wait on the Lord, thou soul of mine;
To repent the past can alone return
Thee into the current of life divine:
There, while thou art musing, the fire will burn.

Thy Lord on Tabor, at eventide,
Transfigured, stood on the Mount of Prayer,
And now in thy life shall be glorified,
And the beauty of heaven shine clearly there.
If thou wilt bow before God, my soul!
The world will know thou hast seen his face,
And others will yield to his sweet control
By the prayer-found fire of redeeming grace.

Columbus District Conference Reports.

REPORT ON EDUCATION.

We rejoice in the fact that Methodism, under God, had its origin under the shadow of one of the most famous institutions of learning in the world, and with men of the highest mental culture. And that throughout her entire history of one hundred and fifty years she has been the friend and advocate of education. And in her ministry and membership are found today thousands of men and women whose intellectual attainments are equal to those of any other Christian communion in the world. Her schools of different grades, male and female, from the high school to the university proper, are numerous, generally well manned, and are doing a noble work in the development, mental and moral, of all within their consecrated walls. If Christian education should be relegated to the State, there would soon be visible a sad and widespread moral deterioration. We appreciate the work the State is doing in the education of our young people; but we would emphasize the fact that we owe it to our children, the church and the country to provide for the Christian culture of our young people, and we are glad to see an increased interest on the part of the church to which we belong in this direction. The North Mississippi Annual Conference has her own collegiate institute for girls and young ladies at Grenada, Miss., and presided over by the Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., which is fully prepared to furnish mental and moral instruction, which are necessary to the proper development of those who may be placed in that institution. And it is hoped that those who have daughters or wards in our territory to send from home to be educated, will first examine the claims of this school and the inducements which it presents. The North Mississippi Annual Conference is jointly engaged with the Mississippi Annual Conference in the founding of Millsaps College for boys and young men. Progress is so far made as to fix the location of this college at Jackson, the capital of the State. The grounds selected as the college site are said to be eminently suitable, and we trust that a school will rise on that foundation that will be a power in the pulse of our Mississippi Methodism. It has long been a sort of reproach and a cause of humiliation to us, as a great and influential church, that we have had no institution of high grade for the education of our young men. The establishment of Millsaps College, under the auspices of our church, will do away with this reproach, and will be a cause of gratulation to Methodists specially, and to friends of education generally. We are glad to know that the one hundred thousand dollars to be raised for endowment is so nearly complete that the institution will be opened for students in a few months.

Your committee would suggest the propriety of agitating the question of establishing several training-schools for boys in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, to prepare them for college. There are many normal and other schools in our territory, none of which are under the direct auspices of our church, and we think it would be well to have some schools of the grade and character we have here indicated. We would call the attention of our pastors to the disciplinary requirement to preach to their congregation once a year on the very important subject of Christian education. We would also unite with the Methodists of Mississippi in requesting the trustees of Millsaps College to take the proper steps at once to have the charter so amended as to prohibit the legal sale of intoxicants within five miles of Jackson.

COLPORTAGE AND CHURCH LITERATURE.

It is gratifying to note the fact that Methodism is true to her traditions and early history in regard to the publication and distribution of good books and religious literature. The founder of our church, John Wesley, was a man of learning, and believed in the efficacy of a sanctified literature as a means for impressing and elevating the masses. The Southern Methodist Publishing House has been fertile in the last few years in the production of good books. And the church has provided a system of colportage for the distribution and circulation of our books, tracts and religious papers. Each Conference may have its general colporteur and its depository of books, and through such provision the immediate territory may be supplied upon the same terms as by the Publishing House at Nashville. Rev. G. W. Bachman is the general colporteur for the North Mississippi Conference. Bro. Bachman has much experience, and is achieving a gratifying success in his very important work. He is energetic and laborious, spending much time and traveling much in the prosecution of his mission. He keeps on hand and carries with him a good supply of our standard publications of hymns, Disciplines, books of memoirs and Sunday-school books. He combines in himself both colporteur and itinerating depository. He has the confidence of the Publishing House, and deserves the commendation and co-operation of all the brethren. Bro. Bachman's suggestion in late numbers of some of our Advocates, recommending the raising of a helping fund for the gratuitous distribution of Bibles and religious books and papers, is a good one. Many of our people would like the books and papers, but they are too poor to pay the price. Your committee commend the suggestion as worthy of most favorable consideration and adoption by the friends of the church. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the organ of our Conference, is a religious paper of high grade. We notice with gratification frequent quotations from its pointed editorials by the other church papers. Another gratifying fact is noted in the increase of subscribers—three thousand—in the three years next preceding the last meeting of the Publishing Committee. Yet, in order to put the paper on a career of enlarged and increasing prosperity, we would urge its friends to make earnest efforts to build up the patronage of the paper, and also to secure the payment of the amount due on its books. We welcome the business manager, Rev. D. L. Mitchel, to our Conference, and bespeak for him the favor of all our preachers and people, and a large list of subscribers to the ADVOCATE.

The Nashville Christian Advocate, as the official organ of the General Conference, maintains its excellent character, and is worthy of the large circulation which it already has—yea, more. It should have fifty thousand subscribers among over 1,200,000 church members.

The Quarterly Review is ably edited by Dr. W. P. Harrison. We commend it to our intelligent laymen, as well as to our preachers, as a periodical of high literary and religious character. Our Sunday-school literature appears to meet with growing favor throughout the bounds of the church. Its success has been gratifying beyond expectation.

A. P. SAGE, for Com.

TEMPERANCE.

We, the committee, have gathered the points as best we could upon this subject from the reports of the brethren from the various charges, and are happy to state that upon the whole there are signs of improvement. There are not as many open saloons in our bounds as formerly, and there seems to be less drinking among the people. We are glad to learn there is little or no drinking among the members of the church. But it is the opinion of the committee that the cause of temperance is not receiving the attention which its great interest demands. At this time especially is this true of the church and ministry. All just civil law is an expression of the people, and no law which is not an expression of the sentiment and will of the people, will or can be enforced by its officers. Civil law was never intended for an educator; the education must come first to form the sentiment, and then the sentiment to express itself in the form of law. The sentiment or will of the people makes law, and not law the sentiment. Therefore, if we ever have a law which can adequately deal with and suppress the traffic of whisky, it must be obtained by educating the masses up to the point where public sentiment will express itself in the desired law, and support its officers in its execution, both in spirit and letter. To suppress an evil, it is not enough that we have a statute prohibiting the evil, but that statute must be enforced. It is true that every public officer is a servant of the people, and just such one as they make him. We have law enough on our statute books to-day to crush every saloon in the land if enforced. It is an admitted fact that the saloon could not be run if the law was enforced. We conclude, therefore, if our country and homes are ever freed from the blighting effects of intemperance, it must come by the education of the people. But how shall we educate the public? It must be done by agitation. It should be preached from the pulpit, taught in the Sunday-school, and by the dissemination of proper literature. We recommend that the members of this Conference go back to their homes and organize, and put into operation the forces against this evil, and push to victory. Let our preachers ever keep before their people the fact that it is a violation of the law of the Methodist Church for any of its members to sign a petition for the sale of liquor.

Respectfully submitted,

The Blood of Christ Not a Fountain.

MORE ABOUT IT.

Some time ago I showed that Christ's blood was not referred to by a single inspired writer as a fountain, but that inspired men spoke of him as a fountain of water, and as "the fountain of living waters." To spiritualize this figure is the business of the theologians.

I stated that back of any specific consideration of essential importance in the question of man's salvation, the love of God and of the Lamb stands first. This is really the overflowing fountain, from which comes every specific consideration, such as the gift of his Son to die for us, the shedding of his blood to make an atonement, the gift of the Word and of the Word manifest in the flesh, the gift of the Holy Ghost, the gift of the church, the ministry, and all personal experiences growing out of these. As every consideration centers in Christ, he is, by another poet, justly called "the Fount of every blessing," just as other men speak of him as "the one thing needful," or as "the pearl of great price," etc. If "the river of the water of life" means anything, it means the love of God and of the Lamb, the prime consideration of man's eternal salvation, in which is included everything else; therefore, to point out any one consideration of man's salvation—as, for instance, the shedding of his blood—as a prime consideration, is neither logical nor scriptural teaching. We should not magnify a special and a consequential consideration into the prime consideration. I, therefore, suggest the theology of the hymn, and hope some poet will give us the poetical statement:

"There is a fountain filled with love,
Flowing from the Father's throne;
Sinners to that fountain coming
Lose all their guilty stains."

(See Ezekiel xlvii, 1, etc.; Revelation xxii, 1.) Here Christ is pictured as the manifestation of that love, as he is introduced to the world by John, through prophecy, as waters issuing forth from the house, as a magnified illustration of that love, and then asks, "Son of man, hast thou seen this?" (verse 6.) To these waters Isaiah invites a thirsty world to come for drink, as it is in Revelation xxii, 17: "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." All may enjoy salvation through Christ as the gift of the Father's love, and, of course, every consideration that makes that complete whole.

"The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day;
And there may I, though vile as he,
Wash all my sins away."

As a first consideration, love contrived the way to save rebellious man; hence love "hides a multitude of sins," in this case, through Christ. And as a secondary consideration, since Christ shed his blood as an expression of his love, we may appropriately sing:

"Dear dying Lamb, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power,
Till all the ransomed church of God
Be saved to sin no more.

"E'er since, by faith, I saw the stream,
As flowing from thy throne,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till life's done."

This last statement may not be elegant, but will serve to indicate an idea until something better can be given. It is an abbreviation of "life is done." It is less shocking to me, however, than calling Christ's blood a fountain and a flood, and then plunging a sinner into it.

"Then, in a nobler, sweeter song,
I'll sing thy power to save,
When this poor lisping, stamm'ring tongue
Lies silent in the grave."

Figurative language is extensively used by God, and it is our business to study out its spiritual meaning. When we invite sinners to Christ as the fountain of living waters, and tell them to drink, the spiritual significance of the statement is: Believe on Jesus as the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world;" or come to him as the world's great High Priest, and daily live under and by his ministry, before whom they must stand or fall.

John taught the people, as a preparation for coming to Christ, to believe that they were fallen beings, and unclean; and their submission to baptism was a confession and an acknowledged need of one who had authority to forgive sins, "to cleanse," "to wash," "to purify," "to baptize."

Sunday Travel.

I see an article in the ADVOCATE, of the eleventh instant, headed "Railroad Travel," in which Sunday trains are indorsed. After speaking of the conveniences of the railroad to certain preachers, and of Sunday trains, the writer says: "There are preachers who see nothing peculiar in this transaction to the sacred calling of the minister, nor to the sanctity of the holy Sabbath day."

Now, as this is a subject of vital importance to us all, I think it should be discussed in order that we may condemn that which is wrong and indorse that which is right. It is needless to attempt to prove that it is wrong in the sight of God and good men to run Sunday railway trains. It is, in the light of Scripture, most assuredly an evil. Now, while we can not, as Christians, remedy this evil, we can keep from patronizing it and endorsing it. We can condemn it as wrong. While we know that "evil doers will wax worse and worse," yet we have the command to "abstain from all appearance of evil;" be sure that we do not do "evil that good may come." Two of our most useful and consecrated preachers who have accomplished great good (for God is with them) in nearly every State in the Union, although always pressed for time, will not travel in railway trains on God's holy Sabbath day. They have learned that the secret of the presence of the Lord is to keep his commandments. And no one can do any good thing except the Lord be with him.

There is a little book, the title of which I do not now remember, published years ago, showing how preachers can do more harm than good by going on long trips on public conveyance to preach. Oh, that this little book was in the hands of every preacher of the gospel! The Savior said, "Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days," but he did not say it was lawful to do evil, or patronize "evil, that good might come." Our conscience should be kept as tender as the "apple of the eye" in regard to God's holy day.

Hickory, Miss.

Letter from Rev. H. M. Booth.

There is no son of Mississippi who rejoices more in the progress of his native State in all material and immaterial interests than this writer, away off in Southwestern Texas. The endowment and location of Millsaps College is especially the cause of rejoicing to one to the manor born, and the descendant of ancestry, natives of Mississippi, in Spanish times, in the famed valley of Bayou Pierre. The location of the college is, above all others, particularly fortunate at the capital of the State, where her great men convene and radiate an influence all over the State favorable to her great collegiate institution, and where the two men live, natives of Mississippi, who have been the chief factors in the origin and consummation of this grand enterprise—Major Millsaps and Bishop Galloway. My heart is greatly moved by the location of the college in the region where my first essay in academic life was inaugurated, and also ministerial life a half century ago, calling up recollections vividly as a school boy and young minister. Dr. Comfort, as president of Clinton College, and Judge Johnson and Thos. Ford and many others are names sacred to the memory of the youthful student and young itinerant. When the question of the location was so thoroughly canvassed and finally settled in favor of Jackson, no friend of its location there was better pleased than this son of Mississippi. May the richest blessings of heaven rest upon this achievement of Mississippi Methodism, at whose shrine this scribe worships with an idolatrous adoration! Every note of progress in my dear native land strikes a responsive chord in a heart that beats with high aspiration for her welfare. Thank God that I have lived to see the day of her redemption from the curse of Yankee desolation and the ruin of Yankee reconstruction. I know what it means, having passed through its horrors, and now rejoice with great joy in the redemption of my native State by the indomitable energy of its people. Having cast our lot in this goodly land by the sea, our family are rising from the ashes of a desolated home by a vandal foe, and regaining all that was lost by fire and sword wrought by Sherman's army, the synonym of ruin and destruction. In conclusion, I greet my countrymen and my church for their rising glory and bright destiny.

Woman's Board.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Woman's Board of Missions, M. E. Church, South, has just closed its thirteenth annual session in Fort Worth, Texas. It was my duty and privilege to attend as alternate. The venerable president, Mrs. Hayes, presided with wonderful ability for one of her years. Temporary illness caused her absence from the chair two days; but in answer to special prayer she was restored, and resumed her duties during the last days of the session. Mrs. M. Gavock, corresponding secretary of foreign, and Miss Mary Helm, secretary of home affairs, were prevented from attendance by feeble health.

There was a full delegation, and business was dispatched with ability and precision. Some radical changes were made in the Constitution—notably, the establishment of a Conference Committee for examination of missionary candidates before their presentation to the Board. A juvenile connectional paper was projected, with Miss Annie M. Barnes as editor. Receipts for fiscal year, $83,865.72; disbursements, $89,010.

Missionaries present: Miss Mattie Jones, from Brazil; Miss Lou Phillips, from China. Rev. Mr. Methvin, from Indian Territory, gave an encouraging account of the work in the Territory.

The outlook from every field is encouraging, and in view of past success and future promise, the home workers "thank God and take courage."

The Minutes of the session will soon be forthcoming.

Forth Worth is the center of hospitality, and the ladies of the Woman's Board of Missions were entertained royally.

Many of the delegates go immediately to their respective annual State meetings, full of zeal and spiritual upbuilding.

Our own annual session of Woman's Missionary Society, Louisiana Conference, calls us to speedy action. List every auxiliary in the State send up a delegate to Shreveport, and, by the help of our Master, we will have from the nineteenth to the twenty-first of June the best meeting we have ever had.

Don't forget, delegates, to get a certificate of full fare with every tickets purchased on T. and P. railroad. Other railroads have promised round-trip tickets at four cents.

MRS. THOS. P. FULLILOVE,
Pres. W. M. S., La Conf.

FROM THE WORK.

BOWERTON CIRCUIT.

Our second quarterly meeting for Bowerton circuit, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, was held at Rehoboth Church, May 31 and June 1, Sunday evening and Monday. Our very highly esteemed presiding elder was at his post, and preached two fine sermons, to the delight and edification of our people. He seems to be perfectly at home in the chair. We had a very fine attendance of official members and people, all the churches being represented. Our Board of Stewards made a very fine showing, indeed, paying considerably in advance of the quarter. We have a fine Board of Stewards on this work. They see that the preacher and family do not suffer. Many thanks to the Board of Stewards, and to the good people back of the Board that enabled them to make such a fine showing. They are kind and liberal. May God abundantly bless them all!—and he will. "For God loveth a cheerful giver." I think we are getting on splendidly, and I am hoping and praying for a sweeping revival all over the work. Pray for us. We are having an abundance of rain, and the crop prospects, I think, fine, and health very good.

A. D. MILLER.

COUSHATTA, LA.

I am pleased to report the gratifying results of a meeting begun at this place on May 24, and closing June 7. We acknowledge valuable assistance from Rev. S. H. Whatley, of Keatchie, La.; Rev. G. B. Hines, of East Texas Conference; and Rev. J. B. Williams, of Wesley, La. The brethren truly preached in the power and demonstration of the Spirit, and will add, Bro. Hines charmed everyone with the gospel in song. The meeting closed with twenty-one accessions, twenty-one baptisms, eleven of which were infants, and quite a number of conversions. Our Baptist brethren recently held a meeting here, resulting in eleven accessions, which, added to the number received by us, makes an aggregate of thirty-two enlisted for the Master in the past five weeks. Praise the Lord for his goodness! We will protract another meeting there about the first of October. If we have good luck, I trust to see this a station next year.

J. E. DENSON.

CASEYVILLE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

This is an old work with a new name. It was, until last Conference, known by the name of Scotland circuit. It was changed because Caseyville is the name of the pastor's postoffice. Some of the old officials are dissatisfied with the change, and will petition the authorities at the next Conference to give them back their old name. The work consists of four appointments, located in four counties, viz: Lincoln, Copiah, Franklin and Jefferson. This work has been served by some of the best and most useful preachers, some of whom have passed away, and others are still in the "thick of the fight." I hear the people speak kindly of Lee, Caldwell, B. F. Jones, Forsyth, Hill, Howell, and Ellison. These brethren preceded me, and left the charge in good working condition. The people are kind and liberal, and take good care of their preacher. Up to date I have dismissed by letter twenty, and some have died, and only one has been received on profession of faith. Numerically, we are progressing backwards; but I am hoping for better things in the future.

D. G. W. ELLIS.

NEWPORT, MISS.

Many times in the last few months have I been made to rejoice at reading the reports of progress in the different charges in our beloved Zion, and they have provoked a desire in me to give you some facts in regard to this (Newport) circuit, under the wise watch care and efficient labors of our beloved D. L. Worsham. Our second Quarterly Conference was held on May 30 and 31, with our own beloved S. M. Thames in the chair, presiding with his usual grace and love. He preached twice for us, and we were delighted and built up by his counsel. Our work is doing well, spiritually and financially. The preacher's salary was raised from $400 to $500, and we mean to pay it. We have never had better preaching, and our reports show decided improvements on all lines. Our general collections are all in cash and good subscriptions. We are expecting great things from above during the year in the way of revivals, which have practically begun in our hearts. Success to the ADVOCATE.

WILL P. DUBARD.

SHAWNEE CIRCUIT.

The second Quarterly Conference of Shawnee circuit convened at Mount Zion, June 6 and 7. Rev. John T. Boswell, P. E., presided to the delight of all. He impressed our people with his deep and earnest preaching. The interests of the church were looked after and, we trust, strengthened. The collection for support of ministry moderately good. We are moving along nicely; have built a new church during the past quarter; hope to do the same in the near future. Something near half the preacher's salary and Conference assessments are beginning to be paid. One of our churches paid about half its assessment. We are led to believe that the preaching of the Word is having free course, and some twelve or fourteen sinners are interested, and have already put up asked an interest in the prayers of Christians; this the best of all. Pray for us.

JAMES L. BOWLING, P. C.

Because.

The antis in the Legislature oppose the so-called revenue amendment because the Constitution of 1879 declared gambling to be a vice, and fixed a time when lotteries shall be suppressed in this State.

Because, as said by Gov. McEnery in his message, the Lottery "is demoralizing society, corrupting politics and impeding legislation."

Because the Morris proposition is simply a bribe, and is against the principles and doctrines of the Democratic party.

Because, as Democrats, the antis will not indorse a gambling monopoly controlled by Morris, Baldwin, Hero, Pinchback and others, who disgraced Louisiana during the siege of reconstruction.

Because the Lottery, as presented to the people for indorsement, has no known domicile, is irresponsible for its acts, and beyond the reach of any mandate.

Because the Lottery would centralize power in the hands of a few men, the foes and enemies of Democratic principles.

Because the State of Louisiana is rich in resources, and can maintain her public institutions independent of the bribes of the Lottery.

Because the Lottery is dishonest, and could not maintain itself on its merits and without its money influence.

Because the Lottery is undemocratic, and being the creation of the worst government that ever cursed a State, seeks to continue to hold power and control by corrupting influences and bribery.

Because the Lottery expects to centralize the popular vote by the use of expenditure of money in securing a purchasable and ignorant vote in the State.

With few exceptions, the intelligent people of the State, not influenced by the Lottery, have indorsed the position of the antis in the Legislature. Without the assistance and co-operation of the negro vote in the General Assembly the Lotteryites would have been powerless and the constitutional provision of 1879, limiting the date when lotteries shall cease to exist in the State, would have been respected.

But the Lottery combine, in their blind and mad career to control and dominate, are ready to risk the length of any limit to further prosperous and peaceful State, even chaos, and to sacrifice life if necessary to attain their purpose.

The people, however, the honest masses are incorruptible, and by the weight of their power will crush out iniquity from existence.—Shreveport Caucasian.

In place of the regular Review Lesson for the past quarter, we give the following:

The Cultivation of the Missionary Spirit in the Sunday-School.

BY THE REV. JESSE T. WHITLEY.

The missionary spirit is that disposition of mind and heart which finds expression in active and persevering efforts to spread abroad the truth of God, and win human souls to Christ. It is the plant of love, blossoming into prayers of intercession, and fruiting in deeds of evangelism.

This is a disposition that can be cultivated. It is not indigenous to the human soul. Divine grace plants it there, in the hour that brings forgiveness of sin. The first impulse of a converted soul is to thanksgiving; the next is to tell the story of salvation to other souls. No sooner has he sung, in his ecstasy, "Glory to God in the highest," than he adds, "On earth peace, good-will toward men." He rejoices in the privilege of praying, working, giving, to glorify Christ and rescue perishing humanity. But this holy impulse does not usually long persist in undiminished power. The glow fades, and not seldom a long season of dullness and inactivity ensues. Afterwards the spiritual pulse quickens somewhat, and the life moves on more gladly. The era of fluctuating impulse is past, and sober principle prevails. Now comes the season of cultivation, extending through all the following years. By reading and reflection, by prayer and conversation, and especially by active expression of the missionary spirit in personal work for Christ, and in giving pecuniary support to evangelistic work at home and abroad, the Christian heart is brought more and more completely under the sway of the missionary principle. It often turns out that many a person whose original disposition was selfish and miserly, is transformed by long and patient cultivation into a broad-minded and liberal helper of the missionary cause.

The missionary spirit is a disposition that can be cultivated in the Sunday-school. Suffer a suggestion or two as to methods of accomplishing this. One way is to keep informed in the literature of missions. He who would have his pulse quickened, and his heart set aglow, must learn what has been done, and what needs to be done, at home and abroad, to subdue the kingdoms of this world to Jesus Christ. Every Sunday-school worker would do well to take one or more missionary periodicals, and to read them after he reaches them. The great principles that underlie the missionary enterprises of the church of God should be as well known to him as the prices of stocks and the quotations of the markets. The multiplication table ought not to be more familiar to a Christian than the reasons for evangelizing the heathen by the particular methods that are now in operation. And out of the fullness of this knowledge, superintendents and teachers should impart from time to time to their scholars. This can be done partly in connection with the regular lessons, and partly by means of special meetings or public addresses of a popular character. A judicious use can be made of missionary literature in this connection. Especially should the scholar be impressed with the fact that the Bible, the book upon which the Sunday-school itself is founded, and out of which comes the truth that constitutes all their themes of study, is saturated with the missionary idea. They should be impressed with the fact that Jesus himself is the master-spirit of missions, and that all such work is done under the impulse of obedience to that commission which he gave to all of his disciples: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

A missionary tone should also be given to the devotional exercises with which the school is opened and closed. Not always, but often, the songs might well breathe the spirit of missions, and the prayers include fervent petitions in behalf of this cause. It would not be amiss to hold a special meeting of teachers and scholars once in a while, to make supplication in behalf of particular enterprises in the home and foreign fields. Many a time has a song made its nest in the heart of a child, and from that nest have come forth, at length, on fluttering wings, holy ambitions and glorious deeds. Many a time has a brief prayer turned the current of childish thought and feeling into channels that have conducted a noble life to realms of widest usefulness in after days. That which we sing about, and pray over, soon takes hold upon the roots of our being, and helps to control the fruitage of our lives.

Still another method of cultivating the spirit of missions is to stimulate the disposition to give money to the support of missionary enterprises. When will the day arrive that shall witness the payment by the church of the ordinary expenses of the school, so as to allow the regular gifts of the children to be devoted to missions and kindred purposes? What better way of cultivating the spirit of missions than by encouraging the scholars to earn their own money, and out of that to give freely a contribution every week, to spread the truth of God throughout the earth? Let the children know that what they give is devoted to this purpose, and their gifts will be poured into the treasury with intelligence and an enthusiasm heretofore unknown. Sometimes a single class or a whole Sunday-school has been organized into a missionary society, and trained to intelligent and conscientious efforts in this direction. The necessary details of method will occur to any careful superintendent or teacher. What I wish to emphasize just here is, that the way to train a school in the spirit of missions is to work on the light of full information, to apply the stimulus of prayer and song, and to foster the habit of regular giving, according to the measure of each one's ability, to honor Christ in the spread of his truth and salvation among men. And this is a matter of duty. The missionary spirit is a disposition of mind and heart that ought to be cultivated in the Sunday-school. It is not a matter of option, but of pressing obligation. The spirit of missions is the spirit of Christ—the essential spirit of Christianity. If the supreme object of the Sunday-school is to make and train Christians, then it would seem a conclusion from which there is absolutely no escape that a cultivation of the missionary spirit is an essential part of Sunday-school work. To omit the spirit of missions is to omit Christ, is to leave the body without a soul, is to strike from the solar system the glorious sun himself. To foster a large-hearted missionary zeal in the Sunday-school is to inculcate the spirit of Christ, and in so far to vindicate the right of the school to exist.

Oh, be faithful to Christ in training the children in ways of loving, self-denying service! Out of that school or class of yours may go forth the most Christ-like missionary of the twentieth century.—Sunday-School Times.

Louisiana Notes.

A new postoffice has been established at Adaline, Vernon parish.

Monroe will soon have an infirmary, to be under the management of Dr. R. Layton.

The two-and-a-half-mills schoolhouse tax was carried in Opelousas on the ninth instant.

The Bank of Plaquemine opened for business last week, and received $18,543 deposits the first day.

Baton Rouge will have special delivery inaugurated next month, its postoffice receipts being over $10,000.

The police jury of Ascension parish have reduced parochial taxes from ten to nine mills without curtailing appropriations.

The Alexandria Barrel and Box Manufacturing Company, Limited, with a capital stock of $50,000, was organized recently.

Work began Monday on the factory of the Monroe Sash, Door and Blind Company. The building will be 50x100 feet, and two stories high.

There are 843 postoffices in Louisiana, and the length of mail transportation is 6,577 miles, and the total cost of maintenance is $257,716.

On or about July 1, Mr. J. T. McClanahan will issue a weekly, the Mansfield Journal, that will be anti-Lottery from start to finish.

There is a house near Winnsboro covered with cypress boards which were first put on in 1811. The boards appear to be perfectly sound, notwithstanding their eighty years' service.

We understand that the City Council at its meeting last Monday evening (15), provided for the city public schools by placing in the budget one and one-half mills for the school and one-half mill for school improvement purposes. This is commendable.—Lake Charles American.

Mr. George Garlick sold his farm of 160 acres, near Esterly, in this parish, last week, for fifteen dollars per acre. He paid Mr. J. B. Watkins for the same, a little more than two years ago, five dollars per acre; thus the farm for which Mr. Garlick paid $800 less than three years ago, sells for $2,400 cash—a clear profit to Garlick of $1,600.—Lake Charles American.

Cleopatra.

This beautiful Egyptian queen is said to have possessed wonderful charms of person. Our American women are prone to neglect their health, and should, when suffering from prostration, languor, female debility or weakness, use freely and regularly Creole Female Tonic, the best friend to woman.

Mississippi Items.

A lot has been purchased and the money raised to build a Presbyterian Church at Pickens.

The assessed valuation of the city's property in Jackson is $2,443,272, while the debt is only $25,000.

Work on the new hotel at Queen and Crescent Springs, near Vossburg, is rapidly advancing and will be completed in about ten days.

Judge Chrisman, in view of extenuating circumstances, imposed one cent fine and costs upon parties indicted for selling lottery tickets in Jackson.

The Thirty-fifth Mississippi Confederate Veterans will have a reunion at West Point, July 10. The address of the occasion will be delivered by Col. S. M. Meek.

The twenty-fifth session of the Deaf and Dumb Institute in Jackson was closed last week. The pupils gave creditable exhibitions in cookery, sewing, free-hand drawing, printing and carpentry.

It is possible that the Natchez, Red River and Texas railroad may be extended to Alexandria, La. This would give Natchez a very important outlet to the West, and a connection with the Gould System.

Mr. A. C. Wharton has found what is believed to be the fossil remains of a buffalo a half mile south of Port Gibson. The bones were found on the side of a hill twenty feet below the surface of the ground.

There will be a competitive examination at Jackson, the first Monday in September, to fill the vacancy in the Military Academy at West Point, from the Seventh Congressional District. This early announcement is made that candidates may have ample time to prepare.

The contract for the new court-house for Washington county has been awarded to T. E. Barnes, of Greenville, and the work will soon begin. It is to be an elegant structure.

Mr. F. W. Luscombe, of Dyersburg, Tenn., has just closed the deal to locate a large barrel factory at Greenwood. He will put in a plant that will work sixty hands, with a daily pay roll of $100. We have an inexhaustible quantity of the finest kind of oak timber. This plant will work it up into oil, wine and other kinds of tight barrels. Mr. Luscombe has a fifty-horse power mill, which he will move from Dyersburg. Work to begin at once.

The citizens of Natchez are manifesting a great deal of apathy in the matter of registration. The books were opened a week ago for a new registration, in accordance with the provisions of the new Constitution, and up to this morning only sixty names had been enrolled. A good many were cut off by not paying their poll tax in time. So that the qualified voters at the fall election will probably not exceed more than 500 or 600, less than half the usual number of votes cast. If Natchez and Adams counties are taken as a test, the new Constitution will reduce the qualified voters of Mississippi nearly 50 per cent.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Haffelfinger, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

BOOKS.

GOSPEL CRITICISM AND HISTORICAL CHRISTIANITY. By Orello Cone, D. D. G. P. Putnam's Sons New York. Eyrich, New Orleans. Price, $1.75.

This book purports to be "a study of the Gospels, and of the history of the gospel-canon during the second century, with a consideration of the results of modern criticism." Those results are that the Gospels are not historics; that the picture of Jesus, produced by the evangelists, is "a reconstruction at which faith, hope and legend wrought;" that he wrought no miracles; that there is no evidence of his divinity; that the evangelists were not inspired, etc. This "gospel criticism" criticises all the gospel out of the gospel, and leaves it a dead form, as inexplicable as the Sphinx.

HADASSEH; OR, FROM CAPTIVITY TO THE PERSIAN THRONE. By E. Lenty Collins. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. For sale by Wharton, 5 Carondelet street, New Orleans.

This is a well conceived and beautifully written romance founded on the story of Esther, as given in the book of Esther in the Old Testament. There is a pleasing fascination about those old histories of the Jewish people that will never lose its charm. What a wonderful people they were!

THE LAST DAYS!

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 35 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.

This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

Briefs.

Religion is more than a set of opinions: it is life in Christ Jesus. "The life that I now live in the flesh I live by faith of the Son of God."

Are not these words of Christ applicable to a great many "seekers" of to-day: "Ye search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. And ye will not come to me, that you might have life." Do not a great many accept everything about Christ but Christ himself? Yet he said: "I am the Life."

The men who are endeavoring to dislodge Moses from his seat, and to relegate his Five Books to the limbo of pious frauds, should remember the warning of Christ: "Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses." These very writings, which they are trying to discredit, will plead against them "in that day."

The question, "How to reach the masses," is being answered by Mr. Nix, of England,—by going where the masses are. He is preaching regularly to the crowds that attend the great races at Epsom Downs. Here is a short account of the manner in which he works, taken from the London Times: After the distribution of the literature, cards, tracts and Testaments to everybody, services begun on the course itself at 11:30, if the weather permitted, and lasted till the bell sounded for the first race. Then the workers marched to their tents, which they closed up, held a prayer meeting till the race was over. Services were held in the tent each night during the week; 95,000 tracts were given away; 4,000 copies of the Testament and Gospels, and thousands of cards.

The pro-lottery press of this State gave a good many of its readers the "wonders" last week. The occasion that called forth the exhibition was the baccarat scandal. The one on who was heaped much abuse and well-deserved criticism was the Prince of Wales. All with one accord condemned in him, as debarring him from the succession to the throne, the fact that he was a gambler, and consequently should never be allowed to become the chief man in a kingdom like Britain; yet, in the same issues, they advocated and urged the setting up of just such a class as the rulers of this State, and not only that, but that the State should become partner in the business of debasing itself and its youths. Why should they be so mindful of the welfare of the people of England and so unmindful of that of Louisiana?

An idea of the manner in which missionary work is done now in regions in which St. Paul once wrought may be gotten from the following paragraph from a letter in the Independent:

A missionary from Smyrna writes of his winter tour through a field of some 40,000 square miles in extent. He went eastward from Symrna, stopping at hopeful places a day or two, or prolonging his stay for two or three weeks where there was special interest; visiting men in their shops, receiving calls from inquirers, preaching every night, traveling by day under circumstances that recalled Paul's description of his adventures in the same regions; and all this in the bitter winter weather, because it is the season when men can be found at home. This sort of work has the most immediate results. The man who preaches to a stated congregation, or teaches, or writes books, is sowing seed for others to reap. But the man who tours much in his district returns with joy, bearing his sheaves with him.

The Country vs. the City.

The last census reveals the fact that the population of this country is tending toward the cities. To some people this is a grave fact. They seem to see in it the origin and future growth of many evils. Others look upon it as a healthy sign, regarding it as an indication that people see in a city life greater opportunities, and are quick to make use of those opportunities. We do not now join either side, but we write this for the eyes of young men and women in the country who read this paper.

You have, doubtless, often had a desire to exchange your country home and work for a home and work in a large city. We do not say that this is not a laudable desire. It is always a good thing to better our condition, if we can do so legitimately. That is a law which governs all healthy activity. But before you determine finally to carry into effect this desire, it would be well for you to ponder long and carefully. Perhaps you are doing tolerably well where you are. It may be true that you are not accumulating money very fast. It may be true that you are barely "making both ends meet." Under this condition of things you are becoming restless, and, hearing of "good openings" and larger salaries for work in the large cities, you are "almost persuaded" to "pull up stakes" and take the first train and cast in your lot with the multitudes that surge and jostle one another in their streets and houses of business. We ask you to pause and think.

In the country you have many blessings which you will not have in any city. First of all, you have a boundless extent of free, healthful air, which is most conducive to a healthy development of the physical, mental and moral nature. If you come to the city, you will surely leave that behind! In the country, by the sturdy and persistent strokes of patient industry, you can compel even the most ungenerous soil to yield you a living. To a young man or woman just come to a city, the most precarious, the most vexatious, sometimes the most hopeless attainment is that same living! The chances are that you will walk the streets until you are foot-sore, that you will meet with rebuffs that will make you heart-sick, that you will spend all your little store of hard earnings before you will secure even a "trial place!" And that secured, you will find that its promises are less than those you left behind, while its exactions are far more rigorous and its burdens heavier than any you have ever felt. Besides this, you will be subject to a thousand temptations you never dreamed of before. Solicitations to wrong will meet you at every turn, and your life will be a worry from morning till night. In addition to this, you will find that while your income is no larger than in the country, your expenses will be far greater. Board and lodging will eat up your salary as fast as it comes in, and at the end of every month you will find your means increased but little, if any. We know a preacher who lived comfortably on a salary of $700, but by the turn of the itinerant wheel he was placed in a city. His salary there was $2,000, but he and his family lived no better, dressed no better and made no better show than they did in the country on $700.

Of course, there are thousands of people in the cities who live on almost nothing; really live from "hand to mouth." That is one advantage the city has over the country; it can show more paupers and beggars. The writer never saw one of these until he came to New Orleans. And a great many of these came to the cities for the same reason that you are thinking of coming. They made a fatal mistake.

In regard to money-making, which is the rage now, this remark, made by the Canadian Minister of Agriculture, we commend to your careful consideration: "The wealth of the agricultural districts is more evenly divided, and a more general state of comfort, manhood and independence obtains in them than in the cities." Our own observation and experience confirm the truth of that statement. To exchange the independence of country life for the servitude of city life, to give up a certainty in the matter of living for a precarious means of subsistence, to turn your back upon a healthy atmosphere that you may breathe the foul airs of city sewers, to fling yourself unprepared into the midst of ten thousand pleasing temptations to evil, is not wise. Young men and women, stay in the country, and by honest toil and careful training build up your fortunes and develop your characters.

Hermits and Heroes.

These two words are very close together in the dictionary. The characters they describe are very close together in the church. The church is composed of hermits and heroes. The popular idea of a hermit is, that he is a person who has voluntarily excluded himself from society and lives by himself and for himself and to himself. The old idea was, that a hermit was a man who for the better and speedier attainment of religious character eschewed the world and took himself off to some cave or mountain and there lived on roots and berries and meditated and grew like God. It was a queer notion, but many people actually carried it out, and lived and died in the belief that such a life was really a God-service! It is too late now to raise a question or to quarrel with those people. But they have descendants in the direct line, and these descendants have the same spirit, though they differ somewhat in practice. The present-day hermits do not often "take to the woods"—it would be a blessing to the church if some of them did—but their religion differs very little from that of their ancestors. As far as religious activity in behalf of needy and perishing humanity is concerned they are just like their forefather hermits. As well as we have been able to study them, their religion appears to consist in about equal parts of meditation on themselves and on the Divine Being. It exists only in the convolutions of a meditation. Action is no part of their thinking and no part of their lives. Suffering humanity, with its wail of woe and sorrow, never catches the ear that listens so intently to its own selfish moanings. The stirring life of Jesus Christ, the intense activity of his apostles, the ringing shout of victorious Christians all along the historic line, find no entrance into ears filled only with pitiful wailings over natural infirmities. These hermits creep out on sunny Sundays and repair to the house of the Lord, and, with solemn mien and heavy, deep-drawn sighs and unutterable groans, make a show of worship, and then withdraw within themselves and try to feed and nourish their melancholy souls with their selfish meditations. The old-time hermit, with his sunken eye and haggard cheek, and mossy beard reaching to his waist, and tattered garment trailing the ground, and tottering step betokening extreme weakness, is a good photograph of the spiritual life of his present-day descendant.

The outward appearance of the old-time hermit has become the inward reality of the descendant of the present day. The sunken, haggard, mossy, tattered, tottering religion of our hermits is as picturesque as the bodily appearance of their prototype. But how small a space must it occupy in the mind of the Man of Nazareth, whose whole thought and life were busy with schemes and intense work for the good of ordinary humanity! How that religion shrinks within its shell of meditation before the light of the practical religion of the gospel! Appreciating none of the vast privileges that are open for the service of needy men and women, it enjoys none of the great blessings which flow from a service so divine! Comprehending nothing whatever of the gracious opportunities of the present stirring age, it reaps no harvest of rich and enjoyable results from using them! Feeding on its own nothingness, it dies of inanition, and its poor dupes go to judgment with empty hearts and empty hands.

But we are not saying that all religious people are hermits. By no means. There are as real heroes in the Christian ranks today as ever marched to battle to the sound of martial music. There are men and women in the church to-day whose hearts are aflame with the divine enthusiasm of lowly, yet heroic service for their fellows, whose words of cheer and encouragement ring along the lines as clear as a clarion note, whose deeds of daring love challenge the admiration and provoke the emulation of all on-lookers, whose lives are living sacrifices laid upon the same altar where the life of the Son of Man went out in august grandeur for the good of the human family! These men and women have eyes open to see every opportunity for doing good; hearts pulsating with holy ambition to honor their Lord by faithfully serving others; hands from whose open palms benefactions are continually dropping into the lap of the poor; feet finding out and treading the by-paths, as well as the public ways, on missions of mercy and love! These are brave souls fighting for every inch of ground over which they pass, and at every point wringing victory from the stubborn, sullen foe. They shrink not at sacrifices; they weaken not under the heaviest strain; they murmur not at adverse circumstances; they complain not at hard work; they mourn not over the defection of friends; they quail not in presence of an enemy. Spiritual contests are their delight; moral progress is their aim; victory over every form of evil is their ambition; the approbation of a good conscience is the end of their effort, and the approval of the Great Captain is "their chief joy."

These men and women are the heroes and heroines of the church. They are not much known to the great world, but they are well known in the celestial realm. Their names are not blazoned upon the pages of this world's history, but they are "written in heaven." When the final annals of this world are made up, perhaps, they will not be mentioned; but when the recording angel opens his book of history, their names will be found in the chief places! Many of them, in the world's view, lead lowly lives, but they are doing duty and building character, and from that lowly place they will step into the ineffable splendors of the divine habitation! While here they serve God by serving men, and in that service the vitality of their religion is quickened and its robust vigor strengthened by its persistent exercise. Fully appreciating the vast privileges of probation, they have an exquisite enjoyment of the rewards of service. Comprehending the greatness of the opportunities of the present, they push their way through every open door and reap harvests of rich and gracious blessing. Feeding their souls on the substantial food of the Divine Word, they grow up into strong men and women in the Lord, and when the end comes the last enemy flies before them and they go to the judgment with hearts like unto the heart of the Son of Man and hands full of gathered sheaves!

Reader, will you be a hermit or a hero? You must needs be one or the other. Which will you be?

Port Gibson Female College.

This institution of learning was inaugurated through the benevolence of a few liberal-hearted Methodists in 1854. It is located in a very desirable part of the beautiful and healthful little city of Port Gibson. Of Port Gibson I need only say, in proportion to population, it is second to none in the State. It is a town of churches and schools; hence of piety and culture.

The commencement exercises were introduced on Friday evening, June 12, by an exhibition in the Kindergarten. This is an important feature of our college, and is presided over by a competent teacher, who is thoroughly acquainted with this system of instruction. It is to be feared that our Southern people do not appreciate, as they should, this mode of teaching beginners. But persistent effort and practical demonstration of its adaptability to the conditions of the youthful mind may, in time, lead us to accept and patronize it more generally.

The commencement exercises proper began on Sunday (14) with the annual sermon, by Dr. W. C. Black, on "Bihlical Archæology." The sermon was equal to the occasion. It abounded in rich and refreshing thought, and presented a wonderful array of facts from both profane and sacred history which verified the statement of the text: "But the Word of our God shall stand forever." Throughout the entire discourse the audience was held captive, and the Word of the Lord was magnified. Rev. B. F. Lewis preached in the evening. The sermon was replete with beautiful and choice thought, expressed in well-chosen and vigorous words. The cross of Christ was held up as the center of all things, terrestrial and celestial. The sermon was edifying.

This institution, as you know, is presided over by Miss M. E. Compton, a lady of fine accomplishments, experience and wonderful adaptation to this position. The Board of Trustees did a good thing for the college by re-electing her to its presidency. Her record of success in the past augurs prosperity in the future. She will have an efficient corps of teachers. There were about one hundred pupils in attendance this session, and the results of the year's work indicate the excellent attainments of the students in the various departments. The vocal and instrumental music were of a high order. The art department, under the management of Miss Sallie McGill, made an exhibit which was convincing as to her competency and the diligence of her pupils. On Tuesday evening a splendid audience assembled in the hall to witness the closing exercise. The following young ladies were graduated, and received the degree of M. E. L., viz.: Annette L. Beers, Mary A. Compton, Anna N. Compton, Jennie R. Jeffries, Jennie O. Lane, Ethel N. Martin, Nellie L. Rea, and Anna V. Richmond. Rev. J. A. B. Jones delivered the baccalaureate address. Dr. Hunnicutt delivered the annual literary address. He discoursed upon "Woman as a Teacher." He handled his subject in his usual elegant and masterful manner. His argument was fresh, vigorous and convincing. A scheme was on foot looking to the endowment of the college, and the trustees are confidently expecting gratifying results from the plans adopted.

The next session opens September. The course of study is thorough and practical. The buildings and campus compare favorably with other colleges for girls in this State. There is an attractive, home-like air in the college which impresses you with the spirit of harmony and love which prevails between the teachers and pupils. The minds, health and morals of the girls are carefully guarded. The boarding department is excellent. Parents wishing to educate their daughters in a first-class home college, under a good management, will do well to send them here. They will never regret it.

B. F. Jones.

Notes.

The New York Sun has settled the Briggs affair. It says: "First of all we say we, Dr. Briggs must have a fair field and fair play." That settles it.

"A Boston physician of repute" has predicted that there is to be a great boom in babies. This year will break the record in that line of things. Let it. Babies are good things.

And yet you would have a considerable task to take the census of the grumblers in the church.

There was one thought which thrilled Paul with fear. It was the thought of being a castaway after having preached to others! A man may guide others to the path of life without walking there in himself. He may pilot others and yet he drowned himself. Think of that, ye preachers of the gospel!

Gail Hamilton has somewhere written this paragraph, which some people might ponder to profit:

If you wish to know whether you are a Christian, inquire of yourself whether in and for the love of God you seek to make happy those about you by smiles and pleasant sayings. Are you a comfortable person to live with? Are you pleasant to have about?

The man who never reads the church paper has no opportunity of learning about the progress of the church except from the secular press. In reporting religious matters the secular press is notorious for its inaccuracy; hence what is learned from it had better not be learned at all. If a man wants church news, he must read church papers.

There is a sound reason why there are bones in our meat and stones in our land. A world where everything was easy would be a nursery for babies, but not at all a fit place for men. Celery is not sweet till it has felt frost, and men don't come to their perfection till disappointment has dropped a half-hundred weight or two on their toes. Who would know good bones if there were no heavy loads?—Plowman.

A man who in early life, for a time made his home in a Christian family, returned recently, after an absence of many years, to thank them for the good influence carried from that Christian home. He said: "I often tried to escape family worship by leaving the house early in the morning, but I thank you now with all my heart for your faithfulness, and that you always took care to detain me." There are few, if any Christian families, who faithfulness or unfaithfulness in the matter will not have its influence for good or evil upon the life and destiny of some one. What kind of influence is being exerted in your family?—United Presbyterian.

Once an English friend found her sitting on the steps of a bathing machine, on the sands, with a Luther Bible open on her knee, and looking out into the glory of a sunset that was shining over the waters. They talked, and the talk drew near to the inevitable question, "Oh, Mme. Goldschmidt, how was it that you ever came to abandon the stage at the very height of your success?" "When, every day," was the quiet answer, "it made me think less of this (laying a finger on the Bible), and nothing at all of that (pointing out to the sunset), what could I do?"

The secular press has had a great deal to say lately in regard to church matters and religious beliefs, etc. It is very well for the secular press to give the church news of the day when it will give it properly; but it is hardly in position either by education or otherwise to pass such infallible opinions on religious questions as it now seems disposed to do. A little modesty at this point would be very becoming and would save it from "many a blunder and foolish notion." Secular eyes can't see very far into spiritual things. A man who does not know one creed from another had better not talk much about creeds!

Personal and Otherwise.

There will be a week's services at the Union Mission, commencing June 29. Services will be conducted by Rev. E. T. Denson, of Houma.

Mrs. J. V. Penn, the wife of Rev. J. V. Penn, of the Mississippi Conference, died at the home of her mother, in Jackson, La., June 18. We sympathize with our brother in his sore bereavement.

Rev. T. E. Winecoff, a graduate of Davidson College, N. C., having just finished a post-graduate course at Vanderbilt University, has been elected to the chair of Latin in Centenary College of Louisiana.

John F. Goucher, a wealthy member of the Mission Board of the M. E. Church, is educating 3,000 boys and girls at this time in India. So says Dr. McCabe in the June number of the Gospel in All Lands.

Since the baccarat scandal, in which the Prince of Wales played so conspicuous a part, the old adage, "The king can do no wrong," has been modified to read: "The king can do no wrong—unless he gets a good chance."

Rev. Mr. Yoshioka, now a student at Vanderbilt, is expected at the Meridian (Miss.) District Conference, State Line, Miss., July 2-5. He is the first licensed preacher of our Japan Mission, and is said to be a strong man and a good preacher.

Got Hay-fever? Some say Johnson's Anodyne Liniment will cure it. Try it and report to us.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. Jas. G. Cammack, Carthage, Miss., writes: "I have just closed a five days' meeting, assisted by Bro. I. L. Peebles, which resulted in five accessions, and the entire church and town awakened as they were never before. Methodism is moving up in these parts. As we intimated in our last letter, the next District Conference for this district will be held here."

—Bro. Honnoll, writing from Holly Springs, says: "The church at Holly Springs still lives. We receive a new member occasionally. Our parsonage is now adorned by a new porch, forty-five feet long, costing over two hundred dollars. This has been done by our good ladies. Our kitchen and dining-room have been torn down to make way for new and better ones. The work on our Sunday-school room begins next week—all of which will cost us about $1,500. Prayer meeting and Sunday-school are well attended."

—Rev. C. McDonald writes from Slaughter, La.: "The second Quarterly Conference for Zachary station was held June 13 and 14. The congregations were good. We preached three sermons for them, baptized three children, had a pleasant communion service and took a collection. The church edifice is complete at a cost of about $2,500, and is all paid for except a small sum, which is promised. We think it is the prettiest church in the district. It was built according to one of the plans sent out by our Board of Church Extension. The young pastor is doing well and is hopeful."

—Bro. W. H. Sanders writes from Belzoni circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We held our second Quarterly Conference on this charge, the thirteenth instant. Bro. Thames, P. E., present. He gave a send-off that will do us good. We have made a gradual move towards the front all the year. Five have joined by letter this year. On Sunday, June 14, we held Children's Day service, and the little ones raised five dollars. Everything is encouraging and shows signs of progress. We hope to be able to make a better report this fall than ever. It does a young preacher good to have his presiding elder with him. This is my third year in the Conference and my third year on this charge, and I hope that I may do as good work this year as before. At this place (Sidon) we are to feel proud and congratulate ourselves for what we have done. The presiding elder was favorably impressed with this people."

—Rev. J. S. Parker, P. C., writes from Hattiesburg, Miss.: "Two weeks ago we closed a protracted meeting which proved to be of much spiritual benefit to our live little city. Twenty-six were added to our church and three to the Presbyterian Church. We have received over sixty members into our church since the first of January, last. We had with us during the meeting Revs. J. W. Chambers, I. L. Peebles and J. J. Smylie. These brethren came in the spirit of the Master, and did efficient service. Children's Day was observed according to program, and was a delightful occasion. At the close of the services the altar was crowded with children, and six little girls and boys united with the church. One of the brightest and fairest of all has since gone home to heaven. The collection was creditable. Thanks to Bro. McAllister for his interest in our behalf, and to Bro. J. G. Grant for his donation of two pulpit chairs to our church."

—Bro. H. D. Howell, writing from Lumberton, Miss., says: "The work of the Lord, I think, is prospering on the Purvis circuit. Congregations good, prayer meetings well attended, Sunday-schools doing well. We have one Epworth League, two Woman's Aid Societies. Our meeting at Poplarville was not a marked success; five professed conversion, and we received four into the church. At Purvis we had a good meeting. How many conversions I do not know, but quite a number. The church was greatly blessed and strengthened. All the collections well in hand. My stewards are good men, and true."

—Rev. J. H. Callaway reports from Monterey, La.: "We are now blessed with a good rain since a considerable drouth. Our second Quarterly Conference convened here in the neighborhood of Monterey. Our well-beloved, young and eloquent presiding elder was with us in the spirit of the Lord, and preached four eloquent sermons to the delight of his many hearers. We love him dearly. He is the first presiding elder we have had the pleasure of entertaining since we married. He is so pleasant, we love for him to come. I think we will have a glorious time this year. We have had some good meetings; some money collected. Eight accessions and thirteen children baptized."

—Rev. G. R. Ellis, Estabuchie, Miss., writes: "Have just closed a profitable meeting at this place of eight days' duration. Ten accessions: nine on profession and one by certificate. Much good, I trust, has been accomplished for the Master. The church is considerably revived. Bros. Merchant and Gilmore were my helpers till the last night (Sunday) of the meeting, when Bro. E. J. Taylor came and preached us a masterly sermon on the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, after which the emblems of his (Christ's) broken body and shed blood were administered to quite a number of communicants. God is blessing us up here. My congregations are getting so large that at some of my appointments the houses are too small to accommodate them, some having to stand while listening to the preaching of the Word."

Robust English Women

owe their health to much outdoor life and physical exercise. In our Southern climate during the protracted summer, the broiling sun forbids exposure, but the use of Creole Female Tonic will be found of great service in all cases of female weakness, debility, suppression and prostration.

Anti-Lottery.

FREE LITERATURE.

Having an opportunity of scattering ten thousand (10,000) copies of the "Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed," by the Rev. B. Carradine, D. D., over the State of Louisiana for only three hundred and twenty-five dollars ($325), we have determined to raise the money and scatter them gratuitously. The following parties have subscribed for this purpose: Rev. John T. Sawyer, $5; Rev. Wm. H. LaPrade, $7 50; J. G. Grant, $10; A. A. Parker, $5; Frank A. Daniels, $5; J. C. Shansy, $5; J. Thomson, $5; Geo. Thomson, $5; Rev. A. E. Clay, $2 50; Rev. Wm. P. McLaughlin, $1—making a total of $51, and a balance of $274 yet to be raised. Any amount sent to us will be promptly acknowledged. Ten copies of the above book will be sent gratis to anyone wishing to use them for distribution. All we require is that you pay the express charges at your end of the line or send 50 cents to pay postage. Send on at once and help on the work. Send to us, or to F. D. Van Valkenburgh, 106 Camp street, New Orleans.

University School of Petersburg, Virginia.

We beg to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of this famous Virginia School, which, for its methods, the high tone of honor existing among its pupils, and their success at the University of Virginia, Princeton, Harvard, West Point, Annapolis, and the great engineering schools of the country, has achieved such an enviable reputation. The 27th annual session begins October 5th.

Five Birds with One Stone.

If you will send $2 to R. P. Wilson, 636 Clay street, San Francisco, Cal., ordering the Pacific Methodist Advocate for one year, you will accomplish five things:

1. You will get the worth of your money, for the paper is able, sound, and sparkling.
2. You will encourage your brethren on the picket line.
3. You will help to place that enterprise of your church on a paying basis at once.
4. You will build up a connectional interest of vast importance to every Southern Methodist.
5. You will help to evangelize and hold the Pacific Coast for Christ.

Como, Miss.

Dear Brethren: You will please secure certificates when you purchase tickets for District Conference, which will enable you to return on one-third fare. Now, brethren, don't fail to get your certificates, and don't fail to come to District Conference, to convene July 2, 1891. P. H. HOWSE.

Remember the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference convenes in Winona, Saturday night, at eight o'clock, June 27. All officers and delegates are urged to be present at the first meeting, which will be a praise service.

Just as little baggage as possible, sisters. MRS. T. B. HARGROVE, President.

Persons coming to the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, which meets in Winona, Miss., June 27, will procure certificates from the agent issuing their ticket that they paid full fare to this place. Agents have not been instructed, but we are trying to get reduced rates on all the railroads, and hope to succeed. With such certificates we hope our agents here will be authorized to give reduced rates returning.

J. D. CAMERON.

To the Members of the Arcadia District Conference:

Dear Brethren: It is expected by the pastor, myself and all concerned here that you will be on hand Wednesday evening, so that you may have your homes assigned you. It will aid us much to have a full delegation present at the opening of the Conference. Let preachers and laymen come in the spirit of the divine Master, aiming at the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

J. L. P. SHEPPARD, P. E.

Ministers and delegates attending the District Conference at Arcadia, La., July 2, will be required to pay full fare coming, and get a certificate from agent of that fact (when he purchases his ticket), and will be entitled to return for one cent per mile over the V., S. and P. railroad. There are two trains each way per day. East-bound, arriving at 9:17 A. M. and 6 P. M.; west-bound, 8:30 A. M. and 8 P. M. Parties arriving by private conveyance will report at the store of W. P. Theus.

T. H. MCCLENDON, Pastor.

East Mississippi Female College.

This institution has just closed a prosperous session. President Anderson has given eminent satisfaction. There is not a dancing, theatre-going, irreligious teacher in the faculty. No professional opera singer is employed. The Bible has a place in the curriculum. Commencement sermon, Sunday, June 14, by Rev. W. B. Lewis. Address before art department by Rev. A. F. Watkins, Monday, June 15. Annual address by Rev. Wm. Rice Sims, Ph.D., Thursday, June 18. Seven graduates in degree of M. E. L., to wit: Misses Ruth Gully, Ida Lewis, Sallie Lyon, Carol Mellen, Kate Selby and Mary White. Two others, Lucy Andrews and Lucy Harper, would have graduated, but ill-health forced them to quit school some weeks ago. None were more studious or deserving.

T. L. MELLEN.

[Bro. Mellen writes that seven graduated, but he only gives six names, and we can't supply the other.—EDITOR.]

Our Sunday-School Magazine.

FIFTY-SIX PAGES MONTHLY.

Bishop Haygood; Dr. Carlisle, President of Wofford College; Dr. Gross Alexander, Professor of New Testament Greek at Vanderbilt University; and Rev. H. T. Bacon, of the Virginia Conference, long known to our Sunday-schools as "Tyree Glenn," are the Lesson Writers for our Sunday-school Magazine for the rest of this year. Of our ninety-odd thousand Sunday-school teachers, have we not fifty thousand who will pay one cent a week for this Magazine? If we could present its claims personally and directly to each teacher, we would certainly get the fifty thousand subscribers. Twenty-five cents will pay the subscription for the next twenty-six weeks—from July, 1891, to January, 1892. We beg pastors and superintendents to call the attention of teachers anew to this periodical. With fifty thousand subscribers the Sunday-school Committee could afford to employ more contributors, and add more pages to the Magazine, so that every one of its present subscribers has an interest in raising its circulation to fifty thousand. We are sure a united effort on the part of all concerned would bring us orders for fifty thousand copies of the August number. Lend us a hand, brethren.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

TOMMY'S WISHES.

BY R. K. M.

No fairyland I care to know,
This world is good enough for me.
I like it very much, although
Some changes I would like to see:

I wish that study were like play,
And school a circus of delight,
And that 'twas summer every day,
And all the rain would fall at night.

I wish that luscious as ice-cream
Were castor-oil and ipecac,
And that the dentist's chair would seem
To me my frisky pony's back.

I wish that whippings made me gay
And happy, and would never hurt,
And that I had ten meals a day,
And each one nothing but dessert.

—Harper's Young People.

True Gentlemen.

"I beg your pardon!" and, with a smile and a touch of his hat, Harry Edmond handed to an old man, against whom he accidently stumbled, the cane which he had knocked from his hand. "I hope I did not hurt you! We were playing too roughly."

"Not a bit," said the old man. "Boys will be boys, and it is best they should be. You didn't harm me."

"I'm glad to hear it," and, lifting his hat again, Harry turned to join the playmates with whom he had been frolicking at the time of the accident.

"What do you raise your hat to that old fellow for?" asked his companion, Charlie Gray. "He is only old Giles."

"That makes no difference," said Harry. "The question is not whether he is a gentleman, but whether I am one; and no true gentleman will be less polite to a man because he wears a shabby coat, or sells vegetables through the streets."—Southern Churchman.

SIS KNEW BETTER.—A young man home from college, wishing to inspire his little sister with awe for his learning, pointed to a star, and said:

"Sis, do you see that bright, little luminary? It's bigger than this whole world."

"No 'tain't," said Sis.

"Yes, it is," declared the young collegian.

"Then why don't it keep off the rain?" was the triumphant rejoinder.—Spare Moments.

It was Johnny's first day at school, and when he returned home he was asked by his mother how he liked it. "Ma, it's just bully, and I wouldn't miss a day for anything!" he exclaimed. "Two boys got licked, a girl got her ears pulled, and the teacher asked me if I knowed the vowels." "And what did you say, Johnny?" asked the fond parent. "I says certainly I knows the vowels; vowels is turkeys and chickens. And then all the little boys and girls laughed."

A funny paper has this neat little story pictured out: "A hunter went out to hunt. At the same time a bear went out to eat. The hunter saw the bear. Quoth the hunter: 'Ah, there's my fur overcoat.' He fired. The bear jumped behind a tree and was not hurt. Quoth the bear: 'Ah, there's my square meal;' whereupon the bear ate the hunter. Ergo (by the mutual arrangement), the hunter got his fur overcoat, and the bear his square meal."—Evening Wisconsin.

If the way to heaven be narrow, it is not long; and if the gate be strait, it opens into endless life.—Beveridge.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote to you once before, and you published my letter, so I thought I would write again. We have been taking your good paper about four years, and I read it every time it comes from the postoffice. I go to Sunday-school most every Sunday. We have to go about four miles. Our superintendent is Mr. James. Mr. Editor, we have the best preacher you ever did see. His name is Mr. Sullivan. Everybody likes him. We will have an organ before long. We have collected most enough money to buy one. I was one of the committee to beg (as we call it). I collected $7.25; and there were five other girls. Mr. Editor (if you can), you must come down to our church some time. We would be glad to see you. I forgot to tell the name of our church; it is Bethel. Well, Mr. Editor, I must close, hoping you much success with your paper; and, hoping to see my letter in print, I am, as ever,

Your nnknown friend,
EDNA A. RICHARDSON.

Woodville, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not seen anything in the ADVOCATE from this place for a long while, I tried to write a letter to let the readers of the ADVOCATE know that we are still alive through the kind providence of the Lord, and that we are still trying to do what we can for the Master. We had quite a nice time at Pleasant Grove Church on the first Sunday of June. We had Children's Day; some speeches from the children, some recitations and some essays read, and a short address by Bro. Havers, our pastor, and one by Rev. B. A. Beeson; also an address by Bro. James Netherlin. Bro. O. F. Wilson, our Sunday-school superintendent, conducted the Sunday-school services, and carried out the children's program very nicely, after which we had a sermon suited to the occasion by our pastor. With many good wishes for the dear old ADVOCATE and its editor, I remain,

Your friend,
BELLE BEESON.

MR. EDITOR: As there are so many little children writing to your nice paper, I thought I would write a letter to surprise my Grandpa Reed. He is a preacher, and the oldest one in the Louisiana Conference. My age is ten years, and I have two little sisters younger than myself. Their names are Annie and Eurilla. We have never been to school, but our sister teaches us at home. We have a nice home one mile from the river, and my papa works a farm near the river. We sometimes go cross the river to the lakes fishing, as there are no lakes on this side of the river. I would like very much to see my first letter in print.

EUNICE REED.

Columbia, La.

MR. EDITOR: My papa has been taking the dear old ADVOCATE for eighteen years, and I enjoy reading the children's letters every week. I am a little blue-eyed girl of twelve summers. I did not go to school this term, but expect to go next. I attend Sunday-school every Sunday. Mrs. Reynolds is my teacher. I like her very much. I am studying the illustrated lesson paper. Hoping my letter will not find its way to that dreaded waste-basket, I will close by asking this question: What is the population of the city of Nineveh?

The Poverty of Married Women.

That married women, as a class, have very little independence in the matter of money, is a fact which husbands are slow to believe. That grown-up daughters, the first bloom of girlhood over, chafed at the restraints imposed upon them by the circumstances of their respectable pauperhood, for it was often exactly this, was another fact concerning which fathers were dubious.

In these days, the unmarried woman who has received a good education, and is not needed in her home, usually strikes out for herself in some wage-earning direction. I know many young girls who use their talents in some way, so that they do not have to ask or to account for every cent they spend. The feeling which prompts them to this independent course is praiseworthy.

A woman, as well as a man, should endeavor to be useful, and if her father or brothers, as is usually in America, are men working hard at their business or professional occupations, she ought to be self-supporting.

Our sincerest sympathies go out to men who are handicapped by the indolence or incapability of sisters or daughters. Such cases were once common. They are now very infrequent.

The wife is differently situated. In the home partnership she finds her province in saving and administrating rather than in the earning. Her part is as essential in the home economy as that of her husband. There is no justice in the state of affairs which makes her not a business partner in the home firm, but a persistent mendicant with a purse inadequately filled, and a constant feeling of incertitude as to what she may spend for her own purposes outside of marketing, clothing and school bills. The wife of a mechanic is often more independent and really richer than the wife of a merchant prince, the former being accustomed to consult his wife's good sense in order to disburse wisely the small weekly sum earned by his labor. The other is often allowed to send bills to her husband, while her pocket-book may be destitute of car-fare or luncheon money, for which she is too proud to ask.

Because women are treated like children in this regard, there is more or less friction in thousands of homes which would else be very serene and charming to all within their gates.

Aunt Marjorie knows that there are multitudes to whom this talk does not appeal. There are, unfortunately, many who may be called, with propriety, "mendicant wives," to borrow a phrase of that champion of womankind, Col. T. W. Higginson.

Men sometimes say, carelessly: "It would not trouble us much could we get what we wanted for the mere asking. We work for our incomes."

Probably the asking would be as irritating to the one sex as to the other, were the cases reversed. And, who works for her salary, or wage, or part of the income, if not the wife and mother? Is it quite fair that she should, as I have known her do, live in a palace of a home, and envy her cook and waitress the freedom with which they could spend what they had earned?—Aunt Marjorie, in Christian Intelligencer.

OUR HABITS WITH OUR HANDS.—What to do with the hands, especially on important social occasions, is with many persons, even of cultured habits, often a disturbing problem. No one likes to appear awkward, and frequently the very dread of doing so precipitates the result that was feared. Quiet self-possession, especially amid unwonted scenes, is the solution of all perplexing matters of this sort; but, unfortunately, the command to be self-possessed is much easier to give than to obey. What to do with the hands, therefore, is best solved by doing nothing with them. If no thought is given them, they will naturally take care of themselves in a manner that will attract no attention and give no mortification to the possessor. One thing, however, should be early instilled into the practice of children, as it is then most easily made a rule of conduct; keep the hands at rest when there is nothing for them properly to do. The practice of incessantly toying with whatever may be in reach is one of the most annoying imaginable in that class of habits which do not directly affront other people, and it is not by any means confined to those who might be classed as ill-bred.—Good Housekeeping.

SCIENTIFIC.

ARTIFICIAL ICE.—The scientific fact on which the making of artificial ice depends is that when a liquid evaporates it uses up a great deal of heat, which it draws from anything that happens to be around it. If a can of water is at hand, its temperature is reduced, and if the action goes far enough, the water will be frozen. This cooling action can be felt by pouring a little ether or alcohol upon the hand. The liquid evaporates rapidly, and the loss of the heat which it takes up cools the hand very perceptibly. If a bottle containing water is kept wet on the outside with ether, the evaporation will chill the water and eventually freeze it. This is essentially the process by which the carafes frappees of French restaurants are produced. The decanters filled with fresh water are set in shallow tanks containing brine, which remains liquid below the temperature at which fresh water freezes. In contact with these tanks are receivers, which can be kept charged with newly formed ether vapor. The chilling vapor cools the brine, and this in turn takes heat from the water in the decanters, which soon freezes.

In making ice on the large scale, either ammonia or sulphurous oxide is used instead of ether, because these substances are cheaper and are not inflammable.—Popular Science Monthly.

WHY DOES SOLID IRON FLOAT ON MOLTEN IRON?—This question, which has puzzled a good many observers, was satisfactorily explained by Dr. Anderson in a recent paper on "Steel" read before the Iron Institute, London. When a piece of solid iron is thrown into a pot of molten iron or steel the solid metal at first sinks, which shows that its volume is less than the melted metal. But soon the solid piece becomes heated, which causes it to expand, its volume is increased, and it rises and floats on the surface of the molten mass. The action is the same both with iron and steel. Mr. Wrightson said:

"The experiment was frequently made by throwing a piece of iron into melted steel. They could see it go down, and might think that it was on account of the impetus which the iron had attained in falling that height, but as a matter of fact, if the iron were put upon a fork and lowered, it would go down; but in the course of a few seconds it came up again, and kept on expanding until the piece of iron was a considerable distance above the surface of the metal. Then it decreased in volume, and of course became of the same volume as the molten metal which it joined. Anyone could see by the distance that the piece of iron went above the surface that it was of considerably less density than the molten metal."—Scientific American.

PROGRESS OF GUNNERY.—In former days our most powerful weapons were the 68 pounder or 8 inch 95 cwt. smooth bore gun, used with a charge of 18 lb. of powder, which threw a spherical cast-iron shell of about 48 lb. weight, containing 2 lb. 9 oz. of powder; and the 13 inch cast-iron sea service mortar, used for bombardment, for which the spherical shell weighed 207 lb., and the projecting charge was 20 lb. of powder. The positions which these pieces then held are now occupied by the 8 inch rifled howitzer, throwing a conoidal wrought iron or steel shell, charged with a much more powerful explosive than powder; the 12 inch breech-loading gun of 45 tons weight, with a charge of 295 lb. of powder, throwing a projectile of 682½ lb. weight; the 80 ton 16 inch muzzle-loading gun, with a charge of 450 lb. and a projectile weighing 1,640 lb.; and the 110 ton breech-loading gun of 16¼ inches caliber, which throws steel projectiles weighing 1,800 lb. with a powder charge of 960 lb. The cost of production of the smooth bore cast-iron guns in those days ranged from $125 to $150 per ton; now, our rifled steel breech-loading guns cost from $850 to $1,000 per ton.—Scientific American.

A Life Saved!

READ THE TWO STATEMENTS.

An Extraordinary Case!

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 22, 1890.

Last April I was attacked with Chagres Fever in Spanish Honduras and was given up to die by two physicians. During that spell and since I have used a pound of quinine and quantities of other medicines without any benefit. From three to four days out of every week I have been down and have suffered untold agonies. Between these spells I could scarcely walk more than two blocks at a time. I did not expect to live through the coming winter. Ten days ago I commenced using Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. I have had no fever since. All the symptoms have entirely disappeared. I have no pain or trouble of any kind. Am gaining strength very fast. Can walk miles at a time. My sudden and rapid improvement is simply wonderful. Germetuer has been a God-send to me. I can not say too much in its praise. Any who wish to do so may call on me. DANIEL PAPPON, 481 Jersey Street.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1891.

My improvement continued, and soon after writing the above statement I was able to go to work and have been working ever since. My health is now perfect. I never felt better in my life. I give this testimony gladly, because I know that Germetuer saved my life. DANIEL PAPPON.

Chagres Fever is known to be not only a most dangerous form of sickness, but also very difficult to cure. Germetuer has been tried on a number of cases. In every known instance it has cured quickly and completely. It has a similar record as a remedy for Swamp Fever and Malarial troubles of all kinds. Properly used, it is the quickest and most unfailing remedy for Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Debility, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Dysentery and all diseases of the Blood and Skin.

These claims are sustained by evidences from thousands of the best people in the country, and the evidences multiply in our midst every day.

For sale by druggists and country merchants, and at the Germetuer office, 202 Canal St., New Orleans. For full information, circulars, etc., call on or address Kit Williams, Agent, 202 Canal St. $1 bottle; six bottles for $5.

OBITUARIES.

RUSSELL—JOHN RUSSELL was born in Orangeburg district, S. C., Sept. 29, 1815; moved to Simpson county, Miss., while quite young; thence to Rankin county, where he spent the remainder of his long and useful life. Bro. Russell was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, about the year 1830. He was married three times: the first time to Miss Mary Chapman, Dec. 18, 1833. As the fruit of this union there were four children given them. He was married the second time to Mrs. S. E. Graham, Dec. 18, 1840, by whom he raised eight children. The third time he was married to Miss Sarah Mize, April 10, 1890. Of the twelve children all have joined the church but one son.

Bro. Russell was a man of great energy and force of character, and was successful in money making. He was honored by his county in being elected to the office of coroner and ranger two terms. He served twelve years as assessor to the satisfaction of his constituents. In 1883 he was elected to the Legislature, and in 1885 was re-elected. He was a strong prohibitionist, and a true and faithful member of the fraternity of Free Masons. He died a peaceful death, after having suffered the most excruciating pain for several days, during which time he expressed himself as being ready to go. He died Dec. 29, 1890.

Thus ended a long and useful life of seventy-five years and three months. I served as his pastor two years. He was a man of strong convictions and an indomitable will. What he proposed to do he did with his might. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!" May the children and the bereaved wife live so as to have a happy reunion in our Father's house!

J. F. ROBINSON.

KNIGHT—Mrs. SALLIE E. KNIGHT was born in Rankin county, Miss., Jan. 10, 1842; joined the M. E. Church, South, when twelve years old, at Shiloh Church, Strong River circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference. She was married to W. B. Knight, Jan. 7, 1869, with whom she lived a happy, devoted life, until May 25, 1891, when God sent a convoy of angels to convey her immortal spirit from earth to a world of light and peace. On the twenty-seventh kind friends tenderly deposited her mortal body in the grave at Sicily Island Church, La., there to remain until the Master comes to gather his saints.

Sister Knight never attached herself to the church after leaving Mississippi in 1884, on account of ill health and the distance from her home. The writer made the acquaintance of this Christian lady early in January, last, and was deeply impressed with her devotion to God and her family. Early in March, last, she was brought to a bed of affliction from which she never recovered. Often have we called to cheer and comfort this faithful one, and never found her in doubt as to her acceptance with God; and while her sufferings were great, she would look up through her tears and rejoice. "For our light afflictions, which are but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Here is a bereaved family, indeed—eight children (three sons and five daughters) in age from infancy to noble manhood. Oh! "what is a home without a mother" to shape the character and instruct the minds of the little girls!

W. L. HAMIL, Pastor.

RAWLS—SAMUEL ABIJAH, son of S. A. and Willie A. Rawls, was born July 15, 1889, and after a short and painful illness died June 7, 1891, aged one year ten months and twenty-two days.

How beautiful and impressive to see the Sunday-school children formed in procession by their beloved superintendent at the church door and march after the little corpse to the grave, and after the services at the grave were over see them again form in circle around the grave and, with their child-like voices, sing the old old hymn, "Hark! from the tomb a doleful sound!" This was, indeed, impressive to all present—all for love and respect to little Sammie; and now little Sammie is gone to be no more! O Father, comfort the bereaved parents and grandparents with a constant visitation of thy loving Spirit!

JAS. M. GRIGGS.

ELMORE—Sister MARY J. ELMORE (nee Houston) was born March 30, 1858, in Lafayette county, Miss.; was reared by pious parents, and was converted and brought into the church, when fifteen years of age, under the ministry of Rev. Elias Jackson (deceased). She was married to George T. Elmore, Feb. 15, 1874. She leaves one daughter and two sons and husband greatly bereaved.

Sister Elmore was a devoted Christian. With much patience she endured her last afflictions, which were of three years' duration. She ended her days peacefully at Harmontown, April 26, 1891. She was buried in the presence of very many sympathizing friends and relatives at Free Springs, April 27, by the pastor,

J. W. POSTON.

LAUGHLIN—Mrs. FANNIE LAUGHLIN (nee White) was born Sept. 1, 1851; married to Mr. Joe Laughlin, March 7, 1877; joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1878, and died Dec. 23, 1890.

So far as the writer knew, Sister Fannie lived a Christian life. Her health was not good for several months before her death, and, therefore, she did not attend church. She was kind and loving to her adopted children, Louie and Clyde, who, we trust, may become useful men, thus showing the good results of her teaching.

Her mother, a brother, and two sisters are left to mourn, but they have the consolation of the blessed gospel of God our Savior.

HER PASTOR.

HUGHS—JOHN HUGHS was born in Liverpool, England, July 6, 1790, and died in Jackson county, Miss., April 17, 1891. He went to sea when thirteen years old, and followed the sea for thirty years. He came to the United States in 1815; was converted and joined the Methodist Church in 1866. At one hundred years old his mind was clear, and he would talk intelligently about the various places he had visited. He died in peace.

T. S. WEST.

ABELS—RICHARD ABELS died at his home in Springfield, La., Dec. 20, 1890, aged sixty-three years eleven months and twelve days. He was a German by birth, but came to America when quite a young man, and was a resident of Tangipahoa parish, La., and remained one of her leading and most successful farmers for nearly thirty-five years. Thence he removed to Springfield, La., Livingston parish, where two years after he quietly fell on sleep to awake in the resurrection morn.

His was a lofty character, a calm disposition, a loving heart and, on the whole, a philanthropic life. Always planning for the well-being and happiness of his fellow-creatures, and ever grieved for their suffering and distress. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, having joined when but fourteen years of age. He was loyal to his church and faithful in the performance of every Christian duty to the day of his death, and he always aided the progress of Christianity, not only by contributing his means and talent to the church of his choice, but, noble and Christ-like, gave liberally to churches of all denominations. He was a great peace-maker. He loved peace, and when there was a difference between any of his friends, he ever and anon looked up the offending parties and immediately set on foot a plan of reconciliation. Again when peace was disturbed in his community, and the storm, with clouds and darkness, was ready to burst forth with appalling fury upon all, by his timely advice and wise counsel, he quelled the storm, dispelled the darkness and drove away the clouds with the scepter of the singular blessedness of peace. Surely in this he was a child of God. A Christian gentleman, an ingenuous citizen, a beloved husband and father has gone to his reward. Springfield sustains an irreparable loss. A host of friends grieve for him, a wife and six children (all of whom are grown) weep for him; but we would say to you, Grieve and weep not, for

Over the river, from sorrow and pain;
Over the river, earth's loss is heaven's gain;
Over the river, home of the blest;
Over the river, we all shall rest forever with the Lord.

HERVIE MELLARD, P. C.

DIXON—DONNIE DIXON, daughter of L. Q. and Eliza Ann Dixon, was born Aug 7, 1879, and died June 2, 1891. Little Donnie was a bright little girl. She professed religion August, 1890, and joined the M. E. Church, South. A brighter conversion I have never witnessed; and from the time of her conversion until her death she lived the life of a true Christian. She was always present at church when sickness did not prevent. She was a bright little light in the church for old members to go by.

A few hours before she died her father asked her if she was willing to leave him and meet her mother in heaven, who had died several years before; brothers and sisters also who had passed over the river of death. She gently laid her little arms around his neck, and said: "Yes, papa. God bless you! You have done all you could for me, the physician has done all he could; but the great Physician was here, and Jesus was a better nurse than he was." Several times during her sickness she would ask some of her sisters to pray with her. The writer visited her twice during her sickness and heard her ask her brother to pray with her. She asked the writer hereof to pray with her, and we read the twenty-third Psalm, which she loved so well, prayed, and sung, "Oh, come angel hand." It has always been quite a cross for me to stand around the couch of anyone dying; but little Donnie looked like she was looking in the face of Jesus and listening to angelic songs; and I thought, surely Jesus is here claiming his own." While we were administering to her every want Jesus was saying, "Suffer her to come, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Donnie's life here was sweet, but her eternal life is sweeter. May her father live to meet the jewel again! His loss was little Donnie's eternal gain.

R. M. HORN, L. P.

HANKS—ANNIE MAY HANKS, only daughter of Willie D. and Minnie M. Hanks, was born Sept. 23, 1890, near Onkley, Franklin parish, La.; departed this life May 3, 1891, near Natchez, Miss. A home is made desolate by the taking away of this little treasure; but heaven is brighter and happier for an angel, for little Annie has joined the company of infant spirits in a brighter home of love and joy, and she is joining her sweet little voice of praise with the band of angels at the throne of God. Dear little Annie's mission appears to have been to gather the affections of her devoted mother and father and carry them with her back to her home in heaven.

Remember, bereaved parents, your darling has a fairer, richer home in heaven than you could have given her here on earth. Console yourself with this thought. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord! She is at peace now, and her memory will linger like the echoes of music and the fragrance of sweetest flowers with those who knew her; so sweet and pure was her influence while she stayed. She is now wearing a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, has given her. God bless the grieved parents, and the little one will guide them home!

J. S. H.

REEVER—Departed this life at Cross Roads, Miss., May 15, 1891, GEORGE EDMOND, infant child of George and Beulah Reever, aged five months and seven days. The little sufferer is at last at rest among the blessed. We tender the parents our profound sympathy in their sad bereavement, and hope that they may yet feel that all is for the best!

A FRIEND.

The Parting of the Ways.

Wilkins and Watkins were college chums and close friends. They had been hard students and had taken little out-door exercise. When they shook hands and said good-by, at the end of their college career, they were in impaired health. Both had dyspepsia, liver troubles and troublesome coughs.

Wilkins had plenty of money, and decided to travel for his health. Watkins was poor. "I must go to work for my living," said he, "but I'll try the remedy that Robinson talks so much about—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

In less than two years, Wilkins came home in his coffin. Watkins, now in the prime of life, is a bank president, rich and respected, and weighs 200 pounds. "The 'Golden Medical Discovery' saved my life at a critical time," he often says. "Oh, if poor Wilkins had only tried it!" For weak lungs, spitting of blood, all lingering coughs, and consumption in its early stages, it is an unequaled remedy.

Afflictions may buzz and hum about the believer, like bees that have lost their sting; but they can never hurt him.—Flavel.

Marriage Is a Failure

when the wife pines and wastes away. It is necessary in cases of female weakness and debility to give strength and restore health and vigor by the regular use of Creole Female Tonic, woman's best friend.

Prosperous providences are, for the most part, a dangerous state to the soul. The moon never suffers an eclipse but at the full.

Among the remedies that do more than recommend, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment stands first.

The soul is the life of the body. Faith is the life of the soul. Christ is the life of faith.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A cloud-burst at Loechburg, Pa., near Pittsburg, on June 18, destroyed much property.

The Republican Convention of Ohio has nominated Maj. McKinley, of tariff fame, for governor.

The growing crops of Kansas were greatly damaged by the heavy storms which swept through that State on June 19.

Hon. Wm. S. Parkerson, of New Orleans, by special invitation, will address the citizens of Bloomington, Ill., at their peace jubilee on July 4.

A freight and passenger train on the Illinois Central road collided, on June 19, about five miles south of Kenner, La. Four men were killed and six wounded.

An excursion train from Cleveland, O., jumped the track near Dover, on June 21, and, going down an embankment, caused much disaster. Over thirty people were terribly mangled.

In reponse to the call of Gen. Gordon, to take steps toward raising funds for a monument to Jefferson Davis, enthusiastic meetings were held at all points throughout the South on the eighteenth, and committees have been appointed to solicit subscriptions for the fund.

E. J. Jordan, natural gas inspector for Indiana, has returned from Findlay, Ohio, and reports a heavy loss of both pressure and volume of gas in all wells there. He predicts that in two years there will be no gas in Findlay for manufacturing, and also speaks discouragingly of the prospect of the Indiana field.

The Southern Interstate Immigration Bureau has established a department of health, sanitation and climatology, receiving co-operation of Southern medical organizations. It will furnish applicants data on climatology and the sanitary condition in any part of the South. The office will be either at Knoxville, Atlanta, or Asheville.

Upon complaint of the Rev. Sam Small, the grand jury found an indictment for criminal libel against the Rev. J. Wesley Hill, of Ogden, Utah. The offense charged is writing and publishing letters charging criminal conduct upon the Rev. Small in connection with the funds of Utah University.

The mayor of Atlanta has created a sensation by vetoing all licenses to beer saloons. Atlanta issues two kinds of licenses, one to saloonists handling whisky and wines as well as beer, this at $1,000 per annum. The other is for beer saloons, at $250 per annum. The mayor's reason for refusing his approval to beer saloons is that their existence is unfair to the prohibition element and to saloon men who pay the higher license.

The North American Commercial Company, through its attorney, has filed a protest with Acting Secretary Spalding, of the Treasury Department, in which it recites that it has the right to take fur seals from the Islands of St. Paul and St. George for the period of twenty years from May 1, 1890, and it will continue to perform the stipulations of its lease, notwithstanding the agreement between this country and England. It asks compensation for the loss sustained during 1890 on account of the action of the authorities preventing the company from taking its full quota of 60,000 seals during the year.

The Casa Grande Improvement Company of New York is soon to present its petition to the new land court established by the last Congress to determine the title to 6,700,000 acres of land in Arizona. It is an old Spanish claim, and the estimated value of the land involved, as it stands at present, is between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000. At the expense of $4,000,000, 800,000 acres of the grant can be irrigated, which will make the total value about $100,000,000. This petition will probably be the first business to come before the land court which has not yet been organized, but which will soon organize and will be in working order.

FOREIGN.

There is a decided feeling in favor of annexation to the United States among the coffee planters in Guatemala, but the officials of Guatemala do not seem to share this feeling.

Emperor Francis Joseph has given a special audience to Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria. This is considered as implying that the Emperor recognizes the legal status of Bulgaria.

The English Parliament will be prorogued Aug. 6. The government intends to summon the House early, and stake their fate on the Irish local bill, and they calculate to dissolve Parliament after carrying the bill.

The Vatican has lost a large part of its funds in the Banco di Roma and other Italian financial societies. Moreover, large sums have been lent to several Roman princes, and as these have themselves suffered great losses, the Holy See is unable at present to realize on these investments.

In the House of Commons, on June 18, the amendment to the Factory bill, prohibiting children under eleven years old from working, was adopted by a vote of 186 to 20. This amendment will affect 150,000 to 200,000 children in the kingdom, now employed in manufacturing districts as half-timers.

The exchange of communications between Germany, Austria, Hungary, Italy and Switzerland has resulted in the basis of an agreement. It is said the terms upon which commercial union was agreed are meant to be held secret until after the plenipotentiaries prepare the draft of the treaty. A conference for this purpose has been arranged to meet at Berne on Feb. 20. The league is to be an intimate commercial alliance, in which no one of the contracting powers will be privileged to form a trade treaty with any other outside the union, unless it first obtains the assent of the other parties to the alliance.

Boils and Pimples and other affections arising from impure blood may appear at this season, when the blood is heated. Hood's Sarsaparilla removes the cause of these troubles by purifying, vitalizing and enriching the blood, and at the same time it gives strength to the whole system.

Hot Weather

Drives Women to their Senses.

It's the time when they must have something to lessen their work. It's the time when they must have Pearline. Nothing else saves as much or does as much, in all washing and cleaning—and it's done without harm.

Soak your clothes in Pearline and water—no soap—Pearline contains all the soap necessary—two hours, or over night, rinse well, and they will be clean—particulars for this way of washing on every package. Hot weather increases the number who use Pearline—but in cooler times there's no falling off.

It's easily explained, you can drive women to use Pearline—some of them have to be driven to it. But, once they've used it, you can't drive them into giving it up.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE.—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back.

Brookhaven District Conference.

The Brookhaven District Conference was held at Bogue Chitto, June 18 to 21. The custom which is growing among us, to prefer country places and smaller railroad towns for these Conferences, was approved in this instance. Bogue Chitto Methodism is grouped close about their bright new church in this thriving village. From five to eight delegates were entertained by each family, and yet there was room and welcome, with plenty to spare. This close connection added greatly, in the intervals of the Conference sessions, to the social pleasures of the occasion, and was no small factor in the harmony and the excellent religious spirit which prevailed. The elder—Doctor Woodward, as our people will call him—presided efficiently, and not too much. Bros. G. H. Galloway and L. W. Wood made excellent secretaries. Two pastors—Bros. Norsworthy and West—were absent on account of sickness; the attendance otherwise was about as usual. There were more than enough laymen to furnish us a delegation to the Annual Conference. The condition of the church in the district was carefully reviewed. By reason of addition in some cases and judicious subtraction in others, the church is getting ready for a forward movement with good prospects. Yet there are hard places, and Methodism continues to demonstrate its providential mission by finding these out and furnishing men and means to supply them with the gospel of Christ. The heroic days are not yet past, and the Methodist itinerant, as a hero, is yet in the succession.

The Conference business was conducted with a delightful freedom from formality. Only two committees—one on Public Worship and one on Quarterly Conference Records—were appointed; hence we have no able reports for the ADVOCATE to print. The visiting brother was present in good force, and contributed much to the pleasure and profit of the occasion. The preaching was unusually good—strong, pointed, spiritual. There were times when the amen corner seemed to be all over the house. A gracious influence attended the services of song and prayer, fully justifying the remark of one brother, that "the road to heaven goes mighty close to Bogue Chitto."

Friday's afternoon session was devoted to the interests of Sunday-schools. Bro. B. F. Lewis, secretary of Conference Sunday-school Board, was present, and, by request, conducted the exercises. Only two of the appointed speakers were on hand, and hence there was a good deal of extemporaneousness in the addresses made. Bro. Ellison, using a striking diagram by way of illustration, condensed a large amount of argument for the unity of the Scripture into a speech of twenty minutes, so that when he stated, in conclusion, that he had eight or ten sermons upon this subject, it was not hard for us to believe that he has them, and that they are worth hearing, too. A lively debate sprang up when the question was raised whether the use of the Sunday-school lesson papers is a help or a hindrance to the proper knowledge of the Scriptures themselves. The discussion brought out some interesting facts concerning Sunday-school methods, and resulted in a general agreement that when a lack of Scripture study is in any way connected with the present system, it is due, not to the use, but to the abuse of lesson helps.

Rev. J. W. McLaurin, agent of the American Bible Society, was present in the interest of that great organization.

The subject of education was not overlooked. Whitworth College made its customary report of success and progress. The affairs of the district high school were somewhat involved; but a good Board of Trustees was appointed, and a new and, we trust, successful effort will be made to establish this worthy enterprise.

Bro. A. F. Watkins was with us two days, and kept us in mind of our obligations to Millsaps College. We are rather proud in the comparison of our record upon this interest of our church. In contributions to its support, Brookhaven district is more than fifty per cent. ahead of any other in the State. Indeed, we are not sure that we have not a right to claim even more than this, since Major Millsaps was trained to give in the pine woods of Lincoln county. We look forward with high hopes to the early opening of this new institution. There was something of a sensation, however, when President Fitzhugh said that the college ought to have $500,000 to start with, and announced his purpose to push the endowment of Whitworth as soon as Millsaps College is well under way.

The ADVOCATE was well represented by the business manager, Bro. Mitchel. The sensation of the session was produced by his reluctant statement that of 400 subscribers to the ADVOCATE in this district, more than half are delinquents; the balance due on this account being nearly, or quite, $800. And yet the credit of the paper is good, and all its employees are promptly paid! Truly, a Conference organ lives like a Methodist preacher on a fourth-rate circuit—the Lord knows how. It did not help matters much to learn that other districts are equally in arrears. Brethren, let us pay up, and see how interesting the ADVOCATE will become.

Bro. W. D. Dominick, Conference "depositary," spent two days with us, and received encouraging assurances of patronage.

This account would be incomplete if it did not mention the presence of that true and tried old soldier, "the original and only" A. B. Nicholson, as the itinerant boys love to call him. Though greatly afflicted in body recently, and by no means yet recovered, Bro. Nicholsen grows middle-aged, not old, gracefully. Among the good things of which Brookhaven boasts we count not least the character of our superannuates, past and present. In our pine woods atmosphere they don't get sour with age; "the old is better."

The Conference meets next year at Magnolia.

R. S. RICKETTS.

Sunday-School Work.

MR. EDITOR: Your first inquiry is, "The object of Sunday-school work?"

It is to educate the children and youth in the sacred Scriptures, that they may learn from them that all are born sinners; that there is a God of greatness and love; the gift of his Son for their redemption; his plan of salvation of all who accept Jesus Christ as their Savior, obey his commands and follow him; that by his grace they may know him spiritually, and, by true repentance, loving and trusting in him, all may be pardoned and saved.

Your second, "The best methods to effect that work?"

The object being religious instruction and salvation, it is easier to tell the best methods than to effect the grand object. We have in our Sunday-schools so much variety of age, character and disposition, that it is impossible to adopt any regular rule, or plan of action, or government. There must be variety in instructors to correspond, in a good degree, with those to be instructed. That gentleness of manner and kindness of temper which captivates and wins the heart of a sweet, innocent girl sometimes drives from us the rude, uncouth lad, when a little firmness might bring him under control. A teacher should be a good judge of character, fine common sense and earnest piety, with gentleness to win and firmness to command good naturedly. A teacher, to be successful, must have such qualifications as these, and exercise them with prudence and care. He must love his class, every member of it. Love begets love, and the class will love him. This being done, the work is well begun, and the foundation laid for success. But a thoughtless teacher may ask, "How can I love an unruly urchin, or a careless, sinful youth?" The Scriptures answer, "Lord, teach us to pray." "Pray for them that despitefully use you." I pray God your whole spirit be preserved. Pray for them in secret, and you shall be rewarded openly. And lest some one should be forgotten in your secret devotions, engrave the name of each upon your heart, as Aaron did, when he went into the holy place for a memorial before the Lord, continually the names of the children of Israel were on his breastplate upon his heart. So let it be with the teacher; and in secret hold each one up before God, ask his wisdom and help. It will be given. Have the best lady you can get, who loves children, to take charge of the infant class. If she fills the place well, the little ones will flock around her; the love of the Sunday-school will be so fixed in their minds that they will grow up in fondness for it. It will be a work of faith and labor of love difficult and hard for the teacher to perform; but if the love of God be in the heart, she will rise above them, looking for the reward at the end of the journey. The little ones being thus won and taught, you have a foundation sure and steadfast upon which to build for God and eternity.

In writing thus of infant classes, I would not ignore larger ones. Let these be taught by the most pious teachers you can procure, who will themselves study and understand the lesson. A teacher who will not do this, but content him or herself with asking the questions in the quarterly or magazine, then leave the class to engage in some light conversation with a friend, is not a good teacher, and will not have the members of his class as stars in his crown of glory in heaven, even though he shall get there himself. They should feel their responsibility; pray with and for every member of the class as fervently as I have attempted to direct the teacher of the little ones. Indeed, they should be more careful in their example and conversation if they would lead in the way of holiness.

Much more might be said of the manner and method of effecting the work in the Sunday-schools of bringing souls from sin to righteousness; but my object in writing is simply to give my views, and show that the great responsibility of saving the Sunday-school scholars lies with the teachers and officers of the school. When the superintendent has discharged his duty, as the head of the school, in song and prayer and praise, and the teachers have performed their duties in properly instructing their classes, then, instead of going about in an idle way, let him or them interest the school or class by telling some story appropriate or suitable to the lesson. Improve the time and occasion as will lead the mind along the heavenly way. Some word may be fitly spoken that may bring forth fruit in days to come.

Now, Mr. Editor, you ask for the results and experience. I have a long experience; about thirty-nine years of continuous management as superintendent of the Methodist Sunday-school in this place, and feel ashamed that it is not a brighter, more glorious one than it is. The great difficulty with me is in holding and keeping the young men. As they grow into manhood, they think the Sunday-school is for children, and wander away. And our young ladies, most of them; when they get married they take the marriage certificate as a diploma of graduation, and, in the main, leave us. Not so with all of them; some remain true and faithful. And I thank God I can say of almost all of our female scholars: they have been converted and are members of the church of God. And many, very many of our boys are consistent members of the church; and I hope and expect to meet a great number of the members of the Macon Sunday-school—scholars and teachers and officers—in our Father's home in heaven.

Mammon vs. Manhood—La. S. L.

Life is an irrepressible conflict between mammon and manhood.

Many put manhood into money in the service of mammon; few put money into manhood in the service of humanity. To make money many lose manhood; to make manhood few lose money. The mad struggle for gain is the insane slaughter of manhood. The best elements of manhood are sacrificed in mere money-getting.

The outraged manhood of Louisiana cries out in helpless ruin against the infamy of the Lottery "octopus" bill that recently passed the bought-up Legislature of that State. Think of it! Two-thirds of the men who misrepresent the State in the Legislature are base enough to sell the sacred manhood of the State for a million and a quarter a year; and how much to the men who are capable of perpetrating so huge an infamy no man will ever know. How much each vote cost the dupes of the gambling swindle would be a curious study in the prices of manhood. The saying that "every man has his price" receives fresh, if not convincing, proof in the fact that in this enlightened, Christian age, any such act could pass any State Legislature in these United States. But the Associated Press dispatches inform us that in the year of grace 1890, the Louisiana Legislature has passed a bill by a two-thirds vote to submit to the people the proposition to continue the Louisiana State Lottery for twenty-five years for the consideration of $1,250,000 annually, to be paid by the Lottery Company to the State for levee, school and other public expenses. The bill at this writing is in the hands of the governor, who, it is believed, will veto it, and then it will be passed over his head and go down to the people to be by them adopted or rejected at the polls. There is ill-concealed fraud upon the very face of the proposition.

The company has already made untold millions, and must expect to continue to derive a revenue from this infamy so large that they can afford to buy up the Legislature, buy up the State and its purchasable manhood, and then have left ample fortunes to divide among the official robbers who hold the bag.

Was there ever such an outrage perpetrated upon a civilized people in the interest of mammon? Do the people of Louisiana realize the magnitude of the struggle thus precipitated upon them? It is not a local question. It is not a question of State policy in which that State is alone interested. Every State in which Lottery offices are opened and Lottery tickets sold has an interest in this question as vital as the honor and integrity of the young manhood which that State fosters. Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, Arkansas, Texas, and every State in this vast Union is a party to this struggle.

Every church, school and home in the land is deeply interested in the question.

Let this Louisiana tarantula be fastened upon the people again and perpetuate its hideous life for twenty-five years, and it will send its venomous sting into every State and community throughout the length and breadth of the land; and if any homes, churches, or institutions escape its deadly fangs, it will not be due to any lack of effort upon the part of the monster itself. This Lottery curse is mammon's boldest, most daring and desperate venture. Will manhood go down before it? Will the virtue, honor, integrity and valor of our Southern manhood be equal to this great battle? Louisiana manhood is making a heroic fight to sustain its honor in the midst of all the corrupting influences now at work.

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE and the Methodist preachers of Louisiana have done their part bravely, prudently and well. Is it too much to invoke the moral and material aid of the Christian manhood of the whole land for our brethren of the Pelican State in this great extremity?

The battle of New Orleans, in which the immortal Jackson conquered a lasting peace with Great Britain, did not involve such vast and vital interests to this country and its heroic manhood, as this battle which the good people of Louisiana are now making against this monster infamy of the century. "Men and brethren, help."—Alabama Christian Advocate.

Address of the Bishops.

To the Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The exigencies of the Board of Missions have impelled it to call upon your General Superintendents to appeal to the church in this behalf. The growth of the church in the mission fields so far exceeds the provision made for its maintenance that much of the most important and effective work has been left without any appropriation, and must either be abandoned or carried on by the missionaries at their own cost and under crippled conditions. These men, the representatives and agents of our own church, have but done the work they were sent to do; and have done it with such zeal, energy, and success that they can send the schedule of results to the Board and the church at home as at once the proof of their fidelity and the basis of appropriations to be made for the normal and healthy extension of the work. Their reports are confirmed to us by those of our number who have visited and inspected the missions. In response to these testimonies and in face of these facts, the church reduces collections, cuts appropriations down to about half the amount estimated as necessary, forbids extension, and blots out some established and useful agencies. Many of the native helpers will be discontinued, and, as such are always in demand, will find employment in other directions, thus discrediting our missions and enhancing the difficulty of securing such service in years to come. This backward movement puts us at a tremendous disadvantage. Earnest, faithful missionaries are embarrassed in their efforts, dispirited, made conscious that the church is not in sympathy with them. The prayer of the church, "Thy kingdom come," is restrained, supplanted by the fears of our covetousness that it is coming too fast; and the opened heavens are closed again and keep back the "blessing such as there shall not be room to receive it" which God holds himself ready to pour out upon them that render to him his due. Are we to instruct our missionaries that there is to be no further advance; that they must confine themselves within the limits now fixed—nay, that they have gone too far and must recede, regardless of manifest providences and directions of the Spirit; that their law of movement must be regulated by the law of covetousness; and that their labors henceforth must be of the mechanical, emasculating, enervating routine sort which refuses to take account of growth, and denies to the Holy Spirit the exercise of his proper function to convince the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment? To state these questions is to answer them. The conscience and the faith of the church repudiate the involved conclusions? Yet the conscience and faith of the church have been so overlaid by ignorance, indifference, and greed of gain as to shut up the Board of Missions to such issues. The meager and insufficient appropriations made at its last meeting convey just that disheartening message, and hold by implication just these instructions for our workmen.

Nor is the Board to be blamed. Moved by the evident blessing of God upon our missions the General Conference directed the Board to make provision for advance movements, and to supply the much-needed additional force to carry its directions into effect. The Board responded to the call, made its appropriations upon an enlarged scale and planned for an active and earnest canvass of the church. Every indication at home and abroad justified the action. With what result? At the end of the first year, marked by the constant and strenuous labors of our agents in office and field, the returns show a decrease in collections of $23,000, and an accumulation of liabilities amounting in the whole to $118,000. Knowing the conditions of the church, and taking note of its increase in members and material wealth, we can not entertain the belief that there is any sufficient reason for this declension. We are not unmindful of the advance made in the various departments of the work in the church at home. A righteous increase in pastors' salaries, a goodly number of parsonages built, new churches in destitute localities and in place of worn-out and insufficient buildings, enlarged expenditure in the interest of Sunday-schools, and much besides in the way of providing increased facilities for the service of the church in the cities and towns throughout our connection, have made appeal to the liberality of our people. It is with sincere gratitude to God that we record these tokens of his favor and demonstrations of the growth of the church. They do not, however, exhaust the resources of our people. They simply indicate large additions to our means, and do not express, except in comparatively few instances, any appreciable measure of self-denial. We do not pretend that the claim of the Son of God upon his church can be satisfied without self-denial. We can not so contradict his own Word. It is certain that we can not carry out his plans without renunciation of selfish desires and withdrawal from investments that give hope of worldly gain. This is fundamental to our Christian life, and but accords with the vows that we assumed when we entered into the communion of the church of God. We would not have it otherwise. The stability and growth to maturity of our Christian life depend upon it. It is not only in the interest of the vast multitudes in heathen lands who in their extreme poverty and spiritual destitution look to you for the word of hope in the gospel, but also in the interest of your own souls, which must inevitably suffer decay if their call be not heeded, that we make our appeal to you. A very moderate degree of self-sacrifice, that will hinder no home enterprise, that will hardly take any comfort from the family, that will trench but slightly upon the ground of self-indulgence, would amply satisfy the present demands of our mission. We commend to you the apostolic requirement that every man should give according as the Lord hath prospered him, and the example of an apostolic church, the riches of whose liberality abounded out of their deep poverty. It would put an everlasting stigma upon our church, nor could we reckon with the church's Lord, if now we should recede from the ground occupied, and suffer the loss of labor, pains, and prayers through so many years when we are just beginning to inherit the promise. The fields are white. Let us not forfeit the harvest ready to be gathered. The need is urgent. Let every presiding elder and preacher in charge see to it that in his district and charge the entire assessment is secured, with such voluntary additions thereto as instructed Christian consciences may prompt. Have our missionary literature brought into the homes of the people, and teach them publicly and privately until the conviction shall be universal in the church that Christ claims the world and the world belongs to Christ, and must be given to him. We commend you to God, who is able to make all grace to abound toward you; that ye always having all sufficiency in all things may abound to every good work.

WHEN DREAMS ARE BEST.

BY DORA READ GOODALE.

From heaven's high top, from earth's green breast,
In softest influence stealing,
A voice that rocks the heart to rest
Sounds at the gates of feeling.

Thy feverish hopes, thy hurrying cares,
Vain passion, doubt unseeing,
Look, what a little part is their's
On the wide sea of Being!

"Time," says the voice, "how brief a thing,
Lost in the wave that bore it!"
My soul thrills like a trembling string,
And heavenly airs breathe o'er it.

With many a fern the bank is set,
Pale sweet brier studs the hedges,
The lake, with many a silver fret,
Laughs through its darkening sedges.

Still, like a dream when dreams are best,
Like perfume heavenward stealing,
The voice of nature's infinite rest
Sounds at the gates of feeling.

The session of Vanderbilt University for 1890-'91, which closed on June 17, has been one of the most successful in the history of the institution. The number of matriculates this year in all the departments is six hundred and eighty. Vanderbilt now ranks among the six leading universities of the country. The most marked advance over previous years has been in the line of true university work. During the year there have been in attendance upon the University, pursuing post-graduate courses, twenty-eight graduate students from nineteen colleges and universities. One of these hails from the University of the Cape of Good Hope; another from that home of universities, Massachusetts. Truly the fame of Vanderbilt is spreading far and wide. A young man has just arrived from Brazil, who will enter the University in the fall for the purpose of taking a course in civil engineering.

The baccalaureate sermon was preached in the University chapel on Sunday, June 14, by Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of the New York Christian Advocate. We had our expectations raised high, and we were not disappointed. The theme was Daniel ii, 44; "It shall stand forever." The day was warm, and the audience large; but for one hour and fifty-five minutes Dr. Buckley held his hearers entranced. The Doctor is a forceful speaker; his sentences are clear-cut; his illustrations striking. His sermon was in the nature of a prophesy concerning the kingdom of Christ, the arguments in support of the text being drawn, not from the Book of Inspiration, but from external sources. He established his conclusion by showing, first, that man has a religious nature; secondly, that the issue before us is Christianity, or no religion, and, lastly, that Christianity is the great civilizer.

On Monday morning a meeting of the Alumni Association was held. At night, in response to an invitation from the association, Judge Marr, of New Orleans, delivered a thoughtful address on the "Duties of College Men to the Public." His effort received high praise.

Tuesday morning was the time set for the hymn and Scripture reading contest by students of the theological department for the A. L. P. Green medal. Those who have never witnessed anything of this kind can have no idea of how entertaining such an exercise can be made. The nine young men who engaged in this contest read so well, bringing out both sense and spirit, that it was an inspiration to listen to them. The medal was won by Rev. J. S. Bareus, of Texas.

James Lane Allen, of Kentucky, the popular Southern author, addressed probably the largest and most appreciative audience of the whole commencement on Tuesday night, his subject being "American Literature," with special reference to that of the South. Mr. Allen is a charming speaker, and he gave us an exhaustive analysis of the causes which influence the growth and decay of a literature. His address has been pronounced by professors and others the best ever delivered here.

On Wednesday morning, at ten o'clock, the students, alumni and faculties of the University assembled at Wesley Hall, and then marched in a body to the chapel in the main building. The commencement speakers were four in number, representing, respectively, the academic, biblical and law departments; one being the class representative. Afterwards Chancellor Garland conferred the degrees as follows: M. S. on two students, M. E. on one, B. A. on twelve, B. S. on three, B. D. on four, B. E. on four, LL. B. on twenty. There were also three graduates in pharmacy, and two students received certificates of having completed the English theological course, one of these being Mr. Tohi Ho Yun, of Corea. Among those who received B. A. diplomas was Miss Dora Johnson, daughter of Dr. W. C. Johnson, of the Memphis Conference. Dr. Garland reserved Miss Johnson's diploma for the last, and then announced to the audience that her work during her four years' course at the University had been well and faithfully done. He said that there was some difficulty in making a Bachelor out of a young lady; but that in the present case it seemed as if it had to be done.

In making the closing announcements, Chancellor Garland said that this was probably the last time he would appear in his official capacity before a commencement audience. During the meeting of the Board of Trust, Dr. Garland tendered his resignation as chancellor, which the Board finally accepted, with the understanding, however, that the Doctor is to hold his position until a suitable man can be found to succeed him. It may be a year before the man is forthcoming. As is fitting, on his retirement, the salary of the present chancellor will be continued during his lifetime.

Rev. Collins Denny, chaplain of the University of Virginia, has been elected as Dr. Tigert's successor to the chair of mental and moral philosophy.

Splendid work is being done in the theological department of the University. Its professors are men of liberal education and the highest Christian zeal. Thirty-eight out of seventy-one theological students and candidates during the past year are college graduates. This excellent showing is due largely to the $100 scholarships which are distributed among graduates desiring to pursue this course. There are twenty-three of these scholarships to be awarded for next year. Applications for same should be sent immediately to Dr. Wilbur F. Tillott.

McKENDREE M. BLACK.

Did Not Cover All the Ground.

"A Member," writing under the heading, "Is it Binding or Not?" struck the keynote upon ministerial support. Text: "Will you be subject to the discipline of the church, attend upon its ordinances and support its institutions?" "I will endeavor so to do by the help of God." (The words in italic are from the ritual, not from the article.)

"A Member" stresses the support of the ministry. To that I do not object in the least—can not afford to—but I have found some members of the M. E. Church, South, too, who refused to pay the Bishop's fund. I have had others give money with the statement, "This is for you; the presiding elder is not to have any of it."

I have been connected, too, more than I desired, and much more than was pleasant, with those that were opposed to foreign missions or to the Conference fund, to our church extension work or to collections for educational purposes; some to one, some to another, and others to all mentioned.

Upwards of a year ago I asked a member of my charge for half a dollar for some assessment made by the Conference. When he declined, I stated that it was my purpose to give a dollar for each church that I served upon that collection. His reply was—and that reply, in connection with his opposition to the collection, formed the balances in which that brother was weighed by his pastor and by every loyal Methodist who knew of the circumstance—"It's given you, and you can afford to give it away."

"A Member" says, "Those who decide not to pay for the support of the church should have their names erased from the roll. "Support of the church!" That covers the ground equivalent to institutions of the church. I say, Amen and amen. I most heartily wish that the class to which reference is made would act upon the brother's suggestion. We would not have so many members, but we would be relieved of much dead weight.

A brother objected to and seemed very much worried over a statement that my worthy predecessor made, viz.: "I am a Methodist, warp and filling." That man who is a Methodist only one way, or who is not a Methodist every way, every time and every where, is not of much consequence any way, any time or any where.

Small specimen he—very miniature, indeed. He reminds me of a reply that a very small man made a large man who thought to make sport of him for being so small. "Ah," said the little man, "I've had the dog all walloped out of me. If you had the dog all walloped out of you, you would not be half as big as I am."

Moral: If some nominal Methodists had everything else "walloped out," there would be very little left. Now, let every reader be honest and locate himself. I am only making caps for the trade—not to order. Should one chance to fit, brother, just wear it. You are perfectly welcome to it. May the Lord help us to be Methodists, not simply in name, but in truth—and the name is significant, not empty and meaningless—to regard our church vow, to support the institutions of the church!

Woodville District Conference.

The Woodville District Conference convened at Woodville, Miss., June 4. The Bishop being absent the first day, the presiding elder, Bro. C. McDonald, took the chair. Bishop Galloway arrived during the evening, and assumed the chair on the morning of the second day. It was the first visit of our beloved Bishop to this historical town; consequently, the people of Woodville were on the qui vive to see the "Bishop," and, as usual, he made a lasting and favorable impression upon all who met him.

This district is a large one, embracing two Mississippi counties and seven Louisiana parishes. The reports from all the charges were full, and indicated a decided improvement over the past. Bro. McDonald, the presiding elder, deserves credit and much praise for his earnest labor in this portion of the Master's vineyard. The reports of the pastors in charge showed a general inclination for a stricter enforcement of the Discipline. A resolution to this effect was passed. A strong resolution, denouncing the Louisiana State Lottery, was passed by a unanimous vote, and publication requested in the ADVOCATE, New Delta, and The Florida Parishes. A resolution commending the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was passed. Bro. McDonald, P. E., reported nearly enough money collected to buy or build a nice district parsonage.

Greensburg, La., was selected as the next meeting-place for the District Conference.

Bros. H. C. Newsom, H. W. McCraine, T. D. Lipscomb and W. O. Ligon were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; J. F. Cassells and P. S. Petty, alternates.

All members of the Conference and visitors were provided with homes, and handsomely entertained by the good people of Woodville. We found the people of this beautiful little city hospitable, refined and cultured, and will always remember our pleasant visit. May God's choicest blessings rest upon them!

ANTI-LOTTERY RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, Certain unknown persons, led by John A. Morris, have succeeded in placing before the people of Louisiana a proposition to reverse their deliberate, wise and virtuous determination, proclaimed to all the world and established in the Constitution of the State, that no lottery shall ever again be licensed by the State of Louisiana; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Woodville District Conference, that we regard the submission of such a proposition to the citizens of our State as highly offensive, not to say insulting, to the self-respect and patriotism of honorable men.

Resolved, That no amount of money offered for any conceivable purposes, however good, should make our people think for a moment favorably of altering our Constitution for the infamous purpose of rechartering that stupendous and fraudulent iniquity and disgrace known as the Louisiana State Lottery.

Resolved, That this question is not and can not be made one of party politics, but is purely one of licensing a private company to rob and plunder the public for personal and private gain; a crying shame and a public disgrace to the worthy citizens and noble State of Louisiana; that the United States government having solemnly declared that the mere carrying of the literature of the Lottery by the United States mail is so signally inimical to the public welfare as to require the strong arm of the law to prevent it forever.

Resolved, That we call on all honest and patriotic citizens to aid us in all honorable ways to abolish and forever prohibit this insult to God, and this public disgrace to the noble State of Louisiana.

Prohibition.

The article over "Mississippi," in the last ADVOCATE, expresses the sentiment of nine-tenths of the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference.

It is news to us all that through all these years of hard fighting for prohibition in towns and counties of Mississippi, we have been compromising with the enemy and fighting for a false principle. In this, as in all good causes, our severest wound has come from the house of our friends. The abusive language of that Brookhaven resolution has done more to cripple the good work of the W. C. T. U. than all their enemies in the State could have done.

I have been ready for thirty years to vote for prohibition in the nation, State, county or town in which I live, always taking what I can get, and no amount of abuse can drive me from continuing in the good work which has freed more than half of our State from the cruel whisky traffic.

I have been in full sympathy with the W. C. T. U., and regret very much that they so far forgot themselves as to make war on other conscientious temperance workers, and still make the great mistake of trying to defend that uncalled-for and unreasonable resolution. I am still in sympathy with the order, but have but little hope of their success if this is to be their policy.

Whitworth College Commencement.

The commencement exercises of this far-famed institution of learning and female culture began Sunday, June 7, with a very fine sermon by Rev. E. E. Hoss, D. D., editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate. It was a masterly effort, thoroughly practical, and, at the same time, deeply spiritual—a rare intellectual treat to all who had the pleasure of hearing him. The music rendered on that occasion has probably not been excelled in Mississippi. It was a sacred cantata, "The Daughter of Jairus," sung by the music faculty and by the college choral society. It was, indeed, a rare treat to all lovers of good music.

The sermon at night, before the Y. L. C. A., was delivered by Rev. J. D. Cameron, D. D., of the North Mississippi Conference. The Doctor is a strong, vigorous preacher; one of the best, no doubt, in his Conference.

On Monday there was a debate by members of the senior class on the question, "Does increased wealth have a favorable effect on the morals of the people?" The debate was a spirited one, and so evenly were the contestants divided in point of talent, that the judges, no doubt, found it difficult to decide in favor of either side, though the affirmative came off victors. The music on that occasion was of the very highest order.

In the afternoon, at 3:30, there was a contest by members of the elocution class for medals offered by the college, and again the audience was entertained by music, unsurpassed in the annals of the college. All the contestants acquitted themselves creditably. The fortunate winners of medals were Misses Leula Weal, of McComb City, and Mai Shelton, of Jackson, Miss.

At eight P. M. was presented the song tournament, a grand musical pageant, in which were introduced in costume the songs of the different nations.

Tuesday was commencement day. At ten A. M. Rev. H. C. Morrison, D. D., of the North Georgia Conference, delivered the annual address. His subject was, "Jottings for the Journey." This brilliant, versatile speaker fully sustained his reputation as one of the best platform speakers in the South. For forty minutes he held the audience spell-bound, as in glowing words he pointed out woman's true sphere in the world, her opportunities and capabilities, and gave to the youthful travelers over life's rugged way mottoes to take with them throughout the journey. The Doctor said it was dangerous for a woman to have nothing to do. "Think," he said, "of a cyclone having nothing to do." He advised the young ladies to take their knitting with them, like their grandmothers used to do when they went off to spend the day; but if they had no knitting of their own, knit for some one else. When next the Doctor speaks upon a Mississippi college rostrum, may we be there to hear. There were twenty-one graduates. The valedictory essay was read by Miss Georgie Turpen, of Louisiana. Miss Daisy Thiel took the medal in vocal music, and our dear little friend, Miss Katie Eagan, in instrumental. A delightful musical recitation, the delivery of medals by Hon. G. D. Shands, and conferring of degrees by the president, closed the most brilliant commencement in the history of this illustrious institution of our church.

A special feature of the college is the conservatory of music and art; Prof. J. F. McKernan, director, assisted by a musical faculty unsurpassed, perhaps, in the South.

There are to be found rare advantages for all those desiring a thoroughly classical education in music. The school is prosperous in all departments. Having attended upon its commencements for several years past, and having had a daughter graduated from there, I am somewhat familiar with the new regime, and do not hesitate to pronounce it, in my opinion, unsurpassed in the South. Long may its noble president and faculty live to be a blessing to our Southern girls, and to send them out from its classic halls polished after the similitude of a palace.

Abbeville Normal School.

The commencement exercises of the Abbeville Normal School closed on the night of June 12. These exercises were profoundly interesting to the large congregations that attended, and evinced in some degree the thorough work done by Messrs. Hightower and Harmon, the principals, and their assistants. The session just closed has been a very prosperous one. The enrollment has reached 170. Of these, about thirty were boarding pupils. With the enlarged facilities already secured for boarding pupils from abroad, we expect a much larger patronage of this kind in the future. Mr. Wineeoff's residence has been purchased, and will be enlarged for a boarding-house.

Rev. T. W. Dye, of Water Valley, preached the commencement sermon, which is thought by all, so far as I have heard expressions, to have been a masterly effort. Why not append the two D.'s to the name of this scholarly and eloquent preacher? It will be done if he lives, and merit counts for anything.

Col. Falkner, of Oxford, also delivered an able address during the commencement exercises.

Messrs. Hightower and Harmon are members of our church, and earnest workers in our Sunday-school here. The moral and religious influence they exert is most wholesome.

We are expecting a revival of religion all over the Abbeville circuit.

East Mississippi Female College.

It was my privilege to abide for two days in this institution during the recent commencement exercises, and to become personally acquainted with its president, his family, and his faculty. Prof. C. W. Anderson is a layman, the son of a Methodist preacher, and a teacher from a sense of duty. A man of thorough culture and of superior abilities, he could make more money in other callings; but he is a consecrated man, and he feels called of God to be a teacher, and is conscientiously devoting his life to this business—not to make money, but to do good. He is fortunate in having at his side an elevated and a cultured Christian helpmate. It goes without saying that the religious atmosphere about that college home is delightful. The discipline is firm and gentle, and the work in the school-room is thorough. The blessing of God will abide there, for his name is honored and worshipped, and his Word read and obeyed every day. Under the present management this school has a bright future, and is an abiding blessing to the country in which it is located.

Is the Parsonage and Home Mission Society Needed in North Mississippi?

In accordance with the authority given to the Executive Committee of the P. and H. M. Society of North Mississippi Conference, applications were considered and an appropriation made, June 11. There were — applications from different districts. The application granted represented conditions as follows: On a work which pays its preacher less than two hundred dollars a house and lot had been bought for two hundred dollars. A cash payment had been made, leaving a small debt bearing interest. The lot is unfenced, house of the cheapest build, unceiled, with rough doors. The pastor said he would do the work himself if we would give the money to buy material. The application was endorsed by the presiding elder and by the district secretary of the P. and H. M. Society. In making a decision, the Executive Committee were guided by the following considerations: To help the most needy, to help where a small sum would assist materially. Those who decided the matter are personally unknown to the successful applicant, and do not live in the same district. It will, therefore, be evident that the matter was decided on its merits solely.

This statement is published in order that other applicants may understand the case fully, and also to show that there is work for the society in our Conference as well as elsewhere.

This first appropriation is a milestone on our pathway. We rejoice that we can help the needy, and we earnestly invite the co-operation of preachers and people.

FROM THE WORK.

ROBELINE, LA.

We have had no startling religious demonstrations in our church here of late; but we do not think this a sufficient reason for holding back all mention of us.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is read by us every week with interest second to no other paper; yet if we were not familiar with the facts, we would naturally conclude that our church here was a thing of the past. It is true we have been much reduced in strength by removals of some of our members who were alive, both spiritually and financially; yet we still have among us Methodists who are strong in the love of God.

Our pastor, Bro. A. D. McVoy, Jr., has been at the Hot Springs, Ark., for some time trying their healing waters. Some here have not forgotten to intercede for him at a throne of grace. His people, who love him so much, are rejoicing that he writes that he is improving, and that he will be with us again on July 5. During Bro. McVoy's absence, the wheels of Zion have not stopped with us entirely. Prayer meetings have been regularly kept up each week, and the Sunday-school moves on.

Sunday-School Lesson—July 5.

THE WORD MADE FLESH.

John 1, 1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us."

LESSON TOPIC.—The Son's personal glory.

CRITICAL OUTLINE.—I. Glory Enjoyed with the Father. II. Glory Proclaimed by John the Bapt. III. Glory Displayed among Men.

MEMORY VERSES.—12-14.

DIFFERENCE WORD.—"Son."

INTRODUCTORY.

The studies for the next six months will be in the Gospel of John, and are, therefore, in a very true sense, biographical sketches of Jesus. Of necessity, they differ widely from the studies in the Gospel of Luke, studied last year. Luke was a historian. Under the guidance of the Spirit, he collated from various sources the incidents recorded in his narrative. John, on the contrary, was one of the closest disciples of Jesus, and tells his story not at all as a historian, but as a beholder and an eye-witness. John's Gospel enjoys the distinction of being called the "Spiritual Gospel." The Apostles give us mainly the external life of Jesus Christ; John lays before us glimpses of the inner life and spirit of the Son of God. Their narrative is largely composed of his manifold and wonderful dealings with men; in John we have rather his tranquil and unbroken union with his Father. The Synoptic element which forms the background of the first three Gospels is the atmosphere of the fourth.

The object of the Gospel of John is clearly stated by him in these words: "But these are written, that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing, ye may have life in his name."

I.—GLORY ENJOYED WITH THE FATHER.

It is impossible not to be struck with the similarity of style between the prologue words of this gospel and those of Genesis. Moses wrote of creation, John of redemption; Moses of the beginning of time, but John of eternity, the beginning before time, "or ever the earth was." Nor can we fail to note the fact that, while Matthew and Luke give us a genealogy of human descent, John goes beyond them and gives us his eternal descent from the bosom of God. Matthew shows Jesus to have been "after the flesh," the son of David and Abraham, the natural seed of the stock of Abraham and the true son of David, the Messiah; Luke, passing by the question of his particular relation to the Jews, shows his descent from Adam, and thus unites him to the whole human race, and so declares him the Savior of all men. But John soars above all into eternity itself, and there finds the eternal descent of Jesus from the bosom of the Father. In the first three Gospels we have an account of the glory Christ had with the Father "before the world was." The manifestation of Christ's glory to the world was not an afterthought; it was not to meet an emergency, but he was before the foundation of the world, ready to be revealed in the fullness of time.

II.—GLORY PROCLAIMED BY JOHN THE BAPTIST.

John was sent of God to prepare the way—"the voice" to call attention to the light about to dawn on the world. He was the witness. John's testimony—"He was he, who coming after me, is come before me; for he was before me."

III.—GLORY DISPLAYED AMONG MEN.

Jesus a shining light. Observe the parallelism between "light" and "life." It is remarkable how frequently in John light and life, on the one hand, and, on the other, how darkness and death are associated. "Shineth in darkness," in this dark-fallen world; "the life was the light of men." They were "sitting in darkness and the shadow of death," when Christ came, with no ability to find the way of truth or of holiness. In this darkness, then, intellectual and moral, the light of the Living Word shineth, and the darkness did not take it in. So to-day many walk in darkness because they will not let the light in. "Men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." Christ rejected first by the sinful world, generally, and by his people particularly—"his own, and they received him not." But not by everybody, for "as many as received him to them gave he power to become the children of God." Christ, the exalting benefactor, gives us power to be the children of God. Christ making it possible for us to reproduce the nature of God. Christ, the Revelation of God. Christ is not only the subject of all revelation, but he is the Revelation. "The only begotten son" declaring him, showing him to the world—"I and my Father are one." If we would know the Father we must know the Son; if we would know the mind of God, we must know the mind of the Son.

The object of the incarnation was to meet the weakness of men. What was the incarnation but God making himself accessible to human thought? The only begotten Son, that dwelleth in the bosom of the Father, hath revealed it to us, that he might take hold of our nature and give us a view of what God has in store for all who believe, that he might redeem us from the curse of the law; that he might raise us from sin by his precious blood, and that by living in union with him we might share in his glory, bring us back to God in himself, and bring us to the original image of God, which he designed us to exhibit when he created us. Let us not miss the grace upon grace which he comes to bestow upon us by refuting him; let us press close upon his great heart, that it may be poured out upon us and fill us with himself.

This beautiful Egyptian queen is said to have possessed wonderful charms of person. Our American women are prone to neglect their health, and should, when suffering from prostration, languor, female debility or weakness, use freely and regularly Creole Female Tonic, the best friend to woman.

Louisiana Notes.

Cousbatta is to have a bank.

The Baton Rouge United Confederate Veterans will celebrate Aug. 5, the anniversary of the battle of Baton Rouge.

Alexandria is preparing to celebrate the "glorious Fourth" in a becoming manner. All places of business will be closed except drug stores and lunch houses.

Lake Charles is making an effort to organize a corporation to run a street car line from the court-house to the Southern Pacific depot, a distance of a mile and a half.

The Clinton Brick and Tile Manufacturing Company have the engine, boiler and saw in place, and began sawing lumber for the drying-shed last week.—Watchman.

The Methodist congregation is having the steeple of their church painted, and will also make some improvements on the front portion of the roof. About $300 will be spent in these repairs.—Truth.

The Lafayette Advertiser says: "An ordinary observer would say: Oh! there is nothing doing in this part of the country; but go up and down the road, and watch the creditable showing made all along, and you will say that Southwest Louisiana will be up with the balance of the world when it comes to harvest time."

The preacher, no matter of what persuasion, who holds his audience during the heated term on hard benches for two hours or more, can never get to heaven. The good Lord can never look with any degree of allowance upon cruelty of any character, least of all upon cruelty to a nicely dressed angel in church. Give us, brother preachers, a rattling good sermon of thirty minutes, a couple of short prayers delivered with power and unction, two good old hymns minus the organ, a rapid doxology, and send us home to cool off in time for dinner. Then we'll bless you.—Ruston Caligraph.

Nearly all the churches in Baton Rouge have recently been or are now undergoing repairs, handsome residences are being built, manufacturing enterprises inaugurated, a central sugar factory in prospect, two railroad lines, two telegraph lines, two ice manufactories, oil mills, two lumber mills, brick yards, splendid system of water works, first-class fire department, electric lights, street railway, free postal delivery after July 1, State Fair in October, new wharf to be built at an early date, streets being improved, real estate commanding good prices, good lands surrounding, splendid climate, people law abiding, first-class schools—what more could a person desire? Baton Rouge is booming.—Baton Rouge Truth.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep, had night-sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Mississippi Items.

W. B. Schmidt has donated an eligible lot upon which to build an Episcopal Church in Ocean Springs.

Dr. R. W. Jones, of the University of Mississippi, declines the presidency of the Industrial Institute and College at Columbus. The institution is so much the worse off.

The editor of the Winston Signal says: "We breathe easier—blackberry time has come." Alas! "blackberry time" never comes to the ADVOCATE, and the breathing is heavy "all the year round."

The Schlitz Brewing Company, of Milwaukee, has purchased 40,000 acres of land from Fuller Bros., of Tallahatchie county, for the purpose of obtaining timber for kegs, barrels and casks. The price paid was $150,000 cash. The land lies along the Tallahatchie river.

The Hinds county grand jury say in their final report: "We have visited the penitentiary, and we say without hesitation that the contrast between its present condition and what we have seen in other years is, indeed, remarkable. The condition of the inmates, the neat and the cleanly appearance of the surroundings, bespeak careful and considerate management."

In the circuit court in Raymond twenty young gentlemen amateurs were arraigned and pleaded guilty to the charge of gambling. In sixteen cases the parties were fined $25 each and costs, and required to give bond in the sum of $250, not to play cards again within two years. In the other six cases the parties were fined $100 each and costs, this because of indictment for a like offense twelve months ago; at which time they promised not to play again within two years.

Considerable interest was manifested by the citizens of our town and vicinity at the school meeting on last Saturday. If one hundred pupils should apply for boarding places in the town, they would be accommodated; enough of our citizens agreeing to take boarders to insure the accommodation of that number. Professor Boyd addressed the meeting in a manner which clearly indicated that he is a "hustler" in the proper meaning of that word. Let everybody go to work to build up a good school in Louisville.—Winston Signal.

Rev. Irvin Miller, in The Dawn of Light, says of Hickory:

I have not seen such improvements in any railroad town, in so short a time, as has been made in Hickory in the last twelve or eighteen months. This, I think, is attributable in a large degree to the flourishing high school they have established there.

The Clarion-Ledger says:

The Monument Association and the Citizens Committee of Arrangements are considering the matter of publishing in pamphlet form a complete report of the unveiling ceremonies, the speeches, incidents, historical sketches, etc. A capital idea. The memory of the whole affair should be preserved in some enduring form. Thousands who witnessed the unveiling would be glad to get a copy, and it might be so distributed at the actual cost of publication.

Capt. Pugh, a capitalist of Yazoo City, was in our town during the week, prospecting with a view of establishing a brick plant. He was shown over the city and expressed himself as being much pleased at the outlook. The Captain was given every encouragement by our people. We hope he will locate his plant here, as an enterprise of that kind is much needed, and we feel confident will redound to the advantage both of the projector and the city.—Water Valley Progress.

The Conference or Bishop.

For the convenience of the Bishops in annual session, the facts and arguments hearing on the trial at the last session of the Tennessee Conference were printed in a pamphlet. The question of their further publication was left in abeyance at the time. First, the importance of the principles involved, separate from all personal relations. Second, a number of our papers, in the absence of the facts, have, since the decision of the Bishops, declared that the Conference had not the wisdom or courage to demand its rights. The facts of the pamphlet are the proper defense of the Conference. Orders will be received by Hunter and Welburn, Nashville, Tenn. Price, twenty-five cents. Proceeds to go to the fund for the education of daughters of itinerant preachers. D. C. KELLEY.

Rev. A. B. Nicholson.

Seeing a notice of the distress that has befallen Bro. Nicholson on account of his protracted illness, it has come into my heart to make a proposition. Bro. Nicholson's ministry has been very fruitful. Many persons have been converted under his preaching. Some of these are in the ministry and some are doing well in secular pursuits. I have a distinct and pleasant recollection of a meeting at Pine Grove, Pike county, Miss., in June, 1855, held by Rev. Geo. D. Wade and Rev. A. B. Nicholson, in which there were many conversions. It was on Bro. Wade's circuit, and, Bro. Nicholson being a visiting minister, did the most of the preaching. My proposition is this: Let each person who has been converted under Bro. Nicholson's ministry now send him a contribution of $1, or more.

FOR THE TOILET

There is no more useful or elegant article than Ayer's Hair Vigor—the most popular and economical hair-dressing in the market. It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. E. Pitts-ton, Me., writes: "I Ask For Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair."

THE LAST DAYS!

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 25 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.

This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., Editor.

Thursday, July 2, 1891.

Briefs.

The Congregationalists in this country have 4,823 churches; 4,619 ministers; 560,082 members; 611,850 Sunday-school scholars; 2,560 young people's societies; give for benevolent purposes, $2,267,386; for home expenditures, $6,079,348.

The principal foreign missionary societies of Great Britain have 2,167 male and 798 female missionaries, with 24,517 native helpers and 348,081 communicants. Those of the United States have 1,054 male and 1,296 female missionaries, with 10,020 native helpers and 236,187 communicants. The British societies have an income of $5,150,373, and the American societies have $3,977,701. In all there are 7,407 mission stations.

A novel plan for extinguishing a church debt has been hit upon in Melbourne. The church committee—or vestry, as the case may be—divide the total debt among themselves and each man insures his life for the amount that falls to his share. The policies are transferred to the church, and the annual payments on them are made out of the collections. Then, of course, as the members of the committee "drop off," the sums insured on their lives drop in, and later, when the last committeman is dead, the last installment of the church debt will be paid. The plan has the merit—if merit it be—of throwing the whole of the responsibility for the continuance of the indebtedness upon Providence.

From what we read in our exchanges, we judge that the great Methodist University in Washington City will be a success. The city has raised $100,000 for the land, and already over $30,000 is in hand for endowment, and already five wills have been made in its favor. We are a little shaky on the "will" money. Very few people can will away their money these days. There is always some little twig or pebble that turns the stream of benevolence out of the channel intended by the testator. We are glad the university at Washington City has such fair prospects. Meanwhile we are still expecting to hear that some brother or sister has donated $100,000 to Centenary College.

We must all of us thank Archbishop Ireland for a late pastoral order given to his diocese against lotteries. He says:

> We do now prohibit the raising of money for religious or charitable purposes by the sale of chances, the use of wheels of fortune, or by any method savoring of lottery or gambling.

Ex occidente lux. This is the first order of the sort in the Catholic Church that we happen to remember since the very first papal bull, if we may call it so, that has come down from the earliest centuries and which was Adversus Aleatores. So the circle is rounded from Victor, if we remember aright, to John Ireland. We have always regretted that in the Acts of the Baltimore Council there was no word against gambling. Now we may have some hope that a similar order may by and by be issued in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, where it is especially called for.

The above is from the Independent, of June 25. The moral sentiment of the world is crystallizing against lotteries, and Louisiana can't stand against the moral sentiment of the world. The fact that the anti-Lottery people in Louisiana have the sympathy and moral support of all the outside world, should spring every man and woman and child in Louisiana to go into the Lottery fight determined to win.

Shreveport District Conference.

This body of ministers and laymen convened, June 18, in Grand Cane, La. This is a pleasant little town on the Texas Pacific railroad, about one hour's ride from Shreveport. Though small, it contains three neat churches representing Methodist, Baptist and Cumberland Presbyterian faith, showing the religious tendencies of the people. It is a town built up by the passage of the railroad a few years ago, and seems already not only to have obtained its majority, but its completed growth. There don't seem to be anything now for it to do but to simply stay where it is and as it is.

This Conference is presided over by Rev. R. J. Harp, one of our oldest ministers, but one of our newest presiding elders, who opened the sessions with appropriate religious services. The venerable elder held the reins and controlled the business with the ease and grace of a veteran in the service. There was a good attendance of ministers and delegates; all the preachers being present except one, and almost every charge being represented by some of its appointed laymen.

Just here we record this fact which we desire some of the laymen who read this paper to ponder. Why is it that some of the most prominent men in the church do not attend our District Conferences? We have attended several sessions of this Conference, and we have never yet seen in it some of those men who are most prominent at home. These are the very men we want in the councils of the church. We meet to confer about the interests of the church in the district, and these men ought to be in that Conference. The church needs their wisdom, and they are under obligation to give it, and yet never do. These men are not doing their duty and ought to be ashamed of themselves and repent. When the final account is made up, and it is shown that these men were so busy with their own affairs that they would not take time to attend to the business of the Lord's kingdom, they will then see, but too late, how foolish they were. This applies not only to the Shreveport district, but to many other districts.

The presiding elder was very careful and minute in his examination into the affairs of the district, and the pastors and delegates did not shrink from declaring fully the condition of things on their respective works. The consequence was that when the examinations in that direction were finished, all who listened had an intelligent and comprehensive view of the real state of the church. Sitting quietly by and hearing the representations of each circuit and station, we judge that the spiritual condition of the district is in advance of what it was one year ago—that is, taking the average. There seemed to be several charges where progress could not be discerned, but in the greater number there has been improvement, and that raises the general average. Many successful revival meetings have been held, very many prayer meetings are in growing condition, and the Sunday-school work is thriving. The financial condition seemed to be not much, if any, improved over last year. There does not appear to be any general system of finance. The thing in many places appears to have been left to run itself, and the consequence is, it don't run very fast. We are sorry that our people, who are successful in their private business, seem to care so little about the success of church finance. We are satisfied that there must be, not only a change in this matter, but a thorough revolution, before the church will be able to march triumphantly to the conquest of the world.

In this district there has been some development in the spirit of building houses of worship for the Lord and houses of residence for the preachers. Several new churches have been erected, and repairs and renewings made upon parsonages and churches. The Conference inaugurated the work of securing a district parsonage at Mansfield, and we trust the brethren will not let the matter rest until a good, comfortable house shall be secured for the shelter for that most important man on the district, the presiding elder.

The report of the district secretary of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference was made by Mrs. R. J. Harp. This report revealed the fact that for the year past there has been a falling off in membership and contributions! Why is this? Ought not the missionary spirit to grow continuously and the contributions to swell with every collection? It seems so, and yet at the present time there seems to be all through the Christian church a general lull in missionary operations! Mrs. Harp's report said that among over 9,000 women in our church in Louisiana, only 876 were members of the Woman's Missionary Societies. What are those other 8,000 doing for the advancement of their Lord's kingdom? What are you doing, sister.

The Conference, by a rising vote, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That, as a body of Christian ministers and laymen, representing the sentiments of the vast majority of the people composing the various churches of the Shreveport District Conference, we do hereby call upon all lovers of purity and virtue to use every effort against rechartering the Louisiana State Lottery by the suffrages of the people of the State.

Dr. A. D. McVoy represented that Mansfield Female College had done excellent work during the past session, and that the outlook for the future is hopeful. This college is the only female school owned by the Louisiana Conference, and is deserving of the patronage of Louisiana Methodism.

The following laymen were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: H. L. McLane, Rev. J. M. Nelson, W. Clark, T. J. Porter. A. F. Jackson and W. T. Hopkins were elected alternates.

The Conference made provision by report of a special committee for holding a District Sunday-school Convention some later in year. Coushatta was chosen as the next place of meeting.

After some appropriate remarks by the presiding elder, the Conference adjourned sine die. It was a good session, and the results will be seen in the future. The editor greatly enjoyed the visit to old friends, and gladly renewed the associations of former years.

The Anti-Lottery Meeting.

The first public meeting of the anti-Lottery campaign was held in the Grand Opera House, in this city, last Thursday evening, under the auspices of the Anti-Lottery League. The great auditorium was packed with as intelligent an audience as we have ever seen. The platform was filled with men eminent in all the walks of life. We noticed thereon judges, lawyers, physicians, teachers, merchants, bankers and preachers. A large part of the large audience was composed of ladies, and several noticed that young men were very conspicuous. President Johnston, of Tulane, was chosen president of the meeting and introduced the exercises with a few appropriate remarks. Dr. B. M. Palmer, the eminent Presbyterian divine, was the first speaker, and for forty minutes he held the great multitude in rapt attention with his remorseless logic and resistless eloquence. At the conclusion of some of his grand periods, the crowd would spontaneously burst forth in rapturous applause. When he concluded one of his scathing denunciations with the solemn sentence, "If we can not get rid of the Lottery by the forms of law, we will rid ourselves of it by revolution," men and women seemed to go wild; the women waving their handkerchiefs and the men raising the old "rebel yell." For a few minutes the scene beggared all description, and it convinced all present that the opposers of the Lottery are in dead earnest in their opposition to this iniquitous concern. Never did any corporation receive so merciless a drubbing as Dr. Palmer gave the Lottery. We will give Dr. Palmer's speech next week.

The next speaker was Hon. D. Caffrey, of St. Mary, who spoke effectively, and he was succeeded by Col. Stone, of East Feliciana. This gentleman showed great familiarity with the history of lotteries in Louisiana, showing how and when they had been put out of existence and kept out until the "reconstruction period." Col. Stone held his audience well in hand from the beginning to the close of his speech and was frequently applauded uproariously. His arraignment of a subsidized press was simply terrific.

This first public meeting was a great success. New Orleans has started the campaign with high hope. Let our brethren in the country catch up the slogan, and in every nook and corner, in every hamlet and village, on every hill and in every dale rally the clans. It is simply victory or extinction of statehood. It is manhood or serfdom. Now is the time for every man and woman to stand up bravely for the right.

Colportage in North Mississippi.

The work of colportage is advancing in the North Mississippi Conference. "More books, church papers and Sunday-school literature have been put in circulation than during the corresponding period of any previous year since our colportage work began." So writes Rev. G. W. Bachman, our efficient general colporter, in the ADVOCATE. Bro. Bachman is well qualified and suited to this important work. With a large experience, he brings to bear energy, industry and intelligence in the prosecution of his difficult mission. It is gratifying to know that the work prospers and grows under his labors. An increasing number of persons buy and read our books and papers. A reading church will become an intelligent church, and an intelligence promotes strength and prosperity.

Bro. Bachman keeps on hand a good supply of Bibles, hymn books, Disciplines and other standard and new books. He spends much time in the field and combines in himself both colporter and itinerating depository. He has the confidence of the Publishing House, and can supply, on short notice, orders for books on the same terms at which they can be had directly from the Publishing House.

That was a good suggestion, in regard to a "helping fund," made by Bro. Bachman, in late numbers of some of our Advocates. The colporter meets with many people in his travels who would like to read good books and religious papers, but are too poor to buy the books or subscribe for the papers. A helping fund—say, fifty dollars annually—placed in the hands of Bro. Bachman for this class of people, would be faithfully applied and would accomplish a mission of great good. Who will help? Are there not fifty or a hundred friends of the cause in North Mississippi who will give each one dollar to start a helping fund. I am willing to be one of the number.

Brethren wishing to order the books of our Publishing House can write to Rev. G. W. Bachman, general colporter, at Kosciusko, Miss. (I follow the Discipline in the orthography of the word "colporter.")

Pres't Colportage Board.

The Endowment of Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing your timely suggestion in last week's ADVOCATE, that some one should give one hundred thousand dollars for the endowment of Centenary College, I send you the following invitation to those so disposed to do something of that sort. It was adopted by the Board of Trustees of the college at their recent annual meeting.

They say: In order that Centenary College may be placed upon a more stable foundation, and that all its appliances for education may be elevated and enlarged, we, the trustees thereof, urge its friends everywhere to continue to subscribe interest-bearing and installment notes for its endowment, as heretofore.

We also recommend the endowment of board and tuition scholarships with $2,500 each, and of tuition scholarships with $1,000 each.

But in order that the ends desired may be more speedily and effectually reached, we especially invite any who are able to endow professorships with not less than $20,000 each, the same to bear the names of the donors, if desired, or of any other person whose memory they would perpetuate and honor.

To this end we invite correspondence with reference to the endowment of any one of the following or other professorships: 1. Theology and Biblical Literature. 2. Ancient Languages. 3. Physics and Astronomy. 4. Mathematics. 5. English Language and Literature. 6. History and Political Economy.

Now, Mr. Editor, here is an opportunity for some to do lasting good, or to erect monuments for themselves or their loved ones more enduring and far more useful and honorable than pyramids of bronze or stone could ever be.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

Free Scholarships for Young Ministers at Vanderbilt University.

There are twenty-three free scholarships of $100 each in the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University, open to A. B. graduates of Southern colleges and universities who are preparing for the ministry of the M. E. Church, South. These scholarships were held the past session by graduates of Randolph-Macon College, Emory and Henry, Trinity, Wofford, Emory, Southern University, Centenary, Southwestern University, Hendrix, Central (Mo.), Kentucky Wesleyan, and the Academic Department of the Vanderbilt. They are sufficient to meet the cost of board in Wesley Hall and the entrance fee of the University. Tuition and room rent are free. These scholarships are distributed among the graduates of the various Southern colleges and universities, and are awarded to the most meritorious applicants. Those desiring scholarships for next session should make early application to Dr. W. F. Tillett, Dean of the Biblical Department, Nashville, Tenn.

J. B. Colgate, of New York, has given $1,000,000 for the endowment of Colgate College, Hamilton, New York. And we are still waiting to hear from the man or woman who will give $100,000 to Centenary. See Dr. Hunnicutt's article on this page.

Notes.

A writer in the Evangelist says he has been using the petition in the Lord's Prayer thus: "Lead us away from temptation." Now he wants to know if he is a heretic?

Dr. Garland has resigned as chancellor of Vanderbilt University. Dr. Garland has served the church and educator with distinguished ability and signal success, and his retirement is cause for regret.

The papers report that General Booth is carrying his "colony" scheme into practice. He has bought for £10,000 the Hadleigh farms near Southend, England, and these are to be the nucleus of his home colony.

Something is going to happen soon, we think, because the devil was never more on the rampage than he is now. He sees that his day is coming. He is not the hosts of Israel he illudes with his pranolngs nor frightened by their bellowings!

By studying the statistics of the different churches in New York City, Dr. Shauffler brings to the attention the fact that since 1872 those churches which have more than one pastor the increase in membership much less than those which have only one. This is a fact for church authorities to think about!

We see it stated that the trustees of Mississippi College (Baptist), located at Clinton, Miss., have abolished the tuition fees, and in place of tuition each student shall pay a matriculation fee of $25. If the managers of schools don't be careful, the idea of cheap or free tuition will work great harm to the schools.

This country supports 215,000 saloons at an expense of $1,484,000,000, and 164,000 schools at an expense of $[illegible] 000,000. The value of food products is estimated at $600,000,000, and the cost of all the clothing at $400,000,000. So that we pay more for the saloons than for food and clothing and education all put together! What a people we are, to be sure!

The Times-Democrat devoted three seven lines in an obscure corner of the issue of June 26 to one of the largest and most intelligent and most enthusiastic gatherings we have ever seen in this city. In those twenty-seven lines there were several willful misrepresentations! Why is this? Because the meeting was a rousing anti-Lottery meeting and a complete success.

We think our brethren of the ministry, almost all, violate the Bible rule on worldly conformity. The almost universal practice among our ministers of wearing a mustache only evidences violates that rule, for the fashion does not originate in the church. At any rate, the fashion is so universal that it is monotonous, and we would hail with delighted eye a change. The idea of ministers clinging so rigidly to this worldly fashion and then preaching against worldly conformity! My!

According to the way ordinary mortals think, the creed of the newly formed Presbyterian Church greatly needs revising. The Pittsburg Presbytery some months ago tried and suspended five young ministers for preaching against the rule prohibiting ministers from voting at a civil election. The case was appealed to the Synod, and that body sustained the Presbytery and affirmed the sentence. If Christian people in this land are debarred the suffrage by the creed or their churches, then good-by to everything worth having in politics and civil matters. The Covenanters should revise that law out of their polity.

"Somebody has blundered." The secular papers have given very full accounts of all the commencement exercises of all the schools in Mississippi and Louisiana excepting Centenary and Mansfield Female College. Not a line in regard to the closing exercises of these two schools has appeared in any secular paper. We know that the papers are always ready to publish news of this kind, and, therefore, conclude that no arrangements were made by the college authorities to have reports of their commencements. If this conclusion is correct, we ask, in the name of the church, why the authorities of these institutions should ignore such an opportunity for advertising their schools!

During a recent trip—no matter where—we heard of a good brother who, at the first quarterly meeting paid the presiding elder $5, and said that he would pay as much for the same purpose at each quarterly meeting. Before the second quarterly meeting he learned that the presiding elder used tobacco, and the brother thereupon refused to give any more. We hope he will be consistent and not go to hear the elder preach or sit with him in Quarterly Conference. To hear him preach without paying him might be dishonest, and it is better to be on the safe side of the honesty question. To sit with him in Quarterly Conference might be God-speeding him in his wicked habits. So we hope the good brother will bravely maintain consistency that is consistent!

Personal and Otherwise.

Our brothren have filled our "hopper" with splendid artieles; hut, as a matter of course, some of them will have to wsit. They are well salted, however, and will keep. Thank you, brethren.

Presideet Fitzhugh gave us a call last week. He is now enjoying a well-earned vacation.

Rev. Andrew Hunter, the Nestor of Arksesas Methodism, will spend the summer at Wellsville, Penn.

Bishop Haygood has gone to the Pscific Coast to make his home. He passed through Nashville, June 22.

Randolph-Macon College conferred the degree of D.D. upon our missionary to Japan, Rev. W. R. Lambuth.

Wofford College turned out amoeg its graduates this year seven young men who expect to go into the ministry.

Don't fret, hrother, if you seem not to get your due! Oue of the hest editorials this pen ever wrote was attributed to another man.

The Board of Missions request all our pastors to read the "Appeal" of our Bishops to every congregation. You will fied it on the first page.

A case of yellow fever is reported at Chandeleur Islands; but as that is some distance away, and the quarantine officers watchful, no danger is apprehended.

Bro. T. W. Dye, of Water Valley, writes: "Our churoh work is on the up grade. Methodism leads here." And Bro. Dye "leads" Methodism in the Valley city.

A New Orleans girl—Miss Evans, daughter of Judge W. L. Evans—received from the Institute of Notre Dame, Baltimore, the gold medal for domestic economy—specially for cooking.

Bishop Key says:

Bretbren, let us come to realizo that such expressions as "for God's sake," "in the name of God," "hy the help of God," should be usod sparingly, prudently, reverently.

We regret to learn that Dr. J. J. Wheat, of the North Mississippi Conferenee, still continues feehle. Dr. Wheat is one of the graudest preachers in the Southern Church, and it appears like a calamity that his eloquent voico should be silent.

Rev. John Pipes was in attendance at the Shreveport District Conference. Though quite feehle, his health has somowhat improved of late. It is a benediction to associate with such a man, and we count it one of our cherished honors to enjoy his special friendship.

In a communication to the Southern Christian Advocate, of last week, Rev. S. S. Keener wrote: "Dr. Carter says, 'Every man who is transferred is transferred for a certain place and sent to it.'" Will Bro. Keener please point us to the column where that sectence is?

The new church at Mount Pleasant, Columbus circuit, was dedicated, June 21, by Dr. Sullivan, presiding elder of the Columhus district. This is the second churoh that has heon hullt on this work dnring the pastorate of Rev. F. P. Spencer, and a third one is in course of oonstruotion.

The Marietta Journal, Georgia, has this of a former member of the Louisiana Conference:

The Marietta Methodist Church has had some grand and ahle preachers in time, but not in the memory of the writer has that church had an ahler, more learned, purer, consecrated Christian minister than Rev. Joel T. Daves, Sr.

Revival at Enterprise.

Oe June 11, Bro. John Boring, of the Holston Conferonco, hegan a series of serviees at Enterprise. He was ahly seconded hy Prof. L. R. Gilreath, who led the singing to the great delight of the large audienees, who daily assembled to hear and to heed the gospel message.

Bro. Boring is a olear and simple expositor of the Word. He makes no statement whioh he does not sustain hy a "thus saith the Lord." He emphasizes the message in suoh a natural way that, notwithstanding our scattered population and daily rains, our congregations averaged 200 out of a total white population of 400. On the last Sueday the orowds equaled those that waited on the ministry of our heloved Bishop Galloway during the session of our District Conference last year.

Tho result of the meeting is apparent. Old quarrels wero settled, old debts were set right, old sinners in aod out of the ohuroh were oonvioted aed converted, and the power of the Holy Ghost rested on the congregation.

Any community oould not hut be better for the coming of these two brethren. I feel stronger, and the 103rd Psalm suits my experience.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS, P. C.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

The recent commencement of this very worthy iestitution was above the average of such occasions. The work done in all departmenis—from the preparatory up to the senior grade—was first class. President Newell has certainly been fortueate in the character of his teachers. Their praise was heard on every haed. It has, perhaps, been the most pleasant and profitable session in the hisiory of the institute. The health record is, douhtless, as good, if not hetter, than any of the schools in higher lalitudes can show. The college family numhered about fifty, aed the amount of drug bill for the term was only seven dollars and fifty cents. You can't beat that out of North Mississippi. It is pleasant to note the growing favor of the institute and its worthy president with the people of Grenada. The recent generous coetribution of two thousand dollars hy these good people to the school fund was a token of their high appreciation of President Newell and the iestitution over which he so worthily presides.

The commencement sermon of Rev. J. D. Cameron, D. D., was listened to hy a large and appreciative audience. Tho good Doctor was at his hest on this occasion. His statements were clear and his illustration of the subject was unique and highly suggestive. Tho absence of the Rev. S. D. Long, who was expected to preach at night, was a source of much regret to all.

Monday was alumnæ reunion, and the musical and literary entertainment furnished hy the cultured alumnæ was a rare treat. These ladies are earnest students to-day. They are an honor to their alma mater. A helated train failed to put Dr. Sims, of the State University, in his place on the programme of the day. This was keenly felt as a positive loss to us, for who misses Dr. Sims' oration loses a masterpiece. The evening of this day was given to the young folks. Tho concert given by them was enjoyable to the last degree. Much attention is shown the little people in this institution. This is right, and it is wise.

Tuesday, the sixteenth, was the great day of the feast. Seven young ladies sat upon the rostrum as graduates. The essays were well prepared and well read. Miss Adie Eason, Miss Susie Davis and Miss Carrie Boyd, from the regular course, and Miss Lula King, Miss Jimmie Grantham, Miss Lida Coffman and Annie Williams, from the school of English literature, had, with high honor, completed tho curriculum of study, and now go out to meet life's issues with an efficient equipment. A crowded audience gathered in the spacious college chapel to greet these fair young women and hid them God-speed in their chosen life-work. After the graduating class had finished their reading, President Newell introduced Dr. Alonzo Monk, of Memphis, Tenn., who charmed and captivated his audience hy the eloquence of speech. What a master of assemhlies the eloquent Doctor is! That speech will hear fruit. The subject of the distinguished speaker was: "Food for Thought." He put them to thinking. After the anuual address of Dr. Mouk was finished, the president, in a tender, graceful speech, presented the diplomas to the class of '91.

The annual concert, Tuesday night, was, despite the rain, an affair deserving the many compliments hestowed. There was not a dry, thread-hare piece on the programme. All honor to the makers and executers of that Tuesday night programme! All were delighted, and Newell said he was happy. Tho musical department, under the direction of the gifted Miss Evans, is equal to the hest in all this land. So say the critics. The art department, under Miss Sallie G. Storks, is simply superh. Miss Storks' pupils in art had their work on exhihition in the auditorium. The grouping was pleasing to the eye of even the uninitiated. Mrs. Payne had her department—the primary—up to a high degree of perfeotion. Much praise was given Misses Burges and Courtney in their several departments.

Much more might he said; hut we desist. Send to Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., for a catalogue of the Grenada Collegiate Institute, the property of the North Mississippi Conference.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. Hervie Mellard, Ponchatoula, writes: "Our meeting at Springfield was very iespiring. The churoh was greatly stirred and much spiritual strength is attaieed. We had four accessions. Bro. W. P. Meador, of Port Vincent, aided us. Quarterly Conference on Thursday, and Bro. McDonald preached two telling sermons, at eleven A. M. and half-past seven P. M."

—Prof. Ricketts writes from Brookhaven: "I wish the paper was illustraled. I should so like to send you a picture of Bro. Woodward sitting under the shade of his pecan trees admiring our pretty district parsonage. It is a sight worth seeing. By the way, he says it is the neatest and most comfortable parsonage he has ever occupied, and his is a large experience of the hest."

—Rev. J. A. Bowen, Aberdeen, Miss., writes: "Last Sueday, at eleven A. M., one of Bishop Paine's grandsons, Bro. W. D. Wendel, preached his first sermon in Aberdeen, and the second one in his life. It was a powerful effort for a young man. The house was full, and we had a time of rejoicing! Sister Mary Goodalo, of Baton Rouge, La., delighted our people last night with her temperance talk. This charge grows, and we rejoice."

—Rev. J. W. Treadwell writes from Wagoner, I. T.: "We have had forty-eight accessions this Conference year. Class meetings and Sunday-schools are well attended. Have four organized societies, with a membership of eighty-one. Our Conference assessments are behind only six dollars and seventy-five cents, which will be paid hy the first of July. Many features of our work are encouraging. Our parsonage is only in debt ten dollars, and subscriptions sufficient to pay that. Crops are fine. Our town is growing rapidly."

—Rev. J. C. Ellis writes from Raymond, Miss.: "We feel like shouting 'hallelujah.' Still the dancers are saying, 'I am done.' Strife, haokhiting, malice-holding, etc., are now heing put aside, and peace and unity heginning to dawn. One of our churches, Forest Hill, has recently had some needed repairs. At that place we left happy again yesterday, where we had a glorious meeting the fifth Sunday in May, when we were blessed with a large congregation, with a goodly number shouting praises to God. Other repairs are needed on the work which I believe and pray will he done this year. We begin our first protracted meeting at Forest Hill the third Sunday in July. Continue to pray for us."

—Rev. John A. Miller writes of the Opelousas district as follows: "I have finished up my second round of quarterly meetings, which have heen very interesting and, I trust, profitahle. At least, I have been much encouraged. We have had good attendance, with increased interest on the part of the official members. Our religious services were spiritual and profitahle. Several of the pastors have held protracted meetings with good results. The particulars as to the success I have not received; yet I am sure there will he a large increase of conversions and accessions reported from this district over last year. All the preachers are nohly hattling for the conquest of this portion of the moral vineyard for Christ. Bro. and Sister Blocker were called to Mansfield to the hedside of their sick daughter, who has been attending school there. Hope they will soon return with her restored to health. The prospects for Methodism in Southwest Louisiana were never brighter than at this time; yet it will require muoh hard work, prayer and faith to gain the victory."

—Rev. Wm. G. Evans, Simsport, La., writes: "My second Quarterly Conference was held yesterday and to-day at Riverside, and I wish some of our city Methodists could have been with us. It was truly a feast of fat things. Saturday morning Bro. Hoffpauir gave us an excellent sermon, and then held the Quarterly Conference for us, which showed a very healthy state of things. The reprcsentation from the other churches on the work was not here, hut it was their loss. Our presiding older was paid up in full to date. The services to-day were very enjoyable; Bro. Hoffpauir giving us two charaoteristic sermons, and anyone who has heard him knows what wo enjoyed. There was much meat in them. While the spiritual man was boing fed on suoh good things the temporal man was not forgotten hy tho good people of Riverside. They had provided more than hountifully for the hasket dinner; and suoh a provision! Oh! the good things. The table was hent honeath tho woight of them. The quantity and quality hoth were of the hest order. Evory one was charmed with our presiding elder, and are even at this early date asking for the fourth Quarterly Conferonoe."

All the essays of the graduates indicated thought, careful reading, much study and general information.

The Problem of Business.

It matters not what that product may he. With the manufacturer it is the article he makes—furniture, pianos, china, lamps and bric-a-brac; boats, machinery, personal apparel, food products, soaps, cosmetics and a thousand-and-one other things of necessity, luxury and pleasure; with the merchant it is goods, wares and merchandise; with the lawyer and doctor it is advice; with the schoolmaster experience and knowledge on tap, as it were, and with the editor, clergyman and author it is ability, perceptions, ideas, brains; while with the artisan it is the art of knowing how, and with the laborer, labor. These are all their products or stock in trade, and life is simply a struggle to sell the same—to exchange for salaries and profits, to convert into solid cash.

To let the people know what you have to sell is advertising. Every man is advertising when he solicits trade or seeks a position. He offers you what he has—his products or his goods—and urges you to buy.

The secret of successful advertising is to so favorably impress the customer that he will come to you. If you were alone in the field this would not be so difficult; your wares would advertise themselves in a measure. But you have thousands of wily competitors. Your products—what you have to sell—may be superior to the stock in trade of many of your rivals; but they have advertised, and they and theirs have the reputation, and they prosper while you languish.—J. F. Place, in Printer's Ink.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

SO LET ME LIVE.

BY HOWARD N. FULLER

So let me live that when I die
My life shall show no blot of shame;
And o'er the grave wherein I lie,
Beneath my plainly graven name,
Upon a low and modest stone
That every eye can quickly scan,
May this be carved, and this alone?
He loved his God and fellow-man.

The Boy Albert.

[A story translated from the Brazilian language.]

In one of the cities of Italy there was a family composed of four persons—father, mother and a couple of children; the girl was called Olympia, and the boy was called Albert. As much as Olympia was gentle and obedient, just so much was Albert proud, obstinate, disobedient, untruthful and bad. In vain his parents sought by softness and persuasion to modify his manner. He was blind to all this; he heard their reprehensions with hateful air, forgot the admonitions of his parents with the rapidity of lightning, and fell again soon into new faults. His greatest pleasure was to take birds' nests, of plucking alive the little birds' wings and afterwards killing them. The house in which lived his parents was situated in the suburbs very distant from the city, and was in the centre of a wood. Albert often went to walk in this wood, in spite of the prohibition of his mother, who feared to see him lead himself astray to the wood. One day he saw a rabbit pass near him, and, having thrown a stone, wounded the rabbit on one leg, and it fell. Albert ran to catch it, but the rabbit, seeing him, raised itself with new strength, and left anew to run. Albert followed it yet, but when he judged that he would put his hand on it, the animal gave three or four leaps, which distanced it from the enemy. Albert felt himself tired, but not wishing to give up his intention, continued to pursue it yet for some time, and thus he arrived at a place in which the wood was so thick that the sun never penetrated there, neither presented sign of a trodden way. It was in this place that the poor rabbit could deliver itself from its persecutor. Albert, losing sight of it, seated himself upon the trunk of a tree which he saw at his feet, took his handkerchief from his pocket, and wiped the perspiration which dropped from his forehead. After resting a little while, he attempted to turn back, but trembled to find himself alone in this place, and then observed it was almost night. In vain he sought to find the way out by which he came there. He had thirst, and saw not a drop of water with which to cool it; he was hungry, and found only one fruit with which he could illude his appetite. In the meanwhile darkness covered everything, and he, losing hopes of finding the way, commenced to weep, crying for aid; but no one heard him, because at that hour no more the laborers passed by the way. Tired of crying, he fell down tired upon the ground. Then he remembered of what his mother had often said to him, that God is in all parts and hears everything. "If I would pray," thought he, "perhaps God will be sorry for me. But now I am unworthy of his pity, because I have been bad."

By these reflections, it is seen that Albert recognized himself faulty and unworthy of directing himself to the all-powerful God, notwithstanding he comprehended that only he could aid him. Bursting afresh into tears, but at the end of a few instants, he decided to make a prayer in these terms: "My God, forgive me every evil that I have done. You are my tender Father, who has pain of this son, who promises never more to offend you." Albert repeated many times this prayer in persuasion that God heard him. This idea went little by little dissipating his fears, and after some instants he felt so tranquil that he slept profoundly, and did not awaken till the following day. Opening his eyes, his first care was to render thanks to God for having kept him during the night; then he attempted to arise, but it was not possible on account of the weakness in which he found himself, for he had not eaten anything since the evening before. "I am lost," thought he. "I will never see my parents who desired so much for me, and of whom now I would ask pardon of the griefs that I have given them." The tears ran afresh from his eyes that appeared transformed into two fountains. Suddenly he heard the voice of a countryman passing along the way and singing a field song. "Help! help!" he cried with all the strength that his weak voice would permit. The rustic stopped and placed himself to look on all sides; only after much time did he see the unhappy child, who, tortured by hunger and fear, appeared to be in the pains of death. He went to the boy, took him in his arms, made him swallow a little of wine which he carried in a flask, and gave him a piece of black bread, which Albert devoured with the opening and shutting of his eyes. The countryman was silent, but the boy, as soon as he felt himself in state of speaking, thanked him in kind terms for what he had done for him.

"You have nothing to thank me for," returned the rustic, "because if I practiced this act of charity, it was on account of knowing that God wishes us to help one another, and for gratitude to your parents, who are good to everybody, but not for love of you, for well you know that I can not sympathize with a child who, with a cobble-stone, prostrated my son in the bed for eight days. Nevertheless, I help you, and will carry you to your home."

Saying this, the countryman took Albert upon his shoulders and went walking along the way. Albert was so ashamed of the evil which he had done to the son of his benefactor that in all the way he did not dare to proffer another word. Yet, well thought he that this man is grateful to my parents, and a good Christian. If he was not so, he would have left me to die in the wood. In future I will not make more evil to anyone; on the contrary, I will do good to all.

In the house of Albert's parents no one had slept during the night, such was the disquietude provoked by the inutility of the endeavors employed to find this boy whom they loved in spite of his evils. Approaching near the house, the countryman called one of the servants and told him to inform his master and mistress that he had brought their son safe and sound. Immediately there appeared the father and mother of Albert, who embraced him, weeping for joy. The first transports of joy being passed, the child thrust himself from their arms to cast himself at their feet, begging pardon for all the sorrow that he had caused his beloved parents.

"And you, Peter," said he, turning to the countryman, "forgive me the evil that I made to your son. I declare that I will correct myself and never more be bad."

"And now, Master Albert," replied the rustic, moved with tenderness; "I forgot the evil that you made to my poor child since I could fulfil a Christian duty to your parents."

Henceforth Albert had no other reprehensions, beyond those that he made himself. He became good like his sister and thanked God for having him to lose his way in the wood, because it was to this fact that he owed his regeneration of spirit and conduct.

HOUSEHOLD.

For Fathers.

So, fond fathers, if you have the least aptitude, learn the delightful art of amusing your child. Your heart will gain its sweetest emotion in the practice, and your mind will exercise its utmost diplomacy and penetration. There is nothing more healthful, more philosophical, and more touching than the society of babies. If the doors are closed, do not for fear of failure hesitate to crow. Answer gently the thousand, more or less, unanswerable questions that the baby asks, the echoes of his endless dreams. And even if he commands you to play "peek-a-boo," and carries his irreverence so far as to pull your beard when he offers you his little red lips, warm with kisses, what is the harm? Good King Henry IV. showed no inability for far-sighted policy when he was his baby's horse. On the other hand, do not fear that these practices will undermine your paternal authority. On the contrary, they will guarantee that great and lasting influence which is born of mutual love. Reverence unites easily with love, friendship and smiles are not an abdication, and obedience is possible even without fear. Must the dear little man fear you if he is afraid to grieve you?

My secret is; play his comrade just enough to be entitled to be his friend. Hide your paternal authority as a chief of police hides his badge. These insignia are only shown on days of rebellion. Ask what you could command, that his inferiority be sweet, and that in his obedience there be much love. Know that children have an accuracy of judgment, a delicacy of feeling, that are not attributed to them except by those who have studied them; know that the principle of equity is at work in them, and that some of those harsh and unjust words which we speak, at times unconsciously, are those which remain ineffaceably graven on their hearts, and which they remember all their lives.—Babyhood.

A Good Memory.

A certain school-girl declares that, do what she will, she can never remember dates.

"Why, I have no idea when America was discovered!" she cried one night at a party. "Was it in 1776? No: that must have been when Washington was born. Tell me, somebody."

"I'll tell you how you can always remember, Mary," said a friend. "Learn this rhyme—

"'In fourteen hundred ninety-two,
Columbus sailed the ocean blue.'"

Mary was delighted, and expressed her confidence that the prescription would never fail. Later in the evening, however, her friend mischievously resolved to test her memory.

"Well, Mary," said she, "I don't believe you can tell when Columbus discovered America."

"Of course I can," returned Mary, promptly, and with some indignation:

"'In fourteen hundred ninety-three Columbus sailed the dark blue sea.'"

ECONOMY IN A FAMILY.—There is nothing which goes so far toward placing young people beyond the reach of poverty as economy in the management of their domestic affairs. It matters not whether a man furnish little or much for his family, if there is a continual leakage in the kitchen or in the parlor. It is the husband's duty to bring into the house, and it is the duty of the wife to see that nothing goes wrongfully out of it—not the least article, however unimportant in itself, for it opens the door for Ruin to stalk in, and he seldom leaves an opportunity unimproved. The husband's interest should be the wife's care, and her greatest ambition should carry her no farther than his welfare or happiness, together with that of her children. This should be her sole aim, and the theater of her exploits in the bosom of her family, where she may do as much toward making a fortune as he can in the counting-room or in the workshop. It is not the money earned that makes a man wealthy—it is what he saves from his earnings. A good and prudent husband makes a deposit of the fruits of his labor with his best friend, and if that friend be not true to him, what has he to hope? If he dare not place confidence in the companion of his bosom, where is he to place it.—Exchange.

SCIENTIFIC.

Practicability of the Flying Machine.

The annual meeting of the National Academy of Sciences began at Washington on April 21, in the National Museum. A number of interesting scientific papers were read. That of Professor S. P. Langley, of Smithsonian Institution, on "Flying Machines," attracted the greatest attention. Professor Langley gave the results of a series of experiments he began about five years ago to ascertain the possibilities of aerial navigation. He said that he set up on the grounds of the Allegheny Observatory a whirling machine with a diameter of sixty feet, and driven by a steam engine of ten or twelve horse power. He first sought to ascertain whether or not it required more power to move laterally than to stand still in the air. For this purpose he had suspended a flat brass plate from the arm of the whirling machine by a spring. When the machine was put in motion and the plate encountered an artificial wind going forty miles an hour, the spring instead of elongating actually shortened, showing that the weight or power required to suspend the plate was less when in motion than when it was standing still. His next series of experiments, Professor Langley said, demonstrated that it took a second or two more for a brass plane to fall four feet while in motion than when it was dropped from the hand without motion, the plane when in motion laterally sinking slowly as if the air had become dense like cream. From his experiments he reached the conclusion that the amount of power required for artificial flight was perfectly attainable by steam engines we now possess. To him the amazing thing demonstrated by the experiments was that the faster you go the less it cost in power, and that a one-horse power will transmit a much heavier weight at a rapid speed than at a slow one.

In summing up, Professor Langley said that he did not say that man could traverse the air, but under certain conditions and with our existing means, so far as the power is concerned, the thing was possible. The difficulties would be in getting started, in coming down to the ground again, and in guiding one's self through the air. Nature had supplied an instructive intelligence in a bird to balance and guide itself. He did not question that man would ultimately acquire it. He thought all aerial navigation would pass out of the sphere of charlatanism and into the hands of engineers in a short time, possibly months instead of years. He believed we would see something notable come from it.—Scientific American.

SANITARY SCIENCE.—Sanitary science, says the Sanitary News, is a science that does not relate to the earth we live on or to the heavens we live under, but to the condition of the homes we live in. We can live on the earth or under the heavens without knowing much about them, but to live best in our homes we must know them well. Geology can not change the conditions of the earth beneath us, or astronomy those of the heavens above us, but sanitary science can change from unhealthy to healthy the conditions of the homes we live in. Is it not, then, a science worthy of study? It touches the highest interests of mankind, cleanses and purifies the present generation, and will strengthen and will glorify posterity. The effects of obedience to its laws are not remote, but immediate. They touch the everyday life of all, and enter into all the relations of life. They give strength and vigor to whatever capacity in which human endeavor is put forth.—Scientific American.

THE INSANE.—The total number of insane persons treated in both public and private institutions during the year 1889, as given in Census Bulletin No. 62, was 97,535, while during the year 1881 there were 56,205 treated, showing an increase in the nine years of 41,330, or 73.53 per cent. This percentage of increase, when compared with the percentage of increase of population in the last decade, namely 24.86, does not indicate an increase in the proportion of insane persons to population, but rather a great increase in the amount of asylum accommodation provided, and a willingness on the part of the public to make full use of all the facilities thus provided. The figures for the actual number of insane in the United States can not be determined until the work of eliminating all duplicate reports of cases has been completed.—Scientific American.

A Life Saved!

READ THE TWO STATEMENTS.

An Extraordinary Case!

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 22, 1890.

Last April I was attacked with Chagres Fever in Spanish Honduras and was given up to die by two physicians. During that spell and since I have used a pound of quinine and quantities of other medicines without any benefit. From three to four days out of every week I have been down and have suffered untold agonies. Between these spells I could scarcely walk more than two blocks at a time. I did not expect to live through the coming winter. Ten days ago I commenced using Mr. King's Royal Germetuer. I have had no fever since. All the symptoms have entirely disappeared. I have no pain or trouble of any kind. Am gaining strength very fast. I can walk miles at a time. My sudden and rapid improvement is simply wonderful. Germetuer has been a God-send to me. I can not say too much in its praise. Any who wish to do so may call on me. DANIEL PAPPON, 481 Jersey Street.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1891.

My improvement continued, and soon after writing the above statement I was able to go to work and have been working ever since. My health is now perfect. I never felt better in my life. I give this testimony gladly, because I know that Germetuer saved my life. DANIEL PAPPON.

Chagres Fever is known to be not only a most dangerous form of sickness, but also very difficult to cure. Germetuer has been tried in a number of cases. In every known instance it has cured quickly and completely. It has a similar record as a remedy for Swamp Fever and Malarial troubles of all kinds. Properly used, it is the quickest and most unfailing remedy for Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Debility, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Dysentery and all diseases of the Blood and Skin.

These claims are sustained by evidences from thousands of the best people in the country, and the evidences multiply in our midst every day.

For sale by druggists and country merchants, and at the Germetuer office, 702 Canal St., New Orleans. For full information, circulars, etc., call on or address Kit Williams, Agent, 702 Canal St. $1 bottle; six bottles for $5.

OBITUARIES.

ATKINS—JOSEPH D. ATKINS was born in Kosholo county, Miss., on Dec. 11, 1851, and died at his home, Knox Point, La., Saturday, May 30, 1891.

He united with the church in his native State under the ministry of Bro. Murff. Some few years after he moved to Louisiana, entered business, and became one of the most successful and prosperous men of the community. On Jan. 22, 1879, he married Miss Ophelia L. Poole, and the wisdom of mutual choice was evinced in the harmony and peace of their home.

La grippe, complicated with congestion of the brain, was the immediate cause of his death. Owing to the nature of the disease, Bro. Atkins was unconscious at the time of his death, and, therefore, unable to give any dying testimony. According to his own confession, he had not been as faithful as was his privilege; yet he was not a stranger to the covenant mercies of God in Christ. For two generations his family were staunch and faithful Methodists, and he loved the church of his fathers and her ministry with a deep, abounding love. He was deeply interested in the recent religious awakening among our people, and in his quick, unostentatious way, gave his influence for Christ and the church.

Tender and sympathetic, he was ever ready to assist his fellowman, and gave proof of his beneficence in deeds. Of a genial, sunny temperament, those who knew him well miss the kindly glance and bright smile. He was called away in the maturity and prime of life. Above the unscrutable mystery of it all, we can only write, "God knows best." Only in the light of the hereafter can the "Why it was?" be answered. May the God of all consolation be with his desolate wife and bereaved kindred!

S. J. DAVIES.

SMITH—Mrs. SARAH ANN SMITH (nee Cornelius) was born March 10, 1822, in Lawrence county, Ala.; professed religion, at fourteen years of age, under the ministry of Rev. L. D. Mullins. After her conversion she became dissatisfied, but did not despair. She went to the woods and wrestled in prayer till she received such a Pentecost from the Lord that she never doubted again the genuineness of her conversion. She joined the M. E. Church, South, and lived in it for more than fifty-three years. In 1838 her parents came to Mississippi, and settled near the present town of Corinth. She was one of the charter members of the old Farmington Church, now Boaz' Chapel. She was married, April 15, 1846, to W. H. Smith, by whom she had three children—two daughters and one son, the Rev. Ira W. Smith.

The writer was her pastor for four years, and can say, "She was indeed a mother in Israel." She was devoted to her church and pastor. It was her heart's delight to care for the preachers. She visited the sick, and administered to their needs and comforts, and helped the poor and needy at every call.

She was sick many months, and a great sufferer. She said to her pastor on his first visit, "I am not afraid to die." She died in peace. Another good woman has gone to rest. Her husband and children all survive her, and nearly all of her grandchildren. We say to the bereaved: "Your loss is her gain. She has passed over the river to await your coming."

BOND—JOHN W. BOND, born and reared among the pine-clad hills of Washington parish, La., fell on sleep, Tuesday, April 7, 1891, near Franklinton, his native home. In 1881 he was happily married to Mrs. Lucinda M. Bulloch, who again is left alone, but with the sweet assurance that his weary soul is enjoying the pleasures of that blessed home beyond, where God is gathering his children in, "one by one."

Bro. Bond, in the bloom of manhood, became a victim of disease, and suffered intensely, but patiently; always saying, "God's will be done, and not mine." Thus his pilgrim-journey of twoscore years is marked by many kind and useful deeds; being engaged selling and distributing religious books for the M. E. Church, South—his last earthly work.

May God bless the bereaved wife and friends, and help them to live to meet him where the faithful forever dwell!

W. P. FUSSELL.

WELCH—Sister CAROLINE WELCH (nee Bulloch) passed from this life to rest, Nov. 29, 1890. She was born in Georgia, 1815, and in her early childhood moved with her parents to Washington parish, La., where she married and lived until 1888 with her aged husband (Jas. D. Welch), who preceded her some six months to eternal glory. She went to live with one of her sons near Centerville, Miss., where her remains now lie at rest.

She early gave her heart to God; and a brighter Christian I never knew. Though much of her life deprived of church privileges, she still held sweet communion with God in her heart. Her greatest desire seemed to be to use the talent God had given her, and, by the counsel of her pure life, help others up to a higher plane of Christian living.

May the tide of her godly influence ever live and be the golden chord, drawing her four bereaved children and many friends nearer to Christ and heaven!

W. P. FUSSELL.

SCOTT—Died in Natchez, Miss., May 29, 1891, LENA, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Zach W. Scott, aged thirteen years.

Lena was a member of the Methodist Sunday-school, beloved by her companions. We miss thee, Lena. The angel of death has plucked a flower from the garden of our heart; transplanted to bloom an immortal flower in heaven; gone to sing songs of praise around the throne of God. Weep not, mother. We shall meet again.

LAURA.

JOHNSON—Mrs. MATILDA JOHNSON was born in Rankin county, Miss., May 21, 1831, and died in Hattiesburg, Miss., May 31, 1891. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church more than forty years ago. She was married to Bro. Wm. Johnson in the year 1861. In every respect she was all that could be expected of a good and faithful companion.

Her Christian life was steady and beautiful. Christian principles were manifest in all that she did. The great aim of her life was to relieve the suffering and to minister comfort to the sorrowful. She was a useful and a working Christian. Her heart's desire was to minister to the wants of humanity. She was beloved by all who knew her; in fact, those who knew her best were her warmest and most ardent admirers. The last year of her life she was a great sufferer; but she was cheerful and happy in spirit. She bore her sufferings with Christian courage and fortitude. As her physical frame grew weaker from long sickness, her faith grew stronger. She often repeated the words of Paul: "I have a desire to depart and be with the Lord." When at last the cords of the frail tabernacle broke, and it fell to dust again, the spirit, grown to the full likeness of its Lord, swept its way on wings of love to its abode in heaven. May her presence there draw the loved ones she has left behind her here!

J. S. PARKER.

GOZA—Miss MARY CAROLINE GOZA, daughter of Joseph B. and Mary E. Goza, was born in Copiah county, Miss., July 25, 1879, and died of hemorrhage of the nose, or head, April 1, 1891, being at the time of her death eleven years eight months and six days old.

Carrie (as she was called) was a good, obedient child and a loving and devoted sister, and was, therefore, a great favorite in the family, and loved and esteemed by those who knew her. She had not joined the church, but, no doubt, she was prepared to go, as she expressed a desire to join the church, and said she was going to seek religion or was going to serve God, and also expressed a willingness to trust God for salvation; so we should not weep as those who have no hope, for I believe she is now in a far better world than this; and though we can see her no more in this world, she will, doubtless, be at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for the loved ones left behind.

It was a great loss and very sad bereavement to Bro. and Sister Goza and family, as she was the only daughter except a very small one. May God abundantly bless and sustain our dear brother and sister, and help them to so live and train the rest of their children that they may finally meet Carrie where parting will be no more! Is the prayer of their pastor,

A. D. MILLER.

SHAMBLIN—Mrs. EMILY L. SHAMBLIN (nee Quesenberry) was born in Natchitoches parish on May 27, 1851; married J. W. Shamblin in Franklin parish in 1866, and died at her home in Winnsboro, La., on May 1, 1891. She joined the Methodist Church when in the twelfth year of her age, but was deprived of church privileges for several years, and in 1885 she again connected herself with the church.

Sister Shamblin lived a consistent, upright Christian life. She "feared God and wrought righteousness" at all times. Her Christian growth was steady and uniform, and her Christian character "without stain or blot, or any such thing." She looked upon the bright side of every phase of life, and by her cheerful spirit and hopeful disposition dissipated the gloom from others. She loved her church and all its ordinances. She leaves her husband, four children and one motherless grandchild behind, while she goes to meet her daughter on the other shore and join those "who have come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Husband, children, follow the example and heed the precepts of the departed wife and mother, and you will by and by compose an unbroken family in "the bright world above."

A. W. MOORE.

COMPTON—HORACE LEE COMPTON was born Aug. 2, 1882; died May 29, 1891.

He left his mother in company with his father, Green L. Compton, to go to the sawmill, and in two hours his lifeless body was brought and laid before his agonized mother. While playing on the logs which were to be sawed, one of them rolled on him and broke his neck, crushing him and killing him instantly. Although so young, he loved to attend church and Sabbath-school, and gave many evidences of loving his Savior.

To his sorrowing parents we extend our deepest sympathy, and bid them live for Christ here, that they may be with their loved one in heaven forever.

G. A. MANDEVILLE.

HENRY—JAMES D. HENRY was born in Claiborne parish, La., Nov. 10, 1828, and died within three miles of the place of his birth, Jan. 22, 1891.

Bro. Henry was converted and joined the church in 1881, and lived above reproach to the day of his death. He was one of the official Board of Tulip circuit for years, and was the preacher's friend and faithful counsellor. Too much could not be said of him as a husband, father, and neighbor. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn his demise. May God's grace support and his spirit guide them to a glorious reunion with the loved ones gone before!

J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

The Lover's Lament.

Your face is like a drooping flower,
Sweetheart!
I see you fading, hour by hour,
Sweetheart!
Your rounded outlines waste away,
In vain I weep, in vain I pray,
What power Death's cruel hand can stay?
Sweetheart, Sweetheart!

Why, nothing but Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It imparts strength to the failing system, cures organic troubles, and for debilitated and feeble women generally, is unequaled. It dispels melancholy and nervousness, and builds up both flesh and strength. Guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it refunded.

It's So, If They Say So.

We mean that well-known LUDDEN & BATES SOUTHERN MUSIC HOUSE, of Savannah, Ga., which, since its establishment twenty years ago, has placed over 45,000 Pianos and Organs in Southern Homes, and is still at it. They now advertise a Special Summer Organ Sale with great inducements in prices and terms of payment, and if they say so, it is so. This house never advertises what it has not got, and when they make a special offer it means just what it says. Read their brief, but telling advertisement, and write them for a Bargain Sheet. Chances to buy Organs at Spot Cash prices, by paying only $10 cash down and balance when cotton comes in, don't come along every day. Write them.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Twenty million feet of lumber were destroyed by fire at Colquet, Minn., on June 26. Loss, $500,000.

The armory of the Seventy-first Regiment, in New York City, was burned on June 27. The estimated loss is $100,000.

The Louisiana Educational Convention, which met in Ruston, adjourned on June 26. It is considered the best convention ever held, both in attendance and character of exercises.

Much desolation has been caused by floods in Iowa. The loss of property, live stock and the personal losses of people who lived on the track of the great rain storm is very great. Seventy miles of the Illinois Central tracks are submerged, and this will entail a loss of about $100,000.

The St. Louis and San Francisco Railway $50,000,000 mortgage was filed on June 27 in the office of the recorder of deeds, St. Louis. The Mercantile Trust Company of New York is the mortgagee, in trust for the bondholders. The instrument covers a period of 100 years, to October, 1990, the rate of interest specified being 4 per cent.

The work of caring for the flood-sufferers in Cherokee, Iowa, has been systematized, and they are now quartered in the Knights of Pythias Hall and the Grand Army of the Republic headquarters. All the public buildings have been placed at their disposal. Cots fill the spacious halls, and every effort is being made to make them comfortable.

One of the novelties of the Chicago World's Fair is to be a Casino 1,000 feet out in the lake, consisting of nine two-storied buildings, the central one 180 feet in height, all of Venetian architecture. Intercommunication will be by gondolas and bridges, and there will be broad promenade galleries. At night the waters will be illuminated by sunken electric lights.

The Navy Department has received a few short cablegrams from Admiral Belknap, commanding the United States squadron on the China station, confirmatory of the news received by way of San Francisco, of the persecution of foreign missionaries by the Chinese. The Admiral has sent all of his available ships to Shanghai, the point most threatened.

The Acting Secretary of the Treasury has directed that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors be given a credit of five points in all examinations for promotion in the Treasury Department under civil service rules. This is in accordance with the recommendation of the Departmental Examining Board, and is intended to apply to all soldiers and sailors who hold an honorable discharge regardless of whether they are disabled or not.

A regular meeting of the Cabinet was held on June 26. The principal topic of discussion was the continued coinage of silver after July 1, and the Secretary of the Treasury presented considerable data on the subject. The Secretary of the Treasury has decided that his first duty in this matter is to obey the direction of Congress. Congress has ordered the coinage of the trade dollar bars into standard silver dollars. The coinage of the trade dollar bars in this manner will transform what cost $5,087,795 into 5,148,281 standard dollars.

FOREIGN.

While aristocratic circles are willing to show themselves oblivious of his faults, there is a popular reaction in favor of the Prince of Wales.

An imperial ukase, with reference to recruiting for the Russian army, places the number of recruits for 1891 at 202,400, as against 212,000 in 1881.

Justin McCarty has practically withdrawn from the leadership of the anti-Parnellite wing of the Irish party, on account of an internal complaint.

Heavy thunder storms were reported throughout England and Ireland, last week. Much damage was caused by floods and several houses were burned or shattered by lightning.

Extensive preparations have been made for the reception of the German Emperor and Empress, who are to arrive in the Thames next Saturday on the yacht Hohenzollern.

The Council of the Society of Arts has sent an estimate to the English government that they will undertake to provide for a creditable display of British arts and industries at the World's Fair. The amount asked for is £25,000.

The London papers state that Baron Hirsch has bought several hundred thousand acres of land in North Carolina to colonize Russian Jews. The suffering among the latter has now reached the better classes, who are unable to find occupations on account of the general persecution.

There was a scene of wild disorder in the Italian Chamber of Deputies, on June 28, when the foreign policy of the government came up for discussion. Premier De Rudini declared in most emphatic terms that the government would adhere firmly and steadily to the Triple Alliance, adding that Italy and Europe might rest assured that these alliances would be maintained, and that European peace would long be preserved.

Under prompting from Cardinal Richard, the other leaders of the episcopacy in France have united in opposition to Cardinal Lavigerie's policy in support of the republic and a new party is forming, called the Union De La France Chretienne. The organizing committee includes the principal conservative senators and deputies. The composition of the union is distinctly monarchist, but in the meantime legislative action will be limited to a demand for the alteration of sectarian laws affecting religious teaching and to the abolition of the military law involving a period of service for clerical novitiates.

"Weak and weary," describes the condition of many people debilitated by the warm weather, by disease or overwork. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine needed to build up and strengthen the body, purify and quicken the sluggish blood, restore the lost appetite.

Christian and His Graces—No. 3.

BY AN OLD MINISTER.

Add to your faith virtue." Father nel says that "faith is the first of es, and the source of every other," uch is the place and order of faith n by the Holy Spirit through the of St. Peter. There has been no discussion as to the import of the "virtue." Many of the commen- rs have followed the great and ed Grotus, who understood the to mean "fortitude in the faith," e many other eminent scholars erstood the term to mean an "up- t and well-governed life." The priests taught legends of the gods and goddesses, taught the rituals of their wor- , but never taught men to "love y, do justly, and walk humbly God." The philosophers and emen taught law and morals, but o without any reference to the of God as the authoritative source ommands and prohibitions. Their m of religion was faith in legends ont works of purity and love, and system of morals was good works out regard to the will of God. ion and morals were completely ered. In our holy re- ion there is not only something es- ial to believe, to experience, but h also to be lived. We find, by ulting Paul, that there were those hoped to be saved by the deeds of Lord without faith in the atoning t of Christ; and by consulting es, that there were some who to be saved by faith only, with- the essential accompaniment of a life; whereas the true theory is, "we are saved by grace" through instrumentality of the "faith that by love." By adding to our a well-ordered life, boldly ex- ed, as need may require, is a step easurably beyond and above all man-made religions of all time. Of all the "living es" we shall build upon this sure dation, none is more essential and rtant than "virtue." We must the solid structure of a good life, courage to live it, or our profes- will be vain and powerless for good. Courage, boldness have in all ages been essential. "The carnal mind has always been enmity to God," and good men have always been more or less "persecuted for righteousness' sake." Men have had to "dare to be Daniels," and dare to be such as Noah, Moses, Elijah, John the Baptist, and Paul. Men have had to be brave enough to suffer "the loss of all things"—estates, liberty and life—and to suffer death in all the cruel and appalling forms that men and demons could devise. Good men have had to have courage enough to be laughed at, to be ridiculed as weak, superstitious and fanatical. Power has sought to crush and exterminate true religion; fashion has made a profession and life of piety peculiar, singular, and odious; "science, falsely so called," has ridiculed revealed religion as absurd—indeed, impossible—and at war with the laws which rule the universe; all manner of profane witlings have sought to make a jest of piety, and to pour contempt on its profession. All this has demanded indomitable courage, and none but moral heroes could say, "None of these things move me."

Many a time we shall, in the various companies into which we shall be thrown and in the circumstances by which we shall be surrounded, find need of courage to "stand up for Jesus," for the right, for the doctrines and precepts of our holy religion. Let us, then, add to our faith virtue.

Bishop Thompson's Apostolic Succession.

Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson, of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Mississippi, in his sermon at the consecration of Assistant Bishop Sessums, thus defines apostolic succession:

Now, here is the real meaning and value of apostolic succession. It is the continuity of a witnessing body, a testifying organization from the time the facts occurred until to-day.

If this be so, how can the Bishop say that his is the only Protestant Church possessing this supposed boon? He more than intimates this when he says in the same connection:

Mark you! the church started fifty years ago is no witness. It is eighteen hundred years too late. The church organized in Geneva three hundred years ago is fifteen hundred years out of court. The church existing in Salt Lake City is in the same predicament.

If by "the church existing in Salt Lake City," he means Mormonism, the classification of that vile blot on American civilization in the same category with the Presbyterian and other reputable evangelical churches is an insinuation of which a gentleman of Bishop Thompson's pretensions can not afford to be guilty. What does he mean by "the church started fifty years ago," and "the church organized at Geneva three hundred years ago"? How is it that "the church organized at Geneva three hundred years ago" is any less a witnessing, hence an apostolic, church than the church "started," or "organized," under the auspices of Henry VIII., in London, three hundred and fifty years ago? Was the Geneva Church "started," or "organized," in any sense whatever, other than was the London Church? According to the Bishop's definition of apostolic succession, the Protestant Episcopal Church of America is no more apostolic, having no more claim to the much-lauded succession, than the Methodist Episcopal Church, both of which are offshoots from the Church of England; nor has the Church of England any more right to claim this succession than has the Church of Geneva, both of which are offshoots from the Church of Rome. Then what is the Bishop arguing for? and what does he mean by "the Apostolic and Nicene Churches" being "more dignified in their origin than an American sect"? Does not Hugh Miller Thompson belong to an "American sect"? Is not his church as thoroughly an "American sect" as the church of B. M. Palmer, or that of C. W. Carter? and in what sense in the world is one any more apostolic than the other, according to this definition? What does Bishop Thompson mean by saying, "We of the church cling to the past?" Does he mean that he and his brethren of the Protestant Episcopal Church "cling to the past"? That can hardly be so. It may be true that this particular Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson and his constituency in the diocese of Mississippi "cling to the past," for it has just been announced that his diocesan committee refused to ratify the election of that large-hearted, broad-minded man of God, Phillips Brooks, to the bishopric of Massachusetts; but it is certainly a slander upon that goodly branch of the church of God to say that all of its clergy and members are doing nothing more than clinging to the dead issues and musty cerements of a past long dead, while the present, with its tremendous duties, and the future, with immortal destinies, are neglected. Bishop Thompson, did you mean it? Well, my brother, as you please; but as for us of the Methodist Church, let it be everywhere known that "we of the church do not cling to the past;" but, under the impulse of the Spirit of God, we follow our Lord Christ into an ever-widening, more glorious future by meeting the sublime obligations of the present filled with golden opportunities, and, like St. Paul, "forgetting the things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, we press toward the mark for the prize of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus." A church that does this is most assuredly a thousandfold more apostolic than one which wastes its time and prostitutes its heavenly mission by clinging foolishly to a dead past, out of which can come nothing whatever. It is sad to see a great mind, like that of Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson, forever toying with the moldy skeletons of dead issues, forever gazing down the darkening vistas of a dead past, forever with his back to the opening glories and sublime possibilities of God's golden future. Oh, it is sad, sad! Why will he do it?

I love the grand old Protestant Episcopal Church, and some of its members are among my best friends, and I can not believe that it is such a pitiful business as Bishop Thompson here paints it, for it must be that the Bishop erroneously supposes his church to be like himself.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTON.

Woodville District.

Early on the morning of June 17, I started for an extensive tour in the eastern portion of the district. By six P. M. I was at Bro. Sol Killian's, a drive of thirty-nine miles. Next morning Bro. Killian and little son, in company with me, started for Springfield, a distance of eighteen miles, which we made in time for the eleven A. M. sermon. We stopped on the way at a beautiful little branch in an old field to get a drink of water, and let our horses blow for a few minutes. A flock of geese stayed here, and had dropped many quills by the water's edge, and we got a good supply of toothpicks. Was there anything significant in that? At Springfield we found Bros. Mellard, Meador and Boyes holding a protracted meeting, to be closed by the services on the day of quarterly meeting. We preached at eleven A. M., baptized five children, and held a pleasant communion service. The Quarterly Conference in the afternoon was well attended. The reports were encouraging. The pastor in charge has collected nearly every dollar of his Conference collections. This is the first year this charge has been on the self-supporting list for thirty years. It is taking on new life, and promises to do better than ever. There were five accessions as the result of the meeting, which closed on Thursday night. There is a lady here whose house is the home of our preachers, who has never seen a Methodist preacher's wife. The circuit, for many years past, has been filled by single men, or preachers who would leave their wives at home. They talk of securing a parsonage at Springfield.

On Friday morning I set out for the next appointment. The ferryman at Tangipahoa river told me the sharks had taken some catfish off of his set hooks. I learned at other times and places that sharks come up all these rivers as far as the tide-water affects them. They are only up in these rivers two or three months in the summer. I met Bro. Wallace at Bedico, and preached there at night.

On Saturday morning we were at Madisonville in time to preach and hold Quarterly Conference. This is an old town, and is said to have no regular school-house. Catholicism prevails here. Dancing is poor business at best, and worse still on the Sabbath. Rev. G. T. Vickers met us here on Saturday, and we had the pleasure of his company to Covington on Sunday evening. We preached at Covington at night. Monday we took the train for Slidell, where we preached twice, and held the Covington Quarterly Conference, and returned in the evening.

A drive of twenty-two miles on Tuesday brought me to Bro. Fussell's, where I spent the afternoon and night; thence to Franklinton, where I met Bro. Sandell. I preached here at night. This is one of the most pleasant parish towns I have seen. The Quarterly Conference was held at Magee's Church (Thursday). A good congregation and a good Conference. Here we granted license to preach to E. L. Alford, of whom we expect many long years of useful life for the church. In this vicinity they want a local preacher to move into their midst. He could be useful. There is a large scope of country in Louisiana, between the Pearl and Homo Chitto rivers, not occupied by our church, where we must put a preacher soon. A drive of about twenty-five miles on Friday, and I was at Tangipahoa, where the quarterly meeting for Amite City charge was to be held on Saturday and Sunday. Bro. Anders was engaged in a protracted meeting here, assisted by Rev. R. W. Tucker. Some good was accomplished. We preached at Greensburg on Sunday night; drove home on Monday, after an absence of thirteen days. During this time we held five Quarterly Conferences and preached fourteen times. The rains have been general, and the crop prospects are good. Revival meetings are the order of the day. May the Lord help the hosts of Israel, and give us signal victories!

C. MCDONALD, P. E.

Corvallis College.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue, of June 18, there is a quotation from the Times-Democrat which does not correctly represent our suit in Oregon. D. Atkins did not telegraph to Bishop Hargrove that "the Supreme Court of Oregon has decided the college suit in favor of the M. E. Church, South." The case was decided in the circuit court in favor of the church; but it has not yet reached the Supreme Court. An appeal will, doubtless, be taken by the defense; if not, possession will be taken soon. The suit does not involve property amounting to over $3,000,000; but the suit, so far as yet instituted and decided, involves a tract of land containing thirty-five acres, and a building which has been erected thereon, despite our protest, worth $25,000, making property worth about $40,000. The State of Oregon never gave any land to the M. E. Church, South. The Northern Methodists never had anything to do with the college or the land in any way whatever, except that an effort was made by some member of the Legislature to have Willamette University designated as the Agricultural College at the time when Corvallis College was so designated; and the Willamette University is under control of the Northern Methodists. We believe the present decision will not be reversed by the Supreme Court, but another suit will be necessary in order to secure all our rights as the Agricultural College of the State.

As there seems to be some misunderstanding of this case, I give you the text of the act making Corvallis College the Agricultural College of Oregon.

Sec. 1. That Corvallis College, in Benton county, is hereby designated and permanently adopted as the Agricultural College of the State of Oregon, in which all students sent under the provisions of law shall be instructed in accordance with the requirements of the act of Congress approved on the second day of July, 1862, granting public lands to the several States and Territories which might provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, and the acts amendatory thereof.

Sec. 2. The following persons, to wit: J. C. Avery, L. F. Grover, and N. H. Cranor, are hereby constituted a Board of Commissioners, to propose a plan for the instruction and education of the students in said Agricultural College, and to prepare rules, regulations and by-laws for the government of the same, all of which shall be submitted to the Legislative Assembly, at its next regular session, for its adoption or rejection; and in the meantime the said college shall be governed by and under the provisions of the act of the Legislative Assembly, approved the twenty-seventh day of October, 1868, in relation to said college.

Sec. 3. That the Board of Trustees of Corvallis College shall, by resolution, accept the provisions of this act, and agree to be bound by the same within thirty days after its passage, and cause a copy of said resolutions to be filed with the Secretary of State; and upon their failure to do so, they shall be deemed to have rejected its provisions.

Sec. 4. Inasmuch as there is no provision of law permanently locating the Agricultural College of Oregon, this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the governor. Approved Oct. 21, 1870.

The trustees of Corvallis College held a special meeting Oct. 29, 1870, and passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, By the Board of Trustees of Corvallis College, that said Board does accept the provisions of said act of the Legislative Assembly aforesaid, and they do agree to be bound by the same.

Resolved, That the secretary of the Board is hereby directed forthwith to forward to the Secretary of the State of Oregon a copy of the foregoing preambles and resolutions.

R. S. STRAHAN, Pres.
B. R. BEDDLE, Sec.

This was filed in the secretary's office, Nov. 2, 1870.

The above proposition of the Legislature, and acceptance on the part of the trustees, constituted a contract, making Corvallis College the Agricultural College of the State, and, as such, entitled to the income from all the funds arising from the sale of the lands donated by the government to the State of Oregon by the act of Congress, approved July 2, 1862. The State did not convey the 90,000 acres of land to the church, or to Corvallis College. The money arising from the sale of said land went into the State treasury, and the income was paid out by the State treasurer on the warrants drawn by the Secretary of State.

By the terms of the contract, Corvallis College relinquished its right to form and regulate the course of study, or rules for government, as that was provided for by the appointment of a commission. The charter of the college remained intact; the trustees were appointed by the Columbia Conference; the contract was binding and permanent. This contract has never been dissolved. A resolution was passed by a few members of the Board of Trustees, in special meeting, which has been claimed by our enemies as a surrender of the franchise; but there were only nine members of a Board of nineteen present. Four of these voted to return the franchise to the State, three voted against it, two did not vote at all. Upon this illegal procedure the Legislature passed a law accepting it, and providing otherwise for the Agricultural College; accepting it, however, on conditions of its own different from what the trustees proposed. Corvallis College is the legal Agricultural College of the State; but the treasurer of the State refuses to pay money to the authorities of Corvallis College, and is paying it out to the illegally constituted Board of Regents to the State. A suit will be necessary to enforce the payment of this money. This suit, however, has not been instituted.

After Corvallis College became the Agricultural College of the State, the trustees bought thirty-five acres of land, to be used as an agricultural farm for experimental purposes. A special meeting of the trustees of Corvallis College made a deed of this land to the Board of Regents appointed by the State. This act was done contrary to the expressed wish of the Conference, and without any consideration. The present suit was to have the aforesaid deed set aside, and the title affirmed in Corvallis College. This suit was at first instituted in the name of certain members of the church, who had subscribed to the purchase of the land in the circuit court of Benton county. The defense demurred; the demurrer was sustained. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, which reversed the decision below and sent the case back for trial. Corvallis College was then joined with these members of the church as plaintiffs, and the judge in Benton county, now sitting, being disqualified, the case was referred by consent to Judge Shattuck, of Portland. He decided the case in favor of the plaintiffs, and this is the decision telegraphed to Bishop Hargrove. There are immense interests involved. The agricultural income will, in a few years, amount to $15,000, and Corvallis College, as the Agricultural College, is entitled to draw and use this money; but it will have to sue for this right, and it will be several years before the end is reached.

D. ATKINS.

[Our mistake in the above matter was in getting church news from a secular paper! It won't do. We repent.—EDITOR.]

Which?

In the course of my travels I recently visited Harrisonburg, La., which I found to be, in some respects, a remarkable town. It has about 300 inhabitants, six stores, two newspapers, a court-house and a jail, and a very neat church. It is a good sign when the church is one of the best buildings in the community, as it is in this instance. This town once had whisky dispensed by two saloons, aided occasionally by a third. Of course, they were not without the usual concomitants and consequences.

About seven years ago the people determined to drive whisky out, and they did it. Strange as it may seem, the saloon keepers themselves helped to put it out, and for seven years they have been without it. It can not be gotten now even at the drug stores. During all this time nobody has died from a rattlesnake's bite and no merchant has failed in business. Here the question arises, Have these people lost their senses? If not, what about those towns and communities that cling to whisky as if it were one of the most necessary things in the world? A noticeable feature in this case is the fact that all the business men and most of the people in and around the town are natives of the parish or of the adjacent country. The foreign element is the strength of the saloon business in the United States.

Of course, such a town would be ready to hear a plea for Christian education and to help the cause. The former they did on Sunday and the latter on Monday, adding a handsome amount to my list of endowment notes for Centenary.

Rev. W. L. Hamil, the pastor, is full of energy and zeal in his work, and has good congregations in the town and on Sicily Island, besides several new preaching-places with growing Sunday-schools and good prospects of building new houses of worship during the year. At Winnsboro, where I advocated Christian education on Tuesday night, I heard of the successful labors of Bro. Renneau, who seems to be building up Methodism in that growing railroad town.

Rains have been plentiful, and crops of all kinds promise an abundant yield. The low price of cotton is causing many to think of looking less to that staple for support. On Sicily Island, which is chiefly a fertile region above overflow, some are combining stock-raising with planting. Planters must learn to make their living at home. They can not buy provisions with cotton at six or seven cents. Mr. H. M. Peniston, with whom I had the pleasure of spending a few days, looks to grazing herds of cows and sheep, rather than to cotton, for the profits of his plantation.

The law favors the gospel in this region, and ferrymen are required to transport ministers of the gospel without charge. The Natchez and Northwestern railroad gives half fare to ministers, which is liberal. Mail facilities are much lacking. Surely the railway company will get the contract, and give the people daily mails before long.

The anti-Lottery sentiment is strong in all this region. Men are indignant at the thought of being asked to change the State Constitution, so as to re-establish a system of corruption, fraud and robbery which it was one of the chief objects of that Constitution forever to prohibit. In such a contest the honor and virtue of the people are to be confronted at the polls with the purchasing power of money. Voters are to be hired to hire out the State of Louisiana to the highest bidder. Plutocrats propose to treat her as a pauper, and flatter her imbecility with the promise of plenty, which is to be stolen from herself and the rest of mankind by the machinery of chance.

It is hard for honest men to speak of this thing with any patience. It is time for voters to think and act, for honor and liberty are at stake. It is time for all Christians to cry mightily to God to aid them in opposing this covetous scheme which, if successful, must enslave the State and work the moral ruin of her people. Let Louisiana maintain her fair name in the eyes of the civilized world.

Indictment against the Lottery.

BY R. M. PALMER, D. D.

Tho following is Dr. Palmer's masterful speech dolivered in this city, Juno 25:

Mr. Chairman and Fellow-citizens of Louisiana—I lay tho indictmont against the Lottery Company of Louisiana that it is essontially an immoral institution whose business and avowed aim is to propagato gambling throughout the State and throughout the country. That being not simply a nuisanco, but even a crimo, no Legislature as the creature of the people, nor even tho people themselves in convention assembled, have the power to legitimate it, either by legislative enactment on one hand, or by fnodamental charter upon the othor. In other words, I lay the indictment against the Louisiana Lottery Company that its continued existence is incompatible, not only with the safety, but with the being of the State.

In saying this, sir, I desire to be understood as not simply uttering the language of denunciation. I frame tho indictment and I propose to support each of its specifications by adequate proof. And I do this the more distinctly from the conviction that there are many citizens throughout our bounds who having been accustomed to look at the Lottery simply as a means of revenue, either public or private, have not sufficiently considered the inherent viciousness of the system itself. (Applause.) And it is that class which I hope this night to reach and to range upon our side in this great controversy.

Indeed, sir, if the worst should come to the worst in this present campaign, I for one could wish that all technicalities being swept away, there might be some method by which the question could be carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States, whether it is competent to any State in this Union to commit suicide. (Applause.) And if that venerable court should return an answer, which I think they would not for a moment consider as possible, I would then for my part make the appeal to the virtue and common sense of the masses of our people, that the very instinct of self-preservation may stamp out of existence an institution which is fatal to the liberties and to the life of the commonwealth.

I have laid down a proposition sufficiently broad. Now for the proof. What would you say if a syndicate should be formed in this State or any other State of the Union for the avowed purpose of propagating leprosy (laughter) throughout the land, sending their agents with the utmost activity in order to impregnate every woman and man and child in all the country with the virus of that dreadful disease? Is there a Legislature that is competent to induct such an association into existence? Or, would the people themselves, in the exercise of their high sovereignty in convention assembled, undertake to render lawful the existence of such a corporation as that? Or, to vary the illustration: Suppose that a university should be endowed with many millions in this State or elsewhere, in order to persuade the people throughout the land of the great advantages of lying and of stealing (applause), sending out their agents in all the avenues of life in order to indoctrinate the people both as to the methods and the advantages of these practices. Is there a Legislature in the land, or the people themselves in convention assembled, who would not immediately recognize that in chartering such an institution they simply dissolved the State? For how can society hold together if confidence be destroyed in the veracity of man to man, or if there be no security whatever in our earthly possessions?

Permit me to vary the illustration still further. Suppose there should be an organization effected in this city in the interests of murdering; and, by the way, we have had some little experience of that of late. When all the machinery of human justice proved inadequate to defend the safety and life of the commonwealth, extra-legal measures were necessitated under the instinct of self-preservation to stamp out the existence of the Mafia in our midst. (Applause and cheers.) Now, sir, I put the Lottery upon the same moral plane with these cases which I have mentioned. (Cheering and applause.) In every view which you take of it, it is an institution that antagonizes the State and the people in all their interests, and there is but one issue before this people, and I announce it without hesitation upon this platform: Either the Lottery must go, or Louisiana is lost. (Cheers and applause.) And with the point of my finger I write upon the walls of every house in this city and throughout the State, "Carthage est delenda." Carthage and Rome could not exist side by side on the same planet, and Rome must conquer and Carthage must fall. (Cheers.)

If I am asked to sustain by adequate proof the proposition which I have announced as to the inherent viciousness of the Lottery system, permit me to say that the first physical matter which forms a basis upon which human society rests is the law of labor. There are moral laws underlying society, as for example that law which demands truth and righteousness between man and man; but as the physical basis upon which all society and government must rest, we find that basis is the law of labor. It was ordained from the beginning by the great Creator when he placed man in his primal innocence in the garden to dress and to keep it, and when after the fall that light labor deepened into the curse, and it became under the decree of Heaven necessary that a man should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. Divine grace coming after it ameliorated the curse, and from that day to this, under the providence of a kind Heaven, labor proves a blessing, hides within its folds and under its forbidden aspect the highest blessing which can be conferred upon the human race. (Applause.)

It was written in the best of books, that if a man will not work, neither shall he eat. So that from the creation to the time of Christ's appearance upon the earth, it has been the fundamental and universal law under which society exists that each unit in society lives by his individual and personal labor. The farmer harrows the ground, plants the seed in it, and reaps the abundant harvest. He blends his industry with the fertility of the soil and with the beneficence of Heaven in giving the early and later rain, and the dews and the sunshine. The common carrier takes the cotton bloom and bears it from the harm of the planter to the distant manufacturer, and in the transportation he stamps a new value upon the original product of the field, and lives by that value which he has attached.

The manufacturer brings his industry and his skill and his invention, spinning the staple into thread and weaving it into cloth, and stamps upon the cotton bloom a value thousandfold more than it originally had, and the manufacturer lives upon the value which he has contributed to the plant. And so, the wholesale merchant and the retail merchant, lifting the pile of goods from under the manufacturer's hands, transports them over the land until they are found in the remotest hamlet, and are sold by the yard, and the price paid by the consumer measures all the successive values which have been imparted to the original product of the field, and each class lives by the value which he has himself imparted to the same. Mr. Chairman, I am almost ashamed to repeat this earliest and simplest lesson in our political economy. But I do it for the purpose now of asking the searching question, "What value does the gambler ever create? What new value does he ever stamp upon the value which existed antecedently?"

What does the Lottery do, in all of its manipulations but simply shift the products of a preceding industry from one hand to another hand (applause) without the imparting in the process of a particle of value to that which is thus transferred. It may be said that there are consumers who not being producers are under the same charge of using up what they do not create. It only emphasizes the position already taken, for even the non-producing class, as for example professional men, live upon that which they in a sense create. The lawyer may not create a new material product, but man being as he is there could be no basis of personal property without the machinery of justice, and he is the representative and organ of that justice, and just in so far as he conserves that which others create, and protects them in the enjoyment of the same, he is worth his living, though he may not be a creator of a new material product. The physician who restores health to one who is incapacitated by disease from labor, or who ameliorates the sufferings which disease inflicts, becomes by virtue of his calling a necessity to society, and is worth in the exercise of his profession all that it costs to maintain him.

And the preacher, of whom I stand before you a representative, taking even the lowest economic view of his profession as a consumer and not a producer, he is an important part of that necessary police force without which the order and position and prosperity of society can not be preserved. (Applause.) All not being then producers, but consumers, yet in the exercise of their several callings add to the value of what is created and render secure the enjoyment of the same. But what value does the Lottery Company protect, not to say what value does the Lottery Company create?

Let me illustrate this so that it shall be understood by all present to night. That company issues, if you please, a thousand tickets of $500 value apiece, creating thus within its vaults a fund of $500 000. It has first got to take $250,000 of that and deposit it safely in its own locker as its portion of the plunder. (Laughter.) It then takes the other half, the $250,000, and divides it into twenty-five shares of $10,000 each and puts these into the wheel, and the 500 men may take their chances as to which of them shall get these twenty-five prizes. When at last the prizes are realized, what has been accomplished? Simply the transfer of $500,000 out of the pockets of 1,000 individuals, one-half of it to enrich those who run the machine, and the other half divided among twenty-five men, leaving 475 to hold the empty bag and gain the loss. (Laughter and applause.)

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to appear harsh, but will you draw for me the line between this and absolute stealing? (Applause.) If twenty-five men can put their hands into the pockets of 475 men and take the $250,000 by which they are enriched without giving to those 475 any equivalent, where is the distinction any other than barely a metaphysical distinction without even a hair-breadth's width to mark it between that and what we call in common style a theft. (Applause.) Now, sir, I know the reply to this. There are but two methods by which we acquire property, either by gift or purchase. Now, I ask whether these 475 men have made a gift to the successful winners of the prizes. Each one of those 475 men, so far from being willing to donate their loss so that it shall become the others' gain, each one of them has been hoping and wishing that he might put into his own pocket the coveted treasure. Was there any good-will in the transfer from the loser to the gainer? Is it a purchase? What equivalent has been rendered?

It is simply grotesque to speak of that being purchase money which does not amount to one-twentieth of the value of the thing purchased. But, it is urged in answer to this that the parties contract and make the bargain between themselves as to this gain and loss, and that as the losers agreed to take their chances with the rest, it is constructively, although not actually, a gift on their part.

Now, it appears to me, Mr. Chairman and fellow-citizens, one of the plainest principles of ethics that what a man has no right to do, he has no right to bargain to do, and no contract between man and man to do a thing that is unlawful can ever be made right in the sight of man or God simply by the fact that it is a contract between them. I go beyond this, and say that the deliberateness of the act when two or more men sit down together and combine to do a thing which in itself was not right to do, the deliberateness of the act makes it more criminal than if it sprung from the spontaneous and sudden act of an individual, and more than all, you have in the contrast to do the wrong thing, not only this deliberateness, but you have the concurrence of two wills, doubling the crime on the part of both. The man who staked his property had no right to stake that property on a chance, and the man who won the property upon that stake had no original right to take it. It was neither a gift nor a purchase, and consequently the agreement between the parties to stand simply by the chance was an immoral agreement, and no legislation can possibly make it legitimate. (Applause.) Here, then, is my first position against the Lottery, when I say that it disorganizes society, and is incompatible with the safety of the State. It strikes at that fundamental law of labor. It has said to these 1,000 men: "There is no need for you to work. There is a shorter way by which you can enrich yourselves and your families." Those 1,000 men are called away from their proper duties, and they fail in meeting that fundamental obligation to live either by the toil of their hands or by the work of their understanding.

But more than this, sir. When I have said there is no equivalent given and no new value imparted, when there is transfer of money from one hand to the other through the Lottery and its agents, it is a lesson industriously taught the people not only to live by luck, but to live upon the misfortune of their neighbors. I beg the attention of the audience to the announcement of this principle. Sir, it is a solemn thing for any body of men to inculcate it as at all right and proper that we should live simply and alone upon the losses of those that are unlucky. If I win the $10,000 prize, those that entered into the chance with me have lost just that much, and I am enriched through their poverty. Now, sir, let the Lottery exist five and twenty years. If only twenty-five men out of the 500 succeed in gaining what the Lottery promises, how long will it take the fourth of a century to transfer the entire wealth of the State of Louisiana into the hands of one out of twenty of its citizens? What will be the condition of things when one-twentieth of the population own everything upon the soil, and let me ask, sir, how long is any community going to stand that sort of thing? (Applause.) When the country has been led straight up or driven up to the very verge of a precipice, do you suppose that, like a herd of buffaloes, all the people of this State are going to leap that precipice into the yawning and hissing depths below? No, sir; they must and they will recoil, and if this Lottery can not be destroyed by forms of law, it must unquestionably be destroyed by actual revolution. (Tremendous and prolonged cheering and applause.) I fear that I may be trespassing upon the time of the other speakers. (Cries of "No, no; go on, go on.")

I sometimes hear the apology for the Lottery after this sort: "Oh, it is all wrong. It is immoral, we grant that, but then it is one of the evils to which society is incident, and we can not help ourselves. It is just like drinking. The State knows that the saloon is a deep injury to the State, and if in her power, would gladly suppress it; but as men must and will drink, it is wise for the State to throw around existing saloons such restrictions as shall diminish the harm and make the evil less as it bears upon society at large." Now, the analogy is drawn. "Gambling is in human nature. Men will gamble, and why should not the State deal with the Lottery exactly as it deals with the saloons? Give it license to do its work." But, sir, without dwelling too long upon the statement, let me dissipate the illusion by showing where the analogy fails.

Saloons exist, but they exist under protest. They exist under not only the protest of the government, but under restraints such as the State will be able to throw around them. It stands by itself, and simply answers the wishes and demands which are made upon it by those who desire the liquor which is sold them; but if you want the parallel to be exact, you must convert all the saloons in the country into one grand saloon syndicate (laughter and applause), and that syndicate must go to the Legislature and demand a charter; and in order that their rights may be beyond invasion over afterwards, it must be imbedded in the Constitution that they, and they alone, shall have the right to satisfy the thirst of the people. (Laughter.) What next? They open their tap-rooms upon every corner in every city where they gain access, and they hang out their prices from the pint, earthen mug, quite up to the gallon and hogshead. (Laughter.) And according to the money the parties are willing to pay, this saloon syndicate will drown the country with what they desire and what proves their ruin. Not only that, but they have their agents walking the streets thrusting invitations into your face as you walk quietly in your citizenship along the streets of this city, telling you how cheap you may get this drink that you wish, and so they become the propagandists of the saloon.

That is the crime which I charge now against the Lottery. It is not only a gambling-place, such as other gambling-places that are in this city, meeting under the cover of night to satisfy the wishes and anticipations of those who love the gambling, but it becomes the apostle of gambling. It becomes the propagandist of gambling. It goes forth under the charter of the State to persuade man, woman and child, wherever they meet them, to gamble. (Applause.) It carries the solicitation into our very homes; it meets our cooks when they are going with the basket to get the master's breakfast (laughter), and induces them to gamble. How long, sir, would the country stand a syndicate of saloons, and I ask how long will Louisiana or the country stand this syndicate of gamblers? (Applause.) What I charge, therefore, upon the Lottery is not simply that it is a gambling concern, but that it is a university for the instruction in gambling, and a high endowment in order to stimulate the process of gambling by and through the country at large. I have only one thing more to say, and I am done.

I have said the Lottery must go, because the State can not be allowed to perish. Why, sir, before the half of twenty-five years have elapsed, if this Lottery should gain its charter, every man that is able to leave the State of Louisiana will abandon it. (Applause.) Whilst you are holding out our invitations to invite capital and invite population, who shall drain your morasses and stimulate industry and create the wealth of the State, you are holding up this forbidding thing to drive every desirable citizen away from Louisiana. Worse than that, sir—when you have an institution that goes openly before the Legislature and seeks to bribe it, that in less than ten years after its reorganization will carry in its pocket every governor in the State (applause), remove every honest judge from the bench, and put their men in the places to do their bidding, what then will Louisiana be worth? (Applause.)

I, sir, was not born upon the soil of Louisiana, but I am her son by adoption. (Applause.) I have spent thirty-five years, almost the half of a long life, in what I believe is honest and virtuous labor for the good of this people. (Applause.) It will not be in my power to abandon this State, even though I might desire to escape the odium attaching it. My dead are here, and the narrow house is already built in which, after a year or two of active service, I expect to be laid aside to enjoy the quiet repose which Heaven has afforded to them; but before that event takes place, I desire to see this land of my adoption redeemed. (Applause.) I want her redemption to be accomplished by her own act. These beautiful plains; this delicious climate, taken the year round, superior to any other upon this continent; these beautiful streams which, like silver threads, almost convert a portion of our State into a modern Venice—are we, sir, to abandon such a land as this, created by beneficent Heaven and secured by the patriotism of the fathers that went before us? Are we to deliver her, bound hand and foot, to such an enemy as this? (Cries of "No, no.") Unless she be redeemed by her own act, then the appeal must be made to the virtue and the intelligence of the entire country. Mr. Chairman, I need not say to one like you, so versed in moral truths, that the world is ruled by ideas, and it is not competent to any isolated community to live against the moral convictions of the world. (Applause.)

Scarce recovered, as a people, from the blow inflicted upon us, coming in that precise way, the moral sentiment of the world, right or wrong, was arrayed against the institution of slavery, and it went down. The moral sentiment of mankind is against the lottery, and all the countries that have given it a temporary existence have found that it exhausted the resources of the land, and have more or less divested themselves of the curse; but if, notwithstanding all these things, the curse should still be inflicted upon us, Louisiana must become a lost pleiad in the sisterhood of States, and she will go forth an outcast pariah with the scarlet letter of shame branded forever upon her forehead. (Applause.)—New Delta.

FROM THE WORK.

COLUMBUS CIRCUIT.

It is with mingled feelings of pride and pleasure that I record the dedication of the second new church built on this circuit during the past twelve months. It was one of the most enjoyable occasions of my life, and one long to be remembered in the history of this charge. The services of the occasion began on Saturday, June 20, at eleven o'clock A. M., with an able sermon by our presiding elder, W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., from the text, "Pay thy vows unto the Most High." Immediately after services we were invited to an excellent and bountiful dinner on the grounds; after which we proceeded to hold our third quarterly meeting. The Conference was of more than usual interest, and the attendance exceptionally good. Our reports showed that the progress along all the lines of church work is encouraging. I would especially mention one feature of our Sunday-school work at Mount Pleasant. We call it a "missionary egg box." This box is placed on the lower apartment of the Sunday-school table, just in front of the pulpit, and each member of the Sunday-school, young and old, is expected to bring an egg each Sunday and deposit it in this box. These eggs are then turned over to the treasurer elected for the purpose, whose business it is to sell the eggs and appropriate the proceeds to the cause of missions. This, at first blush, may seem a small business; but, in reality, it is a right step and a long step toward the accomplishment of two most important things—the training of the young in Christian giving and the conversion of the world. Dr. Broadus says, "The best way to learn how to preach is to preach." So, too, the best way to learn how to give is to give—give frequently, though it be but little at the time. This constant giving, though it be but an egg in value, will keep the cause of missions before the mind, enlist the sympathy and prayers of each contributor in this, the great work of the church, and lead the young heart gently, but surely, into a life of systematic, Christian giving.

And, too, this is not a little thing when viewed from a financial standpoint. We have fifty scholars in the Mount Pleasant school, which, we will suppose, give two dozen eggs per week—a small average—at twelve and one-half cents per dozen. This would be twenty-five cents per week, one dollar per month, or twelve dollars per year—a neat little sum for one Sunday-school. But I have six such schools in my charge, which, at twelve dollars each, would give us the considerable sum of seventy-two dollars for missions alone from the Sunday-schools of this charge. But suppose we run it through on a larger scale. The fifty-four Sunday-schools of this district would give us, at twelve dollars each, $648, and North Mississippi Conference, with its 438 schools, would net the beautiful sum of $5,256, and the 1,200,000 Sunday-school scholars of our entire church, at one egg each per week, or fifty-four cents per year, would yield the enormous sum of $12,000 per week, or $624,000 per year. This sum would be a power in the evangelization of the world. Let us have the one egg per week from every Sunday-school scholar in the land, and we may soon claim the world for Christ. But to return to our dedication.

Early Sunday morning the crowds began rolling in, and soon the beautiful new church at Mount Pleasant was surrounded with carriages, buggies, hacks, carts, wagons and every other conceivable means of conveyance, and the auditorium filled to overflowing with an anxious, eager crowd of listeners. Dr. Sullivan preached the dedication sermon; and, though somewhat complaining, he was fully at himself, mentally. It is sometimes well that the Lord afflicts the body to draw out the finer sensibilities of the spiritual man. The Doctor's physical disability gave a degree of melody, tenderness and sweetness of spirit to his discourse which it otherwise might not have had. His text was taken from Psalms cxxii, 2-4 verses. He handled it with a master-hand. I never saw him in finer command of language and thought. His sermon was logical, terse, appropriate, and, as a good brother afterward remarked, "full of sound Methodist doctrine." At the close of the discourse the Doctor proceeded at once to the dedication. Capt. George W. Vaughn, F. A. Rowan, Capt. E. C. Leech and John Loftis (trustees) formally presented the church for dedication, and it was soon set apart for the service of God.

In conclusion, I must say this is a beautiful church. It cost one thousand dollars, and is the cheapest house at that price I have ever known put up. From pillar to comb there is not a sorry piece of timber in it. It is of modern style—Gothic windows, arched ceiling, panelled wall and ceiling, organ-stand back of pulpit, elegant pulpit and chancel, nicely carpeted, and the best of all is, every dollar was paid before the day of dedication. We are proud of our new church.

I must say here, too, that we are building a new church at Piney Grove also, and hope to have it ready for dedication before Conference. Our work moves along well among this intelligent, kind and liberal people.

F. P. SPENCER.

EAST FELICIANA CIRCUIT.

I know you and others are anxious to hear what we are doing on "one of the best circuits in the Mississippi Conference." Well, we have observed Children's Day at Independence and Olive Branch with encouraging success. The Sunday-school scholars recited well-selected pieces, which were well received. We had good collections for needy Sunday-schools, a fine dinner, perfect harmony, and the Sunday-school work very much revived. One nice feature we added at Olive Branch, which we commend to all the brethren. We baptized eight children at the evening service, which, it appears to me, is a beautiful and appropriate service for that day. Our Sunday-school at Oak Grove voluntarily collected money enough to paper one room of the parsonage at a cost of about twelve dollars. Besides this, they have bought a nice library for their school.

Our people are organizing Anti-Lottery Leagues and circulating anti-Lottery literature. We are thinking of holding another local option election to get whisky out of our parish. We are planning for a permanent camp meeting, accessible to Live Oak, St. Helena and East Feliciana circuits. We have subscribed and collected together two-thirds of our Conference collections, and two appointments have not yet had these claims presented to them. I guess I had better stop before you get tired of publishing the good things we are doing. Will try to write less at one time and oftener hereafter.

H. BRADFORD.

VERNON CIRCUIT (LA.) PARSONAGE.

The parsonage is situated on an eligible site in the town of Vernon, there being eight acres in the lot, and it well sodded in Bermuda grass (which makes a splendid pasture for Bro. Barr's Jersey cow, of which he is very proud), and is also well set in shade trees. The house and lot were purchased for a parsonage about six years ago, and have been in a dilapidated condition ever since, until the arrival of Bro. Barr the last of December, last; and he, seeing the condition of the house and lot, went to work, got some of the brethren together, and began making estimates as to repairs, etc. The decision was to tear down the old house and rebuild. Sunday-School Lesson—July 12.

CHRIST'S FIRST DISCIPLES.
John 1, 20-42.

Golden text: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1, 29).

I. John the Baptist's testimony of Christ. Vs. 29-34. (1) The place was Bethabara, on the east side of the Jordan, ten miles from its mouth. (2) John was preaching and baptizing. In verses 19-28 he speaks golden words of Jesus. The following day he bore witness to him in the language of verses 29-34. (a) Christ is declared to be the Lamb of God; that is, the Redeemer who was to come to make atonement for the sin of the world by the shedding of his own blood. (b) He saw the Holy Spirit descend upon Christ. (c) He says that Christ is the Son of God—the true Messiah, the only Savior of the world.

II. The first two disciples—John, the writer of this Gospel, and Andrew—how they came. Vs. 35-39. Observe: (1) These men had their attention first directed to a vicarious Savior. The Lamb of God conveyed the idea of divine sacrifice for sin. This was the gospel truth heard. This, too, must be the truth preached to all men before they can ever become disciples of Christ. (2) "Behold the Lamb of God" is the staff with which Christianity must walk around the earth, "making disciples of all nations" (vs. 35, 36). (2) John and Andrew responded to the Baptist's preaching by following Jesus. All preaching is useless until men make the positive advancement toward Christ (v. 37). (3) Jesus soon recognizes the inquiring soul. The two quickened men before us had only gone a few steps when they were encouraged to go forward to a more intimate acquaintance, by being asked the question (v. 38), What seek ye? and by a warm invitation to come to his home to see for themselves what he was and what he had for them (v. 39). (4) The result of this interview was that both found Christ a personal Savior. Men that come to Christ with a longing heart find him a glorious Redeemer!

III. The third disciple—Peter—how he came. Vs. 40-42. Observe: (1) When Andrew found the Savior himself, he was not satisfied till he had secured the same blessing for his own brother Peter (14). Righteousness always diffuses itself. If we do not desire to save others, it is good evidence that we are not saved. (2) The person brought to Jesus was Peter, Andrew's brother. Men should commence our Christian work at home. (3) The great Peter was saved through one much his inferior in point of ability. We never know when we may help to save a person. Peter. (4) The thing to be done was to bring men, not to prayers, church, repentance, honesty, but to Jesus (v. 42). Salvation has to do with a person, not with a thing! (5) It would seem that Peter believed at first sight, since Christ's reception of him as his disciple (v. 42). (6) It was the testimony of Andrew that made it easy for Christ to accept the Messiah (v. 41). We should tell our experience to others.

IV. The fourth and fifth disciples, Philip and Nathanael. Vs. 43-51. Observe: (1) No visible instrumentality is present in Philip's case. Jesus said to him: "Follow me." He obeyed. There are those who hear the divine call, all of themselves, and follow Christ; no one in particular having to do with the matter of their salvation. It is pleasing to know that many, while doing nothing done for their souls by Christians, are spoken to by Christ, in his providence, by his Word and his still small voice—all saying, "Follow me." And they do follow. The fourth disciple may have come into the kingdom as a representative of the church-elected, but not Christ-neglected, class. (2) Philip brings Nathanael by declaring that he had found the Christ of the Old Testament. This, no doubt, is the best way to persuade that good man. Being an Israelite without guile, he would at once be interested in a person said to be the Messiah of Moses and the prophets (v. 45). It is well to go, as far as possible, common ground, where we desire to lead people and do them good. (3) An objection is raised that Jesus was of Nazareth. Here was an honest doubt. Such doubts may be in any mind. It is beautiful to see how Philip dealt with this misgiving in Nathanael. He simply said to him: "Come and see" (v. 46). This is all that need be said to any honest doubter. Any that truly desires to know the truth can easily find it in the Bible. An honest reading of the Scriptures ever causes men to cry out: "Master, thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel" (v. 49). The trouble with many people is, their doubts are diseased, born of rebellious hearts, not wanting to know Christ or have anything to do with him. (4) The testimony of Jesus regarding Nathanael—"an Israelite without guile" (v. 47); a sincere, good man, all ripe for the kingdom. Would that even of Christians this could always be said. It is what we should strive for. (5) In Christ's witness for him, Nathanael had an evidence of his divinity. He knew that his heart was read. God alone knows the heart. (6) The keenness of Nathanael's spiritual insight guaranteed to him that, in the future, he should see great things, even the ladder of Jacob's ladder: "Heaven open and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man" (v. 50, 51). What a blessing it is to have a guileless heart and to be anxious to receive what light God is ready to give us. Then, too, are we in a condition to "see greater things." Heavenly glories may even flame before us!—The Treasury.

Louisiana Notes.

The police jury of Sabine parish has levied a four-mill tax for school purposes.

A stock company has been organized at Simsboro, with $25,000 paid in, for the purpose of establishing a planing mill at that place.

The city council of Baton Rouge are taking steps to improve the Boulevard and to build a new wharf. The Postal Telegraph Company has opened an office for business, and sent its first message last week.

The Monroe and Columbia telephone line, owned by Mr. R. B. Blanks, president of the Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Monroe, was completed recently, and connections made with the Monroe Telephone Company's line.

The Mirror will issue an extra edition of twenty-five hundred or more copies on August 15. It will be descriptive of East Feliciana and her resources, describing her towns, soil, farms, forests and the many advantages to the home seekers.

A rousing anti-Lottery meeting was held last week in Lafayette. The court-house was packed to its utmost capacity, and several eloquent addresses were made. Let everybody join in an enthusiastic crusade against the Lottery. We must kill it, or be killed by it.

The Lafayette Advertiser gives the following expression: "With an abundance of such delicious fruits as peaches, figs, watermelons, cantelopes, etc., and all varieties of vegetables, combined with fine crops and a delightful and healthful climate, we can not see that we have any reason to envy any other people in the world."

Every ward in every parish in this State should organize an Anti-Lottery League at every voting precinct. By making a proper organization we will most assuredly rid our State of the Lottery and wash the alluvial lands clean of its corrupting influence.—Mirror.

We are authorized by President W. S. Burke to announce that the Jefferson Davis College, of Minden, La., will give free tuition to one son or daughter of an ex-Confederate soldier from each parish in the State, the selections to be made by the different superintendents, each for his own parish. State papers please copy.—Webster Signal.

The Lake Charles American says:

The experiments made this Summer with alfalfa are demonstrating the fact that this valuable forage plant will be a great success here. The plots sown to alfalfa last spring show the plant progressing finely.

Also this:

The new court-house is nearing completion, and Contractor Robinson assures us that by August 1 the officers who have for so long "held the fort" in the old shell, by courtesy denominated a court-house, can move into the new building. But for the various changes in plan, etc., the building would have been ready for occupancy at an earlier date.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Jackson may have an ice factory of twenty-five tons capacity.

The grand jury in Vicksburg has indicted the street car company as a nuisance, the track being an obstruction to vehicles of all kinds.

The total taxable property of Jackson, both personal and real, is $2,443,272. The bonded indebtedness is $25,000 (the school building), and the rate of taxation is 13½ mills.

A judgment of $700 was recovered in the Hinds county circuit court by Dr. J. H. McKay and W. M. Campbell against the Illinois Central Railroad Company for the destruction of eight acres of strawberry plants last December, the same having been fired by a passing engine near Byram.

The New Orleans and Northwestern railroad, now running from Natchez to Rayville, where it crosses the V., S. & P., will be pushed through to Collins station, a distance of fourteen miles, where it will tap the Houston Central, Arkansas and Northern railroads, a part of the Gould system.

The First National Bank, of Greenville, sold there, on June 24, to Major R. W. Millsaps, of the Capitol State Bank, Jackson, Miss., $50,000 of Washington county court-house and jail bonds at par. A large portion of these bonds are taken for the Millsaps College at Jackson, Miss., and for the Mississippi Baptist College (Clinton, Miss.) endowment fund.

Miss Anne Walter, of Holly Springs, who is studying medicine at the Woman's Medical College in Philadelphia, received notice from the dean of the faculty several weeks since that she had "most satisfactorily passed all the examinations of the Freshman year." She has since obtained a position as assistant to Dr. Price in the College Hospital.—Clarion-Ledger.

There are over sixty candidates for office in Copiah county.—Hattiesburg Courier.

The dredgeboats of Mr. Rittenhouse Moore, the contractor for dredging the channel in the Pascagoula river, has been at work for some time, and has been doing some fine work. The channel is to be 120 feet wide, and the dredges have been carrying two cuts of 40 feet each to the depth of 10 feet. They are now making the other cut of 40 feet, and have all but about 800 yards completed. They will then go back in the bay and commence in 12 feet of water, and deepen the whole channel to 12 feet at low tide. So when we have a tide of one foot, vessels drawing 13 feet will come up to the railroad bridge with ease. It was feared for a while that the appropriation would fall short, but it now seems that it will be ample to do the work. It will be a day for rejoicing when this work is done, and it will be in a very short time.—Democrat-Star.

Corinth District Conference.

The Corinth District Conference convened in the Methodist Church at Iuka, June 25, 1891; our beloved presiding elder, Rev. W. S. Lagrone, in the chair. The attendance was large and enthusiastic. Every pastor in the district was present, and from one to four laymen from every charge. Every interest of the church was carefully looked into. The day devoted to Sunday-schools was specially profitable and enjoyable.

Special emphasis was given the circulation of our church papers and the dissemination of our own literature. Our own organ, the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, received due attention.

Bro. Bachman was present with a trunk full of our publications, and made liberal sales. Bro. Watkins, of Millsaps College, and Bro. Newell, of Grenada Collegiate Institute, were on hand looking after the interests they represent.

The Woman's Missionary Society held two services to the delight and profit of large audiences.

W. H. Reese, John E. Young, J. Y. Murray and Prof. H. A. Doan were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; G. P. Hammerley and F. E. Ray, alternates.

Iuka entertained us with hearty, generous hospitality. Our presiding elder won fresh laurels. He is a man of God, and magnifies his office.

Ruston College.

MR. EDITOR: It may interest some of your readers to hear what is being done, in this section of our State, toward educating the people. North Louisiana is very much aroused on the subject, and there are several schools of high grade along the line, or near the V., S. and P. railroad, between Monroe and Shreveport; and prominent among these is the Ruston College, which, though not a denominational, is a religious school, in whose halls the Scriptures are daily read, and the sound of sacred song and prayer is heard; and there is a fine moral and religious influence exerted by the faculty over the pupils, who, without exception, are members of some church, and are doing a fine work for the intellectual and moral training of the youth of our land. The writer thinks that this institution has shown the practical advantages of the co-education of the sexes. The average daily attendance the past session was 165, and that while there has been a general financial depression. The examinations, recitations and other exercises of the last commencement showed that faithful work had been done in all the branches taught. The essays of the five graduates reflected credit on the young ladies who read them, and the teachers who had trained them. The address of Hon. W. H. Jack, State Superintendent of Education, was one of rare merit. He boldly asserted that there was no conflict between true learning and religion, and that science only confirmed the Bible account of the creation and the history of man; and his array of arguments and facts sustained the assertion.

President Sligh, with his estimable wife and faithful corps of teachers, deserve the hearty endorsement of all lovers of education, and a liberal patronage from the people of our State.

THE LAST DAYS!

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 25 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.
This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

Briefs.

According to the statistics published by the French Cultus Ministry, the status of Protestantism in France is at present as follows: Reformed Church, 540,000; Lutheran Church, 75,000; the United Church at Algiers, 9,733; Free Churches, 6,000; various sects, 4,000; not on the official list, 15,000; total, 679,733.

The totals of missions in China are: Thirty-nine societies, 526 male missionaries and 597 women—total, 1,123 missionaries; 162 native ordained helpers, 1,278 unordained, 34,555 communicants in the churches, and 14,817 pupils in school. Forty-four thousand dollars were contributed by the churches the past year, and the net increase in membership was 2,295.

Emigration statistics covering arrivals at all ports of the United States for the month of May, from all foreign countries, except Canada and Mexico, show an increase of 3,000 over those of the same time last year. The total arrivals were 85,941, of which Great Britain and Ireland furnish 20,860; Germany, 16,490; Austria, 11,751; Italy, 14,454. The gain is almost wholly from Italy, which increases her emigration to this country by 2,894 over the same month last year.

"So teach us to number our days, that we may get us an heart of wisdom." This prayer of the man of God teaches us that what is worth praying for is worth trying for. All the sighs and supplications in the world will not bring wisdom into the heart that fills itself with folly every day; nor mercy into the heart that sinks itself daily in sin; nor usefulness into the life that is spent in vanity and uselessness. The heart of wisdom for which he prays is the thing after all—"With all thy getting, get wisdom."

The New York World:

The pension list of the United States on May 31 contained 630,394 names. This exceeds by 135,000 the peace establishment of the German army. The cost of the pension list for this year will be $130,000,000. This exceeds, by nearly $50,000,000, the cost of the great standing army of Germany. The pension disbursements on this basis represent a public debt of over $4,000,000,000 at three per cent. The highest point reached by the bonded war debt was only $2,700,000. After twenty-five years of debt-paying, unexampled in the history of nations, the United States are now burdened with $17,000,000 more annually for interest on the war debt and for pensions than they were in 1866.

A writer in the Christian Observer, speaking of Sam Jones at Chattanooga, says:

His ministry here was like a dashing, driving rain, accompanied by a storm of wind. The rain was greatly needed; but after it is over the wind has torn down and destroyed so much that the blessing of the storm was a modified one.

A True Little Story.

She was a beautiful woman—a Southern belle. The breezes that moaned through the pines had toyed with her raven tresses. The briny waves of the Gulf had laved her beautiful feet. The healthful airs of the prairies had tinged her cheeks with a delicate bronze. The light duties of household exercise had knit her lithe form into an incarnation of symmetry and grace. Her charming society was sought by many admirers. Her winning ways, her sparkling intelligence, her modest mein, her liquid eyes, her rippling voice, enraptured all acquaintances. The genius of a Southern clime sung her praises in strains of exquisite poesy. Brave men laid down their lives in defense of her honor. By some strange hallucination, thrown over her mind by an evil spirit, she was decoyed into a great, dark forest. Friends became alarmed at her prolonged absence. Acquaintances shuddered to think of what might be her fate. Runners in hot haste posted in every direction in search of the lost beauty. Anxiety grew more anxious. Fear became more fearful. Alarm grew more alarming. Just when the tension of feeling could bear the strain no longer, word came that the lost was found. All eyes were turned and all feet sped away in that direction. But, horror of horrors, what a sight! Reclining gracefully under the shade of a giant live-oak lay the beautiful one; but a huge vampire had fastened his beak into her white throat, and struck his claws into her snowy bosom, and, with his great wings gently fanning her cheeks to lull her to repose, was greedily drawing the life current down into his thirsty maw. What could be done? What ought to be done in such an emergency? Hurried consultations were held as to the best and speediest means of rescue. Then it was that the voice of a former admirer and so-called friend was heard pleading for gentle means to rid the beautiful woman of the devouring monster: "Be gentle, don't get excited, don't stir up strife with that terrible vampire."

The story ends here. Reader, do you recognize the picture? Is is realistic enough for you? That beautiful woman is Louisiana. That vampire is the Lottery. That so-called friend is the Lottery press. In such a case, has the vampire any right to mercy? Has the press, which helped to place this venomous beast at Louisiana's throat, and is using all its power to keep it there sucking her life blood away, any right to counsel peace? "What peace, so long as the whoredoms of this Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many"?

Louisiana Educational Association Notes.

The eighth Annual Convention of the Educational Association of this State has for some weeks been before the public eye on the paper of its hand-bills. Attracted by the alluring promises of its advertisements, I, a teacher, was led to determine that as soon as the school term closed I would betake myself to the quiet retreat where the conclave was to be held and partake of the opportunities for information thereby guaranteed; at the same time facility would be afforded for renewing my acquaintance with the good people of North Louisiana.

The place of holding was advertised to be Ruston, the young, but unanimously conceded, metropolis of its section. This rising town has received, and meritoriously, too, the title of the "City of Conventions." And surely its past record justifies the applicability of the name. Its hospitable people are full of local pride. They maintain this good reputation by flinging wide open the doors of their beautiful homes to all visitors. If any of your readers desires an object-lesson in true hospitality and genial companionship, let him pay his fare to Ruston.

Arriving at my destination late in the evening of the twenty-third, I had little chance to get a well-defined idea of the lay of the land. I had but time to betake myself to quarters, have a few words with old friends, and then retire to dream of the events of the coming morrow.

Wednesday morning, the time fixed for the opening of the convention, dawned bright and clear. You are fully aware, no doubt, of what a bright and clear June morn usually portends. This formed no exception. Accompanying the brightness was the inevitable heat; along with the clearness came the sultriness of the real summer day.

The site for the day sessions was set to be the Chautauqua Tabernacle; and a more fit situation one could scarcely find. This is located within the grounds of the Louisiana Chautauqua Assembly, about a mile and a quarter from the town. Visitors are conveyed thither in carriages, buggies, tallyhoes, wagonettes, carts and farm wagons, or on ponies and foot. The route of these varied modes of journeying offers a parallel to them in its ever-changingness. The road has a compound motion—the first, a vertical, now struggling up hill, now rushing down hollow; the second, a lateral, now bending to the right around corners of fields, now to the left through pleasant lanes. Viewed from a seat in the clouds, one would be reminded of the sinuosities of a mighty serpent dragging his lingering length along. The "lingering" part can be best appreciated by one who has traversed it in a spring*less* wagon.

The selection of the site for the building set apart for the auditorium was especially opportune. Located, as it is, on the top of a large mound of iron-impregnated sand, it commands immediate attention for itself, and is, at the same time, the point from which the most comprehensive view of the whole grounds may be obtained. The building itself is, in form, a huge tent; in construction, a veritable temple. In shape it is circular, with no closing in except at the rear of the rostrum; as to acoustics, its equal is difficult to recollect; its ventilation is most abundant; its size sufficient to seat, with every degree of comfort, fifteen hundred persons. In fine, it is a model for buildings constructed for such purposes, and reflects great credit upon its designer. They that profess to know say that it far surpasses other assembly buildings.

But the grounds around deserve some attention. To the left of the building and somewhat to the rear are the waterworks of the place. These consist of copious springs of cool, sparkling water, gushing out of the sides of the hills that wall in a meandering brooklet. The water of these springs is strongly impregnated with iron. I suppose it is on this ground that some sanguine citizen has prophesied a brilliant manufacturing future for Ruston. Though by no means certain, I have somehow become imbued with the idea that this characteristic of the soil may have had something to do with the naming of the town hard by. Its primitive form was probably Ruston-the-hills; but what car porter could ever intelligently announce that to a passenger? Probably it was for the sake of that dusky nabob, and out of tender mercy to the poor, inoffensive traveler, that the last two syllables were excommunicated.

But to return to the springs—as I assure you many were wont to do, in the midst of some pedagogue's dry lecture—what delightful retreat from Sol's penetrating rays! One or two of these fountains of nature's building have been furnished with seats conveniently placed, inviting to quiet meditation the contemplative professor, and to listless ease, or, perhaps, still quieter dreaming, the charming young "school-marm." And to the amorous mind, if it were possible to find such shallowness of sentiment in conjunction with such profundity of intellect, what an opportunity was afforded by these "umbrageous grots and caves of cool recess!" I am inclined to believe that this one, at least, of nature's kind provisions is not wholly contemned, even by the mind rendered staid and sedate by the matter-of-fact experiences of a teacher's humdrum life.

I dwell somewhat on the location, because this place is to be the center of gravity for the school teachers of our State. This is the home of the Louisiana Chautauqua, which is the two-year-old child of the Louisiana Educational Association. What a wonderful child! The children of men do well if after decades of unceasing toil they can extend a hospitable roof to a parent; but glowing enthusiasm, backed up by most strenuous effort, is not of such slow growth. The northern section of our beloved, but behindhand State is fully alive to its needs and fully determined to meet them. When the Educational Association came to Ruston, it met its youthful offspring eager to receive its mother, rich in achievements and all aglow with the ruddy flush of hopeful expectancy. Let the Chautauqua manifest the same devotion and industry in the long future as it has done in its short past, and ere the century closes, it, too, shall boast an offspring the peer of any, when Louisiana's youth, roused out of their sleep of ignorance, and invigorated by the inspiration implanted by this movement, will rise in the plane of intellectual strength and call it alma mater.

As to the convention in its workings and results, I have, perhaps, little to say. I might copy you out the programme, which would be as needless as uninteresting, for the telegram of the daily paper outstrips in speed the mail bag of the weekly. I might give you a digestion of all that was said and done; but at the same time I would present to you and your readers a well-developed case of mental *in*digestion. Believing that it is perfectly futile to attempt to measure the results of any great deliberating body's actions by printer's ink, I forbear making the attempt. The stimulus given to advancing thought and the enthusiasm that was engendered in behalf of higher moral and intellectual culture by the earnestness and eloquence of the different speakers that addressed the convention, are not to be gauged by the number of strokes the reporter's pencil makes. Lines of paper can not be commensurate with lines of mental activity.

Undoubtedly the question upon all lips is, "Was the convention a success?" The answer is just as undoubtedly, "Yes." And the new zeal of the teachers, their more widened view of ways and means, and, above all, their better work for the coming session will but reiterate the answer a thousand times.

The public school, the sole guarantee of our nation's perpetuity, was the inspiration of every essay. The inculcation of manners and morals in the minds and hearts of the children was the watchword that passed from the chief superintendent all along the line to the humblest instructor. Education—that mysterious term—received its true definition. Look at its etymology; it means a leading out. Here's the true sense. For a series of ages the idea has been that education meant to put in. The doctrine was, "Cram the head full of an ill-arranged, conglomerated, uncorrelated set of dry facts, paste the first two letters of the alphabet upon your boy and send him forth as a college graduate." Verily, he has but the first two letters of the great alphabet of life, and scarcely knows them well! The light of this century's glory has revealed our utter calamity; but it uncovers also the way of escape. Don't try to put anything into your boy's head. If there is nothing there, there never will be, and your boy is not a fit subject for education. The method is from within to without. The true design of education is to bring out the mind, to develop the intellect. The work of teacher and parent is only to direct what means shall best subserve this purpose. Whatever will make the child think the brightest and most ennobling thoughts, that is the best mental pabulum, be it books, birds or blossoms. This is the true doctrine. The Louisiana Educational Association preaches it with a fearless voice. May it exist long enough to enforce it upon every citizen from palace to poor-house! Then, perhaps, long after her promoters have received their reward, its mission will be accomplished—Louisiana will have been educated.

That Egg Box.

It is a missionary egg box in a Sunday-school. It came to pass on this wise. Some one—a young person—suggested that a box be put in a proper place, and that every Sunday morning all the members of the Sunday-school, especially the children, bring an egg apiece to be put in that box as a contribution to missions. Two dozen eggs, more or less, every week. Twenty cents a week in that way for missions.

This scribe found that egg nest under Ques. 3 in the Quarterly Conference held at Mt. Pleasant, last Saturday, on Columbus circuit. The preacher in charge, Bro. F. P. Spencer, hesitated to mention so small a thing, and did so to commend its use for training the children to give.

The venerable superintendent of that school, George W. Vaughn, greatly enjoyed his own surprise at seeing what seemed so insignificant a thing as an egg a week per scholar rise to such measures of value in the consideration which the Quarterly Conference takes of its Sunday-school work. All are trained in systematic giving, all are taught that gathering the littles will make the large, the useful and adequate; all see that "where there's a will there's a way," and those who can do but little are encouraged to do that.

My mind began to calculate. Twenty-four eggs each Sunday, twenty cents for missions. Twenty times fifty-two, ten hundred and forty cents; ten dollars and forty cents a year for missions from a small Sunday-school in the country. Allow four hundred Sunday-schools in the North Mississippi Conference, with the same average number of scholars, by the same method we shall have $4,160. What is done in this case with eggs can be done in other cases with other things. There are few who can not give something in littles that will bring money for the Lord's use.

So also a thoughtful care on the part of the people, to send their preacher small contributions to his domestic needs, would often be a great help to him and no privation to them. Why not do so? I am sure that the example herein referred to will bear much good fruit.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

The St. Louis Advocate, photograp... ing the church papers, says of us:

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is o... of the most conservative and dignifi... of the Southern Methodist Advoc... family.

We confess that we have been a "l... tle skittish" of that word "dignifie... ever since we heard Sam Jones s... "The most dignified thing in the wor... is a corpse."

The Picayune declares, editorially, th... it is "not in line with fanatics." As t... The Presbyterian, in a forceful arti... cle on "The Gambling Mania," use... these words to the Christian people o... the land:

The time has come for ... an intelligent, steady and fearless war-fare upon a sin which threatens social ... and national life to an alarming degree.

A Methodist Home.

It was recently suggested in an editorial of this paper that there was great need for a Methodist Home near New Orleans. There is an increasing interest in this matter. A friend has suggested it is possible to obtain a few acres of land near New Orleans, free of cost, on which to begin this enterprise. The object of such a home is to provide a healthy place where widows, orphans, sick, helpless inebriates and unemployed persons can be provided homes where they could be cared for and, so far as able, earn their livelihood; where dependent incurables could find a resting-place, and children could be educated under Methodist teachers. It has been thought each of our churches in New Orleans might take a part of the land and build its own home, or school, or hospital thereon, but the whole affair to be under the direction of a superintendent and matron appointed by this District Conference.

Anyone wishing to aid in this effort, either by suggestions or money, will please send same to Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., or to Rev. Dr. C. F. Evans, P. E., or to Rev. W. H. LaPrade, or to Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens, D. D., or other city pastors, care of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Personal and Otherwise.

We are again compelled to state that this ADVOCATE has never published obituary poetry. Don't send it here. This is a rule we will not break.

The Holston Methodist has enlarged itself beautifully. We rejoice in the ability of the management to do that thing. We are hoping in the same direction.

Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., of Vanderbilt University, gave us a pleasant call last week, on his way to Georgetown, Texas, where he is to deliver several addresses.

We had a pleasant call from President Hunnicutt, Monday. He reports that at the Vicksburg District Conference, at Fayette, he got $875 in cash and notes for the endowment of Centenary College.

G. D. Shands, Dr. J. W. Sharp, Rev. W. H. Eckles and P. T. Callicutt were elected delegates, and Dr. A. A. Young and J. D. Baker, alternates, to the Annual Conference from the Sardis District, North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. P. Howard, our pastor at Greensburg, La., will have a month's vacation visiting friends at Little Rock, Ark. This is the first vacation in thirty-three years. His wife accompanies him, and we wish them a pleasant time.

Rev. Geo. E. Horr, Jr., for two years assistant editor of The Watchman, has been chosen editor-in-chief, as successor to Rev. John W. Olmstead, D. D., the failure of whose health compels him to retire from the position he has so long occupied.

The following gentlemen were elected delegates to the Annual Conference from the Jackson district, Mississippi Conference: Major R. W. Millsaps, Capt. E. C. Postell, Hon. D. Bunch, J. T. H. Laird; Peter James and J. W. Ratliff, alternates.

Rev. J. J. Wheat, D. D., presiding elder of the Sardis district, North Mississippi Conference, has about fully recovered his health, and he is filling all his appointments and performing all his work with great acceptability and power since April, last. He looks to be as stout, and claims to be about as well, as for some years past.

The ministers and other Christian workers of America are to have a rare opportunity during the months of July and August to hear two of the most eminent preachers of Great Britain. Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, Scotland, who has come into prominence so rapidly in that country and exerted such a widespread influence among the ministers, is to be at the Bible Institute, in Chicago, from about July 10 to August 15. Immediately following him, Rev. F. E. Meyer, of London, England, will speak at the Institute through the remainder of the month of August. Mr. Moody sends out a cordial invitation to all Christian workers to spend their vacation listening to these able men. There is no charge for attendance upon the lectures. Further information can be had from R. A. Torrey, 80 W. Pearson street, Chicago, Ill.

Anyone in the market for window shades will do well to read the prices quoted by Heath, Schwartz & Co., Lim., in this issue.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. T. W. Lewis writes: "We have just closed a week's meeting at Greenville, Miss. The church was greatly revived, and three were added to the church—all young men. Rev. C. H. Owen did the preaching, and it was done in the power of the Holy Spirit, and in great demonstration. Our people will not soon forget those sermons."

—Bro. Downer writes from Ellisville, Miss.: "Our protracted meeting began at night, June 17, and continued till noon of the twenty-ninth. Rev. Joe T. Nicholson did nearly all the preaching. Our whole community has been profoundly stirred. Baptists and Presbyterians gave the meeting their hearty support. Many say it is the most satisfactory meeting ever held here. Six accessions; never ascertained the conversions. Let time indicate that. Our experience meetings were delightful. No tedious recitals; all fresh and crisp. Very few tongue-tied; all wanted to talk. The message delivered by Bro. Nicholson was clear, incisive, and full of the spirit of the Master. Edwards may lose their preacher next Conference. Ellisville has been captivated. The whole circuit is in good condition. Family prayers and prayer meetings abound."

—Rev. H. P. Lewis writes: "Benton has been favored of late. The Sunday-school Convention for Yazoo county met here June 19 and 20. Nearly all the Sunday-schools in the county were represented. There are about twenty-five or thirty Sunday-schools in the county; most of them doing well. The convention was the best; most interesting of any that has been held here before. The interest is increasing all the time. We have on the Benton charge over 200 names enrolled. Average attendance, good. On Sunday, June 28, Bro. R. J. Jones, of Yazoo City, gave us a stirring sermon on 'Parental Responsibility.' The sermon did me good. On Monday night, June 22, Bros. Morehead and Newell, of the North Mississippi Conference, were with us. Bro. Newell preached a telling sermon on 'Prayer,' which was listened to by a good crowd with much interest. God bless all the brethren! Our second quarterly meeting was held, June 27 and 28, at New Hope. Bro. Little, our presiding elder, gave us two good sermons. A large number of people, young and old, communed on Sunday. We are hoping and praying for a revival."

—Rev. J. M. Johnston writes from Big Cane: "We have had threatening times on the Big Cane and Mellville work ever since our arrival, about the first of January. First we had rain much of the time through January and February; then we were threatened with overflow; next the dry weather, which retarded the farming interest. But now all these conflicting circumstances have passed off, with the following results: We have had our parsonage much improved in appearance, both inside and out. We also have 25,000 shingles at our church door in Big Cane, which will be used next week in the way of giving our church a new roof, and then will come the finishing up of the inside by ceiling and painting, which will give Big Cane a beautiful and desirable house of worship. Last, but not least, on last Thursday evening, while quietly resting in our little room, we heard the sound of distant thunder. Wife desired that I should attend to a little needed work in the garden before the rain came, which I started to do. But, lo! I did not get far before the rain began; and what do you think it rained? For the shower not only fell on the outside, but it came inside, and our larder was overflowed with just such things as are necessary to gladden the heart of preacher and family. For all of which the good sisters and friends of Big Cane have our thanks. Now, if we can have a much more needed outpouring of the Divine Spirit upon our people, we shall be rejoiced in a much higher sense, and I feel that we shall have it before the year closes. Health of our people good, crop prospect very flattering."

—Rev. J. R. Whittington writes: "Our second quarterly meeting for this (Meadville) circuit, Mississippi Conference, has come and gone, but leaves many pleasant reflections behind. Rev. John A. Ellis, our beloved presiding elder, was on hand; the dates being June 20 and 21. Saturday was Children's Day, and a splendid day we had. All the pupils acquitted themselves well, which reflected honor upon the superintendent and teachers. The presiding elder took the preacher's place, and gave the children a splendid and practical talk, which made a good impression. The collection amounted to $5.15. We have observed this day at three of our churches, and realized from all $15.35. We have six wide-awake Sunday-schools and 210 pupils enrolled. When we came on the work we found two, and about 60 pupils; no prayer meeting, but now we have three, and one class meeting—all doing well. My predecessor has done a very fine work in building two new churches. This circuit is fast coming to the front as a first-class work. It paid last year about $300 to the preacher and $80 on all the Conference claims. This year the Board of Stewards made the preacher's salary $500; one-third paid. For all the Conference claims we are assessed $156—all in hand now except about $12. And I want to say right here we are making grand strides. We will open our batteries in the way of a protracted meeting, Thursday before the second Sunday in July, and we are praying God to give us power to storm and drive Satan from the last ditch. All of which I will soon report to you, Mr. Editor, before a great while."

A Card.

We wish to say to the friends of Rev. Thos. Price that the "appeal" made in his behalf, signed "A Friend," published in last issue of the ADVOCATE, was unnecessary and in opposition to the wishes and views of his nearer friends. In justice to ourselves, and to relieve any uneasiness on the part of his friends, we would say that he has no special trouble more than bodily infirmity, and his life is peaceful and happy.

FREE LITERATURE.

The contributions to secure another edition of Dr. Carradine's pamphlet on the Louisiana Lottery Company continue to increase, as is shown by the following:

Previously contributed	$56 00
Received by Rev. F. D. Van Vulkenburgh since last issue of this paper	27 50
	$78 50

Balance required to get out the book, about $250.

From Seven Thousand Dollars to Twenty-One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixty-Three Dollars.

Twenty-one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three dollars has just been paid by The Mutual Life Insurance Company on an original $7,000 insurance policy.

A result never equaled or even approached by any other company in the world. The fortunate assured was Mr. Charles Dellinger, of Mobile, Ala., who was forty-one years old when he became a member of the company.

RECAPITULATION.

1—Cash value of the dividends 100 per cent. of premiums.

2—Additions to policy 143 per cent. of premiums.

3—Insurance paid 312 per cent. of original amount.

4—Investment, 3 per cent. compound interest.

5—Insured 44 years, from age 41 to age 85.

6—No taxes, care or expense connected with the insurance.

Remember this company is purely mutual; all profits belong to the members. It is also the largest and most profitable company in the world. Mr. T. H. Bowles is the general agent, 120 Common street, New Orleans, La.

Two Obstacles.

It is strange that the second blessing theory was taught by the Wesleys, and endorsed by the founders of Methodism generally, and is retained in our new and carefully prepared and compiled hymn book, and the question is put by our Bishops to every class for ordination, "Do you expect to be made perfect in this life?" and is answered in every case in the affirmative; yet when a preacher professes it he becomes a target for the whole church, except those claiming the same, and subjects himself to the most merciless and uncharitable criticism, especially by his brother ministers. As Rev. W. B. Palmore said recently in relating his experience: "Some will say now that I am just converted." This seems to us inconsistent and contradictory. Why not rejoice with a brother when he claims to have been cleansed from all sin as we rejoice with a new convert professing the new birth? Why not, we ask, when we claim it as a Bible doctrine and a doctrine of our church?

This inconsistency, we term it, is a great obstacle in our way. Time and again our mind has been well nigh settled upon the subject, when some preacher would talk us entirely out of it.

Another obstacle in our way is the great inconsistency upon the part of many professing it. Some we have known to stand up publicly and declare themselves free from any inclination to sin, never losing temper, etc., when at the same time it was known that they were irritable in temper, and very intolerant towards others holding different views, declaring all such to be on their way to hell, and becoming furiously mad at the thought of it. Instead of having a sweeter temper, and leading a more consistent and godly life, they seem to have become much worse than before. This is obstacle number two.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

IT PAYS.

BY ANNA E. THEAT.

It pays to wear a smiling face
And laugh our troubles down,
For all our little trials wait
Our laughter or our frown.
Beneath the magic of a smile
Our doubts will fade away,
As melts the frost in early spring
Beneath the sunny ray.

It pays to make a worthy cause,
By helping it, our own;
To give the current of our lives
A true and noble tone.
It pays to comfort heavy hearts,
Oppressed with dull despair,
And leave in sorrow-darkened lives
One gleam of brightness there.

It pays to give a helping hand
To eager, earnest youth,
To note, with all their waywardness,
Their courage and their truth;
To strive, with sympathy and love,
Their confidence to win;
It pays to open wide the heart
And "let the sunshine in."

—Good Cheer.

MR. EDITOR: I am a girl fourteen years old, and this is my first letter. I did not see any letters from the young folks from this country, so I thought I would write. I have five brothers and four sisters, and we go to Sunday-school. My mother takes the dear old ADVOCATE, and I enjoy reading the cousins' letters very much. Bro. H. Mellard is our pastor for the second year. We all like him very much. Bro. Hicks is our superintendent. He has gone back on us. Please help us pray for him. Sister Lizzie Howes is my teacher, and I like her very much. My father and mother and two sisters and I belong to the Methodist Church. I hope my letter won't reach the waste-basket.

Your new friend,
JANIE WELLS.

Tangipahoa, La.

MR. EDITOR: As my grandpa, Capt. G. W. McDuffie, is a member of the M. E. Church, South, and a subscriber to your valuable paper, I thought I would write to you. My papa used to know you a long time ago, when he lived in Bastrop, La., and he thinks so much of you. We live on a farm, and I have my pet chickens and four of the prettiest little white puddle ducks you ever saw. I did have thirteen, but the old hens killed the others. I hope you will be so kind as to publish this in your paper. If you will be so kind as to publish this, I will write and tell you of the news of the Oak Ridge neighborhood.

Your little friend,
NETTIE T. TRAYLOR.

Oak Ridge, La.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to your paper, I thought I would write now. I have three sisters and three brothers. I study third reader and first arithmetic and first spelling book. I am ten years old. We have a little pet rabbit, and he eats cabbage, lettuce, bread and most anything you give him. One little sister is named Clara Chrisman for the missionary. She is sick now. Well, I must close, wishing my letter to be printed, as it is my first.

Your friend,
HELEN RICHARDSON.

Dogs Blow the Bellows.

In a blacksmith shop in New York three dogs are employed to blow the bellows, doing in this way the work of two men. There is a large wheel, the iron band of which is about three feet wide. In this the dog runs, his weight and motion turning the wheel which moves the bellows and keeps the fire bright. At seven in the morning Jack, the dog who has been at the work the longest, springs into the wheel and starts with a fast dog-trot on his journey for nowhere. We would think it discouraging to run fast and yet stay in the same spot; but these dogs do not seem to mind it. Jack works for just an hour; then Bobby comes to take his turn. He does not own a Waterbury, but must have some method of his own for telling time, as he is always on hand when wanted. After Bobby has worked an hour Spot comes in for his share of the work, and then Jack, having had two hours' rest, relieves Spot at ten o'clock. The blacksmith, when asked how he came to think of using dogs for this work, said he learned his trade in Wurtemburg, Germany, and dogs were used there. Jack, Bobby and Spot are all English hunting dogs. At first Jack did all the work, then Bobby was brought to help, but Spot was hired by Jack and Bobby, and not by the blacksmith! This is what the blacksmith says about it:

"He came around here one cold winter's day two years ago and snuffed around outside the door, until Jack noticed him and ran out to him. Bobby noticed the two rubbing noses together, and he jumped off the wheel and ran out to inspect the stranger also. Whether they found a long-lost brother or not, I don't know, but Spot came into the shop with them, and while Bobby jumped back on the wheel, Jack took the tramp to his own particular corner near the forge, and soon after I saw them gnawing a bone quite friendly like. Spot has been here ever since. For a time after he came he would watch Jack and Bobby curiously, and then one day I put him on the wheel. He knew at once what was expected of him, and did his turn well, too. Ever after he stood his trick at the wheel."

It is not very strange that dogs can be taught to do such work; but it does seem remarkable that they should know when to come to work, for during their two hours off they play about the neighborhood. One day Jack was harnessed by some children to a wagon and they were having a jolly time driving him. But all at once he started pell-mell for the shop and rushed in, banging the wagon after him, followed by a group of excited children. He was not "mad," neither was he tired of play, but his hour for work had come, and he proposed to be on hand whatever the consequences to the chariot or the children.—New York Advocate.

A CHILD'S FAITH.—Some weeks ago the writer lost his little girl; previous to that my brother was very sick with typhoid fever.

Mother is a very devoted Christian, and while my brother was sick she had care of his children.

Ralph, the five-year-old boy, heard her pray for my brother's recovery.

After my baby died, Ralph told father, "If grandma had been at Uncle Fred's, little Nellie wouldn't have died." When asked why, he said: "When papa was sick, grandma prayed for him, and Jesus let him get well. If grandma had been at Uncle Fred's, she could have prayed for Nellie, and she would have got well."

Teacher—You must not come to school any more, Tommy, until your mother has recovered from the small-pox. Tommy—There aint a bit of danger. She aint going to give me the small-pox. Teacher—Why, how's that? Tommy—She's my stepmother. She never gives me anything.

"What makes you so late coming to school this morning?" asked Mr. Leonard, a teacher in one of the New York public schools, to a tardy pupil. "They arrested a burglar in Fifty-eighth street, and ma sent me to the station-house to see if it was pa," was the reply.

HOUSEHOLD.

Scientific Cooking.

Cookery is an exact science. The fundamental principles are the same all over the world. Certain manipulations and conditions will bring certain results. It is not until the American woman learns the simple principles governing healthful cookery and digestion that we shall have food so prepared that health, mental vigor and good character shall be the rule throughout the country. This condition can only come with the introduction of the science of cookery into all the schools, public and private; for no woman is so rich, and none so poor, that this knowledge is not of prime importance to her when she comes to make a home for herself and others, or to assist in the making of a home for some one else. Far too many girls and women who go into domestic service, it may be said in passing, forget what a power they have to contribute towards the happiness of the household.

A few schools, both private and public, are teaching cookery; but so far as my knowledge goes, there is none that teaches in connection with cookery the principles of digestion. The first principles of both digestion and cookery can be so taught that a child of ten or twelve years can easily understand them. For many years the New York Cooking School taught hundreds of poor children, per annum, the simplest forms of cookery. These children carry the exact methods of doing certain things into their homes, and into the homes of others when they go out to service. They are also taught the reasons why the methods they follow are the best. A lady who took one of these girls for a servant told me she was unexpectedly left alone with the child, and a member of her family being taken ill, she could not attend to the cooking herself, and asked the girl, Lizzie, if she could cook a beefsteak.

"Yes," said she, "I learned in the cooking school."

The lady passed through the kitchen some moments later while Lizzie was broiling the meat, and was surprised to hear her counting, as if she were practicing a music lesson. The steak was in a double broiler, which Lizzie held over the coals. "One, two, three, four," said the child, over and over again; turning the broiler each time she reached four. Well, the steak came to the table perfectly cooked, and when the mistress asked Lizzie how she knew it was done, the answer was that it was to be cooked ten minutes if an inch thick, and that she was to turn it every time she counted four. Of course there had been many other things taught the child in regard to the fire, seasoning, care to have the dishes hot, etc., which contributed, as a whole, to make the steak so appetizing; but here was a child taken from one of the poorest tenements in New York, who could cook a steak more scientifically than hundreds of educated housekeepers throughout the country, simply because she was taught exact principles, and followed the teaching to the letter.

This is where the French housekeeper excels. She does not attempt as much as her American sister. Her bread, pastry, and dessert, as a rule, she buys; her soups, meats, vegetables, etc., she prepares on scientific principles. There is no waste of material or fuel. For generations the French woman has been taught how to do the simple things well. There is no haphazard work there. To get the most out of everything, to prepare and serve the food in the most nutritious, healthful, and artistic ways, and to partake of it in the most sensible manner, all these things are second nature to the French woman, be she mistress or maid.—Maria Parloa, in Ledger.

Robust English Women
owe their health to much outdoor life and physical exercise. In our Southern climate during the protracted summer, the broiling sun forbids exposure, but the use of Creole Female Tonic will be found of great service in all cases of female weakness, debility, suppression and prostration.

God made both tears and laughter, and both for kind purposes; for as laughter enables mirth and surprise to breathe freely, so tears enable sorrow to vent itself patiently. Tears hinder sorrow from becoming despair and madness, and laughter is one of the very privileges of reason, being confined to the human species.—Anon.

Ancient Fireplaces on the Ohio.

The ancient fireplaces at Blue Banks and other places on the Ohio river near Portsmouth are described by Mr. T. H. Lewis as being of three different classes. Those on the lower levels only show a burned streak of clay from five to eight feet in diameter, with but a slight concavity, on which are found ashes, charcoal, burned stones, and bones, with an occasional fragment of pottery, composed of broken stone and clay. Many of them, at the level of twenty feet from the surface, where they are most numerous, are from one to three feet deep, and are lined with flat stones. The clay outside of the stones bears evidence of intense heat. In some instances they are nearly filled with ashes and charcoal. The pottery within them is composed of shell and clay. At a higher level, the fireplaces, while not so numerous, are more interesting, because more or less fire relics are obtained from them. They are only slightly concave, and mixed with the ashes are stones broken by the action of fire, bones of various kinds, arrow-heads, drills, stone and hematite celts, stone pipes, perforated stones called shuttles, and much broken pottery. These places seem to have been occupied at different times, and also by different tribes or nations. The first occupants used stone in the manufacture of their pottery. They were succeeded by others who used shells, and these in their turn gave way to people using stone. The latter seem to have occupied the ground for only a brief period, and then to have been displaced by others using shell. In the adjoining field, however, both kinds of pottery are found intermingled. It is Mr. Lewis' opinion that the people of these fireplaces antedated the residence of the mound-builders in their neighborhood by many centuries, because the works of that race, themselves very ancient, are found on the surface above them. The fireplaces occur at various levels, from near the top of the bank to thirty feet below. At one point they were visible at seventeen different levels. They are exposed to view by the caving off of banks at high water. A somewhat similar series of fireplaces or ovens was described in the American Association by Prof. Putnam as observed on the banks of the Little Miami river.—Popular Science Monthly.

Mistake of Architects.

In the search for the beautiful, the demand for impressive facades, the taste for complicated ornament, and a most singular appreciation of the odd, the grotesque, and the ugly, there is little attention paid to matters which seem self-evident and are of really vital importance. Windows are arranged to suit a symmetrical facade, whether they are just what are needed for the rooms or not, and even where it is possible, little attention is given to the direction of the sunlight in order that the living rooms may receive the full benefit of the natural warmth, nor are those rooms where it is not needed, or minor offices, relegated to the exposed side. The most important external feature, the door, is seldom adjusted to the climate.

Even in large office buildings, hotels, and churches, where they should be ample space for every structural convenience, the door is frequently of cramped dimensions, and instead of being preceded by a porch, which would be an integral part of the architecture, and which is absolutely essential in our long, cold, damp winters, is bourded up with "storm doors," that are not only hideous in design, but an actual obstruction. With the rapid increase in the value of land which has taken place in all our large cities in late years, a wild fear lest any inch be wasted has resulted in a compactness of plan that is frequently painful. The housekeeper longs for the roomy closets and ample storerooms of the old buildings; the fine hall that once formed imposing and appropriate entrance has given place to the narrow entry through which it is frequently impossible to carry the larger articles of furniture.

The same difficulty is experienced in the sharp, frequent turns which characterize so many stairways. Bed-rooms are pushed into corners where they seldom have the benefit of pure, free air and the heat of the sun, for no other reason than that space is required for ample reception-rooms and state apartments, which, though used comparatively seldom, are treated as the most important part of the house.—The Telegram.

A Life Saved!
READ THE TWO STATEMENTS.
An Extraordinary Case!

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 22, 1890.
Last April I was attacked with Chagres Fever in Spanish Honduras and was given up to die by two physicians. During that spell and since I have used a pound of quinine and quantities of other medicines without any benefit. From three to four days out of every week I have been down and have suffered untold agonies. Between these spells I could scarcely walk more than two blocks at a time. I did not expect to live through the coming winter. Ten days ago I commenced using Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. I have had no fever since. All the symptoms have entirely disappeared. I have no pain or trouble of any kind. Am gaining strength very fast. Can walk miles at a time. My sudden and rapid improvement is simply wonderful. Germetuer has been a God-send to me. I can not say too much in its praise. Any who wish to do so may call on me. DANIEL PATTON,
481 Jersey Street.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1891.
My improvement continued, and soon after writing the above statement I was able to go to work and have been working ever since. My health is now perfect. I never felt better in my life. I give this testimony gladly, because I know that Germetuer saved my life.
DANIEL PATTON.

Chagres Fever is known to be not only a most dangerous form of sickness, but also very difficult to cure. Germetuer has been tried on a number of cases. In every known instance it has cured quickly and completely. It has a similar record as a remedy for Swamp Fever and Malarial troubles of all kinds. Properly used, it is the quickest and most unfailing remedy for Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Debility, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Dysentery and all diseases of the Blood and Skin.
These claims are sustained by evidences from thousands of the best people in the country, and the evidences multiply in our midst every day.
For sale by druggists and country merchants, and at the Germetuer office, 202 Canal St., New Orleans. For full information, circulars, etc., call on or address Kit Williams, Agent, 202 Canal St. $1 bottle; six bottles for $5.

OBITUARIES.

PERKINS—Sister MARY B. PERKINS was born at Greenwood, Heary county, Va., June 13, 1808. She was the seventh child of Patrick Henry and Mary Fontaine. At the age of twenty-one she was married to Jesse Perkins, of Virginia. By this marriage she became the mother of six children—five of whom survive her. Her husband died in November, 1872.

As a mother, she was solicitous, tender and affectionate, ever maintaining the character she would stamp upon her children.

Sister Perkins came with her husband from Virginia to Mississippi in 1835, and settled in Madison county, where she spent the remainder of a long life. As a neighbor, she was held in highest esteem. With guarded tongue and sympathizing heart, she was ever ready to befriend the needy. Her life was not without many deeds of charity. She loved the association of neighbors and the company of young people.

In her was found our ideal of the beautiful and good, viz.: a cultivated mind and heart. Added to her brilliant native intellect, she possessed in a large measure the finer graces of her sex. She was a woman of culture. She was charming in conversation. Her information was extensive and of the most accurate kind. In her conversation were flashes of wit and eloquence akin to that of her immortal kinsman, Patrick Henry. Her intellect was never clouded to the last. Perhaps the most distinguished trait of Sister Perkins' character was her deep reverence for God and his word and love for his cause.

She was converted and joined the Methodist Church at the age of fifteen, perhaps, under the ministry of Rev. Joseph Traylor, of Virginia. At the time of her death she was probably the oldest Methodist in Mississippi, having been in communion with that church for sixty-eight years. Of deep piety and genuine devotion, and always with a reason for the faith that was in her, she was an intelligent Christian. Her Bible was her daily companion. Very nearly every chapter of a Bible bought last June has been read and marked by her. She loved the true minister of the gospel and his visits, and always made such an occasion a benediction to him. I loved her company. She loved the church and its service.

It was my privilege to be with her when she knew the end was coming. She had no fear of death and the future, but regretted her weak devotions. She asked for the communion, which was given her, as a last act of obedience to Jesus' commands. Within a few hours of the end she, looking over her past life, said she could see the trace of God's finger throughout her life; that she had been led by him; that he was still her shepherd. In her last illness of about one week she suffered much. But she was far from reproaching God with it. She said: "I love this world with its beauties, its birds and its flowers; I love the clear streams and green forests; it takes this suffering to loose my hold on these." The river of death was not cold and chilly to her. Jesus still whispered, "I am the way." Thank God for such lives and for such deaths! Her last hours were spent in exhorting her children to make an unbroken family in the bright beyond.

G. H. T.

DILLON—Mrs. FRANCES L. DILLON, daughter of John and Mary Bradley, was born March 21, 1814, in Smith county, Tenn. She came to Mississippi in 1835 or '36; was married to Col. Wilson L. Dillon, Nov. 11, 1839, who died May 14, 1876, since which she has lived on the old homestead in Hinds county, Miss.

Having been an invalid for many years from rheumatism and chronic dyspepsia, she was tenderly cared for by her step-daughter and nephew, Julia and John B. Herod, who say she was a true wife, and faithful to her step-children as long as she was able to do anything for them. She professed religion at an early age at a camp meeting in Wilson county, Tenn., and joined the Methodist Church, in which she has lived an intelligent, consistent Christian life until Jan. 22, 1891, when from an attack of la grippe she passed into her eternal rest.

Oh! how she did love to read our church papers! I was her pastor for three years, and visited regular once a month, and I always left her bedside a better man. Amid her deep and long affliction she was patient and hopeful, always abounding in the love of God. I do not know how she died; but I have told you how she lived. May her Christian character be impressed upon all the surviving friends! is the prayer of her former pastor,

F. M. WILLIAMS.

PRICHARD—Sister TEMPIE PRICHARD died at her home at Marietta, Miss., Jan. 21, 1891. She was the wife of Bro. James W. Prichard and daughter of J. C. and Elizabeth Davis—all of Marietta, Miss. Her parents, husband and three brothers still live to mourn her departure.

Sister Prichard was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1866, at the age of sixteen; was happily married to J. W. Prichard, March 5, 1871. About four years after her marriage she was confined to her room with rheumatism, and could never walk a step until her death.

The writer was personally acquainted with her. Too much could not be said of her Christian life. Tongue could not tell the pain she suffered for sixteen years, and though her suffering was so great, yet she was the light of her home. She was always at church if it was at all reasonable for her to be carried after she got so she could not get to church any other way. Her faithful husband had her a hand carriage made, and, assisted by her devoted father, they would pull her to church; and when it was my lot to preach at Marietta how glad I was to see her at her place in church! Too much could not be said of her kind husband and aged father and mother and affectionate brothers for their kind treatment to her for sixteen years. We expect to meet her over there.

M. H. HONNOLL.

SWITTENBERG—Died, from railroad accident at Madison Station, Miss., May 22, 1891, WILLIE SWITTENBERG, aged thirty-one years eleven months and nineteen days. About the age of sixteen he was converted and joined the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and lived a devout Christian until his death. He lay on his bed of affliction three weeks, and suffered great agony, but never murmured, and we are sure our loss is his eternal gain. He leaves a wife, two children, brothers, sisters and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

SISTER.

DAY—Col. W. C. DAY died at his residence in Marion, Miss., June 12, 1891, aged seventy-nine years. Bro. Day was born in North Carolina in 1812, and has been a member of the M. E. Church, South, about fifty years.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has been coming to this family for twenty-two years, and is still coming. I feel that something ought to be said through its columns about this man.

Marion Church has lost one of her best members, and the community one of its best citizens. Bro. Day was a true, regenerated man, and one who was gifted in prayer. He leaves a good wife who has the church at heart, and the preacher's family also. Four children are still living, while others have crossed over the river. All of them are good Christians but the only son. They are true to their church. God grant that the mantle of the father may fall on the son! May they all meet as one united family in the "New Jerusalem," where "the tree of life is blooming," and where the ransomed of the Lord shall "thine their harps of lucid gold," singing the song of redeeming love amid the beatitudes of "the sun-lit clime," where the "weary are at rest!"

J. N. WARE.

COLE—W. BOON COLE was born in Lawrence county, Miss., Feb. 7, 1851, and departed this life in Beauregard, Miss., Feb. 9, 1891. Bro. Cole was first married to Miss E. E. Martin, of Copiah county, with whom he lived happily for four years, when God took her to himself, leaving him one daughter. On Oct. 25, 1882, he was married to Miss Fannie Ray, of Beauregard, whom he leaves with two bright little children, and, thanks be to God, not comfortless nor fatherless, for theirs is the great promise.

Bro. Cole came to us from the Baptist communion, in which he had lived a consistent member for five years. For eight years he has been a devoted member of the Methodist Church. Dying of consumption, he was for five months the most patient and submissive sufferer I have ever seen. From the first consciousness that consumption had seized upon the citadel of his life, and would require but a few months to complete its work, he gave himself, his all, into the hands of God, and thus death found him waiting.

He was an obedient and loving son, a faithful and devoted husband and father. Of his Christian life it is enough to write—"He being dead, yet speaketh."

V. V. BOONE.

EAGLES—KILA RAY, daughter of John M. and Mary E. Long, and wife of Harry Eagles, was born in Winn parish, La., May 27, 1866, and departed this life, Jan. 3, 1891, leaving a husband, with three small children, besides many relatives and friends, to mourn her great loss.

Sister Eagles embraced religion and joined the Baptist Church in 1881, and continued an exemplary member. At a meeting held by Bro. Mandeville and myself at Winnfield, last September, she and her husband received the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

Her sufferings were intense for forty days before her departure, but were borne cheerfully and submissively. Her dying moments were unusually bright. She called her aged father and unconverted brothers to her, and exhorted them to repent of sin and meet her in glory. Three of those who were so greatly blessed at our Winnfield meeting have passed triumphantly away, while others are rejoicing on their journey home. We will have a happy meeting after awhile.

J. F. WYNN.

SHUTE—Sister M. A. C. SHUTE was born in Lancaster district, S. C., March 9, 1812. She professed religion and joined the Missionary Baptist Church when quite a child, and remained a member of that church for years; but her children, growing up, became Methodists, and she joined the M. E. Church, South, to be with them, and was a consistent member until the day of her death. She was married when about fourteen years old; removed to Mississippi in 1872; was left a widow in 1878, and went home to heaven, May 25, 1891.

Sister Shute had the care of six children—five of whom are members of the M. E. Church, South, and endeavoring to live right. The youngest will join the church soon. Sister Shute was a model Christian; managed her household affairs like a Christian; was beloved by all her neighbors. She suffered much and long, but died happy and is at rest. May the Master save her children in heaven with mother!

B. F. PHILLIPS.

CATOE—Sister SALLIE A. CATOE, wife of E. V. Catoe, and daughter of J. D. and Martha C. Sulluth, was born in 1878, and died March 2, 1891. She was married to E. V. Catoe, March 20, 1890. She had been a member of the M. E. Church, South, for several years, but did not profess conversion until in September, 1890. From that day until God's angels came for her she was a consistent Christian, and went shouting home to heaven.

Sister Catoe was afflicted for weeks, and suffered much, but showed that God's grace was sufficient to help us suffer his will as well as do it. May God's richest blessings rest on all the loved ones!

B. F. PHILLIPS.

Takes 1,000 people to buy Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, at 50 cents a bottle, to make up $500. One failure to cure would take the profit from 4,000 sales. Its makers profess to cure "cold in the head," and even chronic catarrh, and if they fail they pay $500 for their over-confidence—

Not in newspaper words, but in hard cash! Think of what confidence it takes to put that in the papers—and mean it.

Its makers believe in the remedy. Isn't it worth a trial? Isn't any trial preferable to catarrh?

After all, the mild agencies are the best. Perhaps they work more slowly, but they work surely. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are an active agency, but quiet and mild. They're sugar-coated, easy to take, never shock nor derange the system and half their power is the mild way in which their work is done. Smallest, cheapest, easiest to take. One a dose. Twenty-five cents a vial. Of all druggists.

No triumphs are comparable to those of piety—no trophies so magnificent and durable as those which victorious faith erecteth; they do far surpass the most famous achievements of pagan heroes.—Barrow.

Cleopatra.

This beautiful Egyptian queen is said to have possessed wonderful charms of person. Our American women are prone to neglect their health, and should, when suffering from prostration, languor, female debility or weakness, use freely and regularly Creole Female Tonic, the best friend to woman.

I envy no man that knows more than myself, but pity them that know less.—Sir T. Browne.

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years ought to know salt from sugar. Read what he says:

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours truly,
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.,
Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that can not be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

Centenary Female College.

"There is no college to which I would commit my daughter with more confidence than to Centenary. Your curriculum is thorough, your faculty complete, and, above all, the home comforts given our daughters there commend the college to the young ladies themselves."—Rev. Sam P. Jones (Evangelist).

"In Centenary, our daughters of the South will find one of the best colleges in America. I have been among you, and remained with you, and I know whereof I affirm."—T. T. Fishburn (Banker), Roanoke, Va.

"The place may justly be called a well-appointed home for those sheltered within its walls. The rule of work is thoroughness. Having been a patron of the college, I can cordially testify of its high character."—Mrs. M. E. Riggs, McLendon, Texas.

"Indeed, it is the ideal college within the range of my observation."—John B. Boyd, (Merchant), Sonoraville, Ga."

"It is just such an institution as all sensible parents desire for the education of their daughters."—Henderson H. Henson (Pres. Bank), Chattanooga, Tenn.

"Home comforts unexcelled by any school of my knowledge."—Rev. J. A. Jones, Vicksburg, Miss. (Pastor Pres. Church.)

Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga.

This old and well-known Institution has had as successful a career as any college in the South. Its attendance has grown steadily year by year, until now its attendance exceeds that of any other Georgia College. Under the able management of Rev. W. C. Bass and an able faculty, the students have the advantages of the most modern methods of instruction. The buildings are commodious and embrace all the latest improvement. We cordially recommend this Institution to any of our readers who wish a safe Christian home for their daughters. Catalogue free.

The city of New Orleans has been sued for $60,000 for cutting down the poles and wires of the Postal Telegraph Company.

A church altar intended for Lafayette, La., and imported at New Orleans per Marseilles, has been refused free entry as a work of art.

A freight train collided with a passenger train at Ravenna, O., on July 3. About twenty-five persons were killed, and many wounded.

The celebration of the Fourth of July in this city was observed with unusual interest and elaborateness, and was made a general holiday.

An excursion train of two coaches was wrecked near Charleston, W. Va., on July 4. Thirteen were killed and many wounded. Only one passenger escaped injury.

A general agent has been selected for the promotion of the Davis monument. He will visit the various cities and towns in the South and work up the movement.

The Secretary of the Interior has decided that the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Baton Rouge and the Southern University (colored) in New Orleans will share equally in the distribution of the Agricultural College Fund.

A terrific storm at Galveston, Texas, on July 4, inundated the lower portion of the city. One thousand feet of the Galveston and Western railway were washed out, while several blocks of the electric railway on the beach were destroyed.

John Bardsley, ex-city treasurer of Philadelphia, who was convicted of loaning, speculating with and receiving interest on public funds entrusted to his care, has been sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment and to pay a fine of $237,530—the amount embezzled.

The famous Death Valley, or Colorado desert, has been transformed into a great lake, covering many thousands of square miles of the alkali lands from three to eight feet deep. It is said that the flooding of the desert is due to an earthquake, which opened up a subterranean connection with the Pacific.

A cyclone struck Baton Rouge, on July 6, and caused much havoc and destruction. Nearly a hundred residences were damaged or destroyed. The State Penitentiary was partially wrecked, and many prisoners were crushed under the mass of brick and timber. Ten convicts were killed and thirty-five were seriously wounded.

FOREIGN.

The Emperor of Germany arrived in England on July 4, and met with an enthusiastic reception.

The Irish Roman Catholic Bishops, at a meeting, reaffirmed their former declaration, that Mr. Parnell was unfit to be the leader of the Irish people; that he was unworthy of the confidence of Roman Catholics, and calling upon Irishmen to repudiate him.

At the closing session of the International Postal Congress at Vienna, a cable dispatch was read from Postmaster General Wanamaker of the United States, thanking the Congress for selecting Washington as the place for holding the next session.

The German socialists have published an official programme. In it they demand universal suffrage for both men and women, a capital and succession tax, the abolition of the standing army, the abolition fees in courts of law, and the granting of free medical assistance.

Emperor Francis Joseph has signed the Triple Alliance treaty. The Standard's Vienna and Berlin correspondents both declare that it is substantially the same old treaty, and that an attempt will be made to strengthen trade relations by new customs and commercial treaties.

A terrible tornado has swept over the Crefeldt district of Rhenish Prussia. A number of booths and a hall erected in the town of Crefeldt for a rifle meeting and fifty houses were destroyed. Many people were killed and injured. At the village of Aurath scarcely a house was spared.

The suppression of the African slave trade, so far from being an unmixed blessing to the wretched victims, seems to work them still worse misery. It is said that the warlike tribes of the interior, finding themselves unable to dispose of their captives by sale, have taken to murdering them to get rid of them.

The Galois, the Figaro and other papers are pleading for the abandonment of the prosecutions of M. DeLesseps on the grounds that he accomplished his scheme of piercing the Isthmus of Suez with a canal; that he wears the cross of the Legion of Honor, and that he is an academician and a "grand Francaise" generally.

The Vatican authorities have requested the papal nuncios at foreign courts to invite contributions to compensate for the speculative losses in the Peter's pence fund. The Pope has decreed an extension of the marriage tax to all Catholic States. This decree specially affects Spain and Portugal, which have hitherto been exempt from the tax.

The soundest and most reputable and financial organization in France, the Economiste Francais, has denounced the Panama affair as "the greatest financial scandal of the nineteenth century," and demands the trial of the persons responsible for the absorption of 1,300,000,000 francs snatched from the savings of small capitalists, many of whom have been ruined and numbers of whom are dead through despair.

Eternal Vigilance

Is the price of health. But with all our precaution there are enemies always lurking about our systems, only waiting a favorable opportunity to assert themselves. Impurities in the blood may be hidden for years or even for generations and suddenly break forth, undermining health and hastening death. For all diseases arising from impure blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is the unequalled and unapproached remedy. It is King of them all, for it conquers disease.

Camp Meetings.

The twentieth annual camp meeting at Crystal Springs, under the management of the Hannington Camp Meeting Association, will commence Thursday, Aug. 13, 1891, and continue probably for ten or more days.

In response to the urgent desire of a number of persons of all denominations, the Rev. George S. Inge has kindly consented to take charge of the services, and will preach every day and at night during the meeting.

Preachers of all denominations are earnestly invited to attend, and will be provided for during the meeting.

The I. C. R. R. will give the usual reduction of fare from all points on the road.

To meet the expenses of the meeting and to avoid the necessity of a public collection, the usual entrance fee of twenty-five cents will be required to be paid only once during the meeting. Tickets not transferable.

The meeting of 1891 promises to be a memorable occasion. "Come with us and we will do thee good."

Hot Weather Necessities.

Notice the large square package in the front rank. That's where it belongs—ask any woman who has used it. See what it does. It saves work, saves strength, saves health, time, and temper. It saves wear and tear, too—and that's money. Delicate summer clothes don't have to be rubbed and wrenched when they're washed with Pearline. Everything is washed easily—and safely. Pearline doesn't do any more in warm weather than in cold, but you seem to need it more then. It's a necessity. But it's a luxury, as well. Try it in the bath, and you'll think so.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back.

BY AN OLD MINISTER.

"And to virtue, knowledge."

ourage is an essential element of a ler's character; but his courage ld be of little value and stand him poor stead in the conduct of war hout knowledge. The successful ristian soldier must have knowl-e; so in the outset of his spiritual fare he is exhorted by the highest hority and the profoundest wisdom add to his courage "knowledge." owledge, though not synonomous h power, is yet one of the greatest ns of power. All history shows immense superiority of the civilized the savage man. See the powor the enlightened Greeks over their barian neighbors. See the power handful of Englishmen over hun-ds of millions of less enlightened . See the power of the high-born sty of mind over inferior animate re and over the elements of inani-e nature, so that mind rules matter the solid granite to the yielding ning and all that lies between. e words of inspiration warn us nst "science falsely so-called," and inst the "knowledge that puffeth" but also commands us to "search know the Holy Scriptures, that are to make us wise unto salvation." othy, and through him all Chris-workers, are exhorted to study to themselves workmen that need be ashamed.

is the Bible that gives us, and it e that gives us, a knowledge of the racter and will of God. The Being od is the greatest and most neces-of all facts in the universe. All it is possible for us to know of the ite One, it should be our pleasure our highest ambition to know. The ion we sustain to him, the duties has enjoined, and the promises he been pleased to make are matters the first concernment to us. The mand, "Know thyself," was con-red one of the wisest and most im-ant teachings of the ancient philoso-. No book can teach us this lesson the Bible. It is a mirror that thfully reflects us to ourselves. But, withstanding the importance of knowledge, few of us possess it, in a most limited measure. Let us, , by often looking into the mirror inspiration, see ourselves in the hful light of God. To know our-es is a protective power. The wise rsl not only knows his strength, he especially is careful to know his k and most vulnerable points, and ortifies and defends where the need the peril is greatest. So the Chris-soldier who has added to his vir-knowledge. He knows and forti-the weak places against the assaults the enemy. All who possess any eetsbio share of self-knowledge sensibly aware, perhaps painfully of weaknesses and need of help. e of us are too slow; we let the ortunity slip, because we were ind time. Some of us are too hasty; jump to conclusions, we speak be-we think, act before we are ready. e too sanguine, and hence often ppointed. Some of us too faith-, and despair before we begin, and hrink from beginning at all. Now, e weak points invite assault, and fortifying; but to be forewarned, s wise man, is equivalent to being armed. Our safety, then, demands that we shall add to our faith, knowledge.

Knowledge added to our faith will greatly increase our influence and power for usefulness. We shall know what to do, and what not to do, and how to do. We shall be called to lead, to speak, to write, and formulate the thoughts and purposes of the community in which we live. A reputation for knowledge will inspire respect for our opinions and command the co-operation of others. A reputation for knowledge will give weight to our words, power and eloquence to our persuasions, and enable us to promote useful enterprises and win souls for the Master. If we would be useful and wise to win souls, let us be diligent to add to our virtue, knowledge.

The sources of knowledge lie all about us; books were never so numerous, so cheap and so accessible as now. The Bible, with its untold wealth of knowledge, lies open before us. History unfolds and spreads its luminous pages bright with the story of man and his wonderful fortunes. Nature in all her kingdoms is full of lessons. It only needs that we carefully observe, that we intelligently reflect on the without and the within us to add to our virtue, knowledge.

"When to Pay Missionary Money."

This is an important subject, and ought to be seriously considered.

Bro. Forsyth declares, unqualifiedly, "It is not necessary to defer until harvest-time." He would cut the Gordian knot with one stroke of his pen, it seems. He, perhaps, is a fledgling, anxious to sally forth on his pin-feathers before his spurs have sprouted. But let us "deal gently with the young man." Perhaps "gentleness may make him great" yet.

In my article, which he criticized, non suaviter in modo, I wrote for "our country," and stated that it, being agricultural, receives its income when the products of the fields are harvested and sold; and asked, How can we pay the tenth of our income before we receive it? if we adopt that system. And I ask again, Why not pay all the tithes at once, or as soon as received? And if we pay all then, how can we pay more until the Lord blesses us with another harvest? Who will dare "keep back part of the price"? "All the tithes of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord." And so is "the tenth of the herd or flock." And have we any right to hold it back even, much less to appropriate it to any other uses? But how can we "bring it into the storehouse" unless and until "the Lord giveth the increase"? But that brother says, "It is charging wholesale improvidence, for where is that with which God blessed them in last year's harvest?" Where is it, sure enough? It ought to have been "brought into the storehouse" of the Lord as soon as harvested.

And that brother asks further: "Are we to teach (italics are mine) the people they are continually to have God on trial? If he will give them a good harvest, they will then respond to the demands upon them?" Are we not "taught" in the Scriptures that "in him we live, and move, and have our being," and that "it is he that giveth us power to get wealth"? How and when do agricultural people in our Southland get means to contribute for the support of the various institutions of the church? Is it not from their crops, when harvested? Then, is not that the time to pay their tithes—when they have the means and know how much is due the Lord? Why not pay, then, promptly and fully all our dues as soon as the good Lord enables us to do so? Is not the best time to pay any debt when and as soon as the debtor has the money for that purpose?

Bro. Sullivan asks if I have given in my article in the ADVOCATE, of May 21, "a statement, sound and safe, which we can take as a rule in our church finances;" and he gives it as his opinion that my views are "seriously faulty." If they are really "faulty," no man is more anxious than I am to have them corrected; for I would rejoice if the church had the best possible system of finances. It is much needed and greatly to be desired by all good people.

The Lord instituted the tithe system, and, in my simplicity, I had accepted it implicitly, and had never once thought that his plans could be improved upon. If I may be allowed to do so, I will use an ad hominem illustration. Having adopted the Lord's system of tithes, I keep books for him, and pay the tenth of my income from the practice of medicine and all other sources. And how can I know how much I owe the Lord, and how to properly distribute it among his various claims, until I have received my annual income from all sources? In an agricultural country like ours, it is the universal custom for merchants, doctors, lawyers and others to collect their claims when the planters have harvested and marketed their crops, and not sooner, nor later. And why would it not be best to collect missionary money then, too, when the people are flush of it? Why not then? I repeat. Is not that the Lord's appointed time? Will not anybody pay more when he has more, than when he has less? And is it not a fact that the bulk of the missionary money is "brought into the storehouse" at the harvest time? Why not pay it all in then? I don't impiously "put the Lord on trial," but I pay in proportion to my income, as I am commanded to do; and I feel it my duty to exercise my best judgment in the distribution of my tithes scrupulously among the various purposes for which the Lord claims them. "It is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord;" it is not mine to withhold or distribute at my discretion. I am simply his agent in the matter, to be guided by his will.

We have commercial years—twelve months—for accounts to run, and even dates for them to fall due, and settlements to be made, regulated by the seasons. And has not the Lord set us the example in "giving seed-time and harvest"? And why should we not adopt the plan of balancing books and settling accounts with the Lord accordingly? And if all of "the tithes were brought into the storehouse" of the Lord as soon as the crops are harvested and sold, could not all "the institutions of the church be supported" better? Not only the missionaries in foreign lands, but could not the preachers at home, also, get along better, and accomplish more good, if their means of support (and a good one at that) was given them when the people had in hand the most money to contribute? Is it not true that there is twenty-five to fifty per cent. difference between "laying in a supply" at wholesale prices for cash, and "buying by the small" on credit at ruinous prices? And how much less of human suffering (in mind or body), and how much more of human comfort (in mind and body) would there be in the parsonage, and how much more of spiritual usefulness and efficiency in the preacher would there be, if everybody would "bring all the tithes into the storehouse" as the Lord commands! For the preacher and his family are human beings, and have human wants and human feelings, and are affected by human circumstances as well as other human beings are. And God holds us responsible for their proper support.

Aberdeen District Conference.

The twenty-first session of this body was held in the hospitable town of Amory, July 3-5, 1891, and was presided over by Rev. J. B. Stone, presiding elder. Revs. H. R. Tucker and J. C. Park were the secretaries. The Sunday-school Conference was held the day preceding, presided over by Col. J. L. S. Hill. The appropriate programme, previously prepared by the presiding elder, was carried out. There was not an indifferent speech made; but, on the other hand, the speeches were forcible and calculated to do great good.

The attendance on this District Conference occasion was much larger than previous years. Every pastor was present and every charge, except one, was represented by one or more lay members. The presiding elder inquired diligently into all the interests of the church, and the reports made by the pastors showed improvement along all lines of church work. The Sunday-school work is prominent, becoming more appreciated by our people, and growing in the district. The spiritual condition of the church is very encouraging. The prohibition sentiment prevails throughout our bounds. Our Conference adopted a strong report on the Sabbath, which ought to be read and heeded. We extract this: "We, as a body of Christians, should not fail to raise our voices against this great evil, condemning all work of every kind on this holy day. We should not only condemn all labor, but all travel and recreation on this day as is not in keeping with the laws of God; such as Sunday excursions and Sunday travel of any kind, when it is not an absolute and unavoidable necessity. We should also condemn Sunday visiting where it is not for the glory of God. We fear that many of our people take advantage of the Sabbath day to start on journeys and visit neighbors and engage in such other things as God's Word doth not allow; all of which should receive our condemnation as a body of Christians; and that we condemn all Sunday recreations, such as buggy riding, and anything that tends to the desecration of the Sabbath."

Our religious literature is being better circulated. Nearly five hundred church papers are taken in the district, and Rev. G. W. Bachman, our colporteur and Sunday-school agent, who was present, stated that he had sold more books in this district than in any in the Conference.

The Conference enjoyed an address from Mrs. Word, district secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society, and also a communication from Mrs. Sallie M. Shell, district secretary of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society. The brethren demonstrated their appreciation of these workers and the interests they represent by a suitable resolution.

Rev. Amos Kendall, former presiding elder of the district, was a visitor among us, to the delight of his many friends, and preached a sermon of marked power. Sermons were also preached by Revs. H. R. Tucker, Eugene Johnson, J. A. Bowen and M. E. Tumlin. The experience meeting, Sunday morning; the preaching by the Rev. Geo. S. Inge, who is to continue the meeting, and the children's meeting in the afternoon, addressed by Revs. J. C. Park and G. W. Bachman, were all in keeping with the occasion, for, indeed, this was a religious Conference. The Holy Spirit was present at every service, and seldom have we seen a more religious occasion. Our presiding elder, religious and consecrated, contributed no little to the success of the Conference.

The next Conference will meet at Nettleton.

The following strong delegation was elected to the next Annual Conference: M. C. Shell, T. B. Sykes, Rev. Wm. M. Foster and T. J. Buchanan. Alternates: Col. J. L. S. Hill and R. L. Trice.

HESLEP R. TUCKER.

EDUCATION.

Your Committee on Education beg leave to report that in the history of Mississippi Methodism there has been no period in which the church has been so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Christian education, nor does she fail to appreciate the absolute necessity of it as an indispensable qualification in all the departments of business life. Nor are we less impressed with the rapid march of woman to her position proper in the elevation of humanity, the furtherance of Christ's kingdom and the honor and glory of our God. We think there is scarcely a better institution for the development of her possibilities than the Grenada Collegiate Institute. We, therefore, recommend it to the favorable consideration and support of this District Conference, and can see no good reason why our daughters should go beyond our own State lines for the development of all their possibilities. And we feel and know our obligation to and our interest in having been associated with, and our abiding attachment to that marvelously grand institution (the Vanderbilt University) which stands forth the towering monument of Southern pride, Southern education and Southern success. Nor should we fail to enlist your kindliest attention to that long-wished-for male college (Millsaps), so ardently desired and now so nearly a consummation fraught with so many fond anticipations. We must give it all the support consistent with our environments.

Resolved, That we memorialize the trustees of Millsaps College, that the college be exempted by legislative action from that most heinous of all acts, the selling, use and practice of drinking spirituous liquors in any quantity and for any purpose within five miles of the college.

TEMPERANCE.

Your committee believe the Bible contains principles for the best code of laws on temperance and prohibition that has ever been enacted. "Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine and men of strength to mingle strong drink." "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttoth thy bottle to him and maketh him drunken also." "Look not upon the wine when it is red." "Nor drunkards shall inherit the kingdom of God."

Many other passages not only teach temperance and prohibition, but total abstinence. So we consider that in the great temperance movements of to-day there is nothing new originated, but we are only adjusting ourselves to the divine principle announced to mankind thousands of years ago. The work of temperance and prohibition to-day is to vitalize and incarnate these principles—to incorporate them into our being and life. Hence an anti-Scripture prohibitionist is out of harmony with divine truth. We are glad that our last General Conference, 1890, expressed and pronounced in favor of the above principles. Your committee believe that these declarations should be read from our pulpits, so that the good people might not be deceived. They are as follows: "We are convinced that if any more advanced position is possible for any church (any position we mean that comes within the province of a church) than the one which the M. E. Church, South, occupies to-day upon the question of temperance and prohibition, our membership is ready at once to take it. We are emphatically a prohibition church. We stand out squarely and before the whole world—certainly in theory, and for the most part in practice—for the complete suppression of the liquor traffic. We offer no compromise to, and seek no terms for, a sin of this heinous quality. We are opposed to all forms of license of this iniquity, whether the same be 'high' or 'low.'" (Journal, p. 151.)

Your committee have made careful inquiry from every charge in the district, and the strong unanimous reports can be summed up in the following: Our preachers and people are agitating the subject of temperance and prohibition more than usual. The sentiment is growing constantly in favor of the suppression of the liquor traffic. Christian people are more united against this greatest enemy of the church. The drink habit is very remarkably decreased. The Discipline of our church is being administered in such a way that our members do not sign liquor petitions, with few exceptions. We rejoice in the fact that the righteous cause of temperance has a decided majority among the white people of our district. We are greatly indebted to the prayerful efforts of the good women of our church for the success already achieved. Let us pray, preach and work until every saloon in the district is closed and every poor drunkard saved.

Resolved, By this District Conference, that it is not in keeping with the law of the M. E. Church, South, nor with the spirit of our holy Christianity, to use our houses of worship for any purpose other than the worship of Almighty God.

Commencement at Mansfield.

The exercises of this occasion commenced with the little folks, which was an exhibition at once interesting and unique, showing that good training had been done. The medal for scholarship in the primary department was presented to Miss Kate Musgrove.

The sermon on Sabbath morning, by Rev. W. H. LaPrade, of New Orleans, was a stirring discourse, presenting a forcible plea for a universal Savior and brotherhood of the race. The sermon teemed with fresh, valuable thought and won the close attention of the large audience. Rev. J. M. Henry, of Shreveport, preached at night, before the Y. W. C. A., an interesting, earnest discourse.

Monday morning, June 15, opened with the elocution contest. It was a close contest and brought out a fine display of developed talent. Miss Alice Williams gained the medal, but Miss Alice McGowen, Miss Laura McGinnis and Miss Willie Calhoun did so admirably well that the committee thought they deserved medals also. The classical music contest resulted in presenting the Beethoven medal to Miss Ella Howell, and the Bland medal to Miss Margie Cunningham, as the successful contestants. The class showed great proficiency and gave evidence that good work had been done in developing such skill on the instrument; at once placing this institution in the front rank as a conservatory of music.

Monday night presented an attractive program of music and elocution.

Tuesday was Alumnæ Day. Mrs. F. G. Thatcher, of Shreveport, read an admirable paper on the efforts of women in charities and reform. Mr. John Scales entertained the audience with a well-considered speech on "Russia and its People." Some well-selected music and elocution made the occasion exceedingly enjoyable.

Tuesday night brought out the finest display of musical talent in song and on the instrument that probably this institution has ever presented, establishing the high reputation this department has so well deserved.

The art gallery was a revelation, presenting an array of one hundred paintings, so well executed and beautifully framed that they eclipsed, as all thought, all former exhibitions of the college. Certainly the efforts of the young artists well deserve a high meed of praise.

We must confess that Mansfield College carries off the palm for music and art, and it was no idle boast of the president "that he did not intend to be excelled."

Commencement Day dawned bright and serene, and fourteen young ladies stepped forward, one after another, read their essays, received the plaudits of the audience and profuse floral tributes as they took their seats. The president very impressively delivered the diplomas, and followed with a chaste and elegant baccalaureate to the great delight of the audience. The speaker, Rev. J. L. Pierce, of Shreveport, failed to appear, and the audience was dismissed the earlier for dinner. The following are the names of the graduates: Miss Lura E. Blocker, of Rayne, La.; Miss Maud Bussey, of Jeanerette, La.; Miss Eliza Constantine, of Mansfield, La.; Miss Ada Frazer, of Mansfield; Miss Florence L. Tarmer, of New Iberia, La.; Miss Lucy Guy, of Mansfield; Miss Annie Green, of Lake Charles, La.; Miss Laura V. Murphey, of Mansfield; Miss Mamie Miller, of Lake Charles, La.; Miss Rubie R. Hall, of Marshall, Texas; Miss Alice Trosper, of Bethany, La.; Miss Lizzie Thomas, of Mansfield; Miss Jennie B. Thompson, of Garland City, Ark.; Miss M. Daisy Gamblin, of Shreveport, La., who gained the Alumnæ medal for scholarship.

The art levee in the evening, amid the brilliant lights and beautiful pictures, made a lovely scene. Everything about the college had a bright and elegant appearance. The new gallery freshly painted, the hall of the college beautifully kalsomined and painted, the fences and out-houses whitewashed, gave evidence of prosperity.

The patronage has been largely increased, the superior faculty has won universal confidence, and the institution is on the highway to a larger success. It is a great place to educate Southern girls.

A. F. JACKSON,
Sec. of the Board.

A Week of Prayer—Aug. 9-16.

To the Preachers and Members of the M. E. Church, South—

Dear Brethren: The college of Bishops, at their annual meeting in May, were solicited to set apart a suitable time as a week of prayer, with proper humiliation before Almighty God, for the baptism of the Holy Spirit upon our work, both at home and in missionary fields. Our solicitude for increased spiritual power, both for preachers and laymen, prompts us to make this call for such a week of prayer for the second week in August. We suggest the accompanying programme:

Sunday, Aug. 9—Sermons on the baptism of the Holy Spirit as an enduement of power and a preparation for service.

Monday, Aug. 10—Prayer for greater spiritual power for all our preachers.

Tuesday, Aug. 11—Prayer for more spiritual-mindedness and a higher estimate of spiritual things for all our people.

Wednesday, Aug. 12—Prayer for the increase of home religion, more family altars, and greater fidelity to the religious needs of our homes.

Thursday, Aug. 13—Prayer for the youth of the church in our Sunday-schools, Epworth Leagues, and institutions of learning.

Friday, Aug. 14—Prayer for our missions and missionaries in foreign fields.

Saturday, Aug. 15—Prayer for our missionary workers among the unevangelized in our cities and on the frontiers.

Your brethren in the Lord,

J. C. KEENER, C. B. GALLOWAY,
A. W. WILSON, E. R. HENDRIX,
J. C. GRANBERY, J. S. KEY,

REST.

BY FATHER RYAN.

My feet are wearied, and my hands are tired,
My soul oppressed—
And I desire, what I have long desired—
Rest—only rest.

'Tis hard to toil—when toil is almost vain,
In barren ways;
'Tis hard to sow—and never garner grain
In harvest days.

The burden of my days is hard to bear,
But God knows best;
And I have prayed—but vain has been my prayer
For rest—sweet rest.

'Tis hard to plant in spring and never reap
The autumn yield;
'Tis hard to till, and 'tis tilled to weep
O'er fruitless field.

And so I cry, a weak and human cry,
So heart oppressed,
And so I sigh, a weak and human sigh,
For rest—for rest.

My way has wound across the desert years,
And cares infest
My path, and through the flowing of hot tears
I pine—for rest.

'Twas always so; when but a child I laid
On mother's breast
My wearied little head; e'en then I prayed
As now—for rest.

And I am restless still; 'twill soon be o'er
For; down the west
Life's sun is setting, and I see the shore
Where I shall rest.

Letter from Oregon.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing in the ADVOCATE, of June 18—received yesterday—Dr. Lafferty's description of a much-fatigued editor, and as "the world is all akin," I suppose similar experiences prompted you to clip the article. I've "been there" myself. The effort of 1889-90 to carry Muskogee Church, Our Brother in Red, and financial agency for Galloway College, gave me many similar experiences, and there was a happy sense of relief and release when Bishop Hendrix asked me to change my work. Will it be a relief to you, in your hot sanctum this morning, for me to present you a picture of our surroundings? It will, at least, say, "All are not as I am," and more, it will tell you, "There is a chance for escape."

Well, first look backward. Our lowest temperature in Southern Oregon, last Winter, was twenty-one degrees above zero, and only twice that low, and then only two days. The thermometer generally ran from thirty-five to sixty degrees. Since Summer has come it ranges from sixty-five to eighty-five. Twice it has gone to ninety degrees, and once to ninety-five degrees; but that day I preached in the same suit I wore during the Winter, and did not have "collar flabby from moisture on one side," nor "glued to his neck by perspiration on the other side," for there is something peculiar in the purity of the atmosphere here that the heat does not oppress you. I have not used an umbrella for the sun, and many ladies go without even a parasol; and our showers have been so constant we have not had to "hurry to his office with ears rimmed with car dust," nor "face smeared with a solution of sweat and soot, hair standing stiff with loose dirt." No, no. With one exception of ten days, there has not been three days together but we have had one or more showers. But they have not been your "clod-mashing, gully-washing" showers, but so gentle that you seldom think to get your umbrella, unless you try to wear a silk hat; and even when our rain ceases, it does not parch and dry, as you might suppose, for it seems the pressure of the mountains, which are all "around and about us," act as a kind of system to press the moisture upward in the valleys. We all live in the valleys, and they are not your morasses or lagoons, but beautiful prairie-like expanses. I should have said, too, we never have those heavy, beating rainfalls so common with you.

What grows on our valleys? I can hardly tell you, the list would be too large; but fruits and vegetables are the special growth. Peaches bear the third season from the seed, and other fruits are nearly as early. Trees are so full people are pulling off about four-fifths of it to save the trees. Grapes rooted last year are full of fruit this year. I would be afraid to tell you of many things I have seen, for fear you would think this climate has had a strange effect on my veracity. What would you think of a cabbage lasting a family a whole month; of onions so sweet you actually enjoy eating them like an apple; of a limb on a tree grown twelve feet two inches in one season; of a strawberry 5½x7½ inches in dimensions, and yet as luscious as the old wild ones of our childhood memory? Whatever you may think of these, and many more as surprising, are actual facts. Cabbages weigh twenty to eighty pounds, and you can cut slices off from day to day, and the remainder will keep until you wish to use it. There is a flavor about all vegetables and fruits that make me think of my boyhood relish.

I have been very much surprised at the extent of the mining interests here. There are companies in every direction. I sometimes think half the people of the country are engaged therein.

What of the church? There are large sections of country in which the destitution is fearful. At our District Conference it was developed that we could form from eight to twelve new pastoral charges, and most of it be where there is now no preaching by any church. There are two whole counties in which we have one preacher, and there are two Baptist preachers "who preach occasionally," and there are 14,000 or 15,000 people; "and," said a lay brother, "it is settling up very rapidly, and there is room enough and work enough for a presiding elder and a whole district of preachers." Oh, that our people could realize the want in all this broad and rapidly developing land! As new as it is, I know of orchards that can not be bought for $1,000 per acre. They yield a net profit of $300 per acre per annum.

As to climate and scenery, it is as good as can be desired. The valleys are not as I have been accustomed to see—narrow at the head of a stream, and broader as it goes down—but is as apt to be a broad valley at the head and none at the mouth. Rogue river—upon which we live—rises in the Cascade range, not far from Crater Lake, which is one of nature's wonders—a lake on the top of the mountain, with perpendicular walls nearly 3,000 feet to the water, 7x9 miles in dimensions, and in the center an island, with another hole, no one knows how deep. The river comes thundering down the mountain for one and one-half miles of cascades, falls from ten to seventy-five feet each—in fact, all down the river there is an occasional fall, which makes one think of Niagara, and the water is the purest, and clear as crystal. A traveler on the dirt road is continually meeting with new surprises. He thinks that he is going to be hemmed in and further progress impassable, when, lo! as he turns round a point, a broad valley opens to his view.

But so many things crowd upon me that would, doubtless, be of interest, that, as I can not tell all, I must defer until another time. How I would like to drop into some of your District Conferences and see you all!

J. L. FUTRELL.

Grant's Pass, Oregon.

In Memoriam.

On June 17, 1891, the pure, spotless spirit of Sister Jane Kihlinger Penn, daughter of Mrs. A. C. Kihlinger, of Jackson, La., and wife of Rev. J. V. Penn, of the Mississippi Conference, took its happy flight back to the God who gave it. Her days on earth were nineteen years, ten months and ten days. Measured by the calendar of earth, hers was a short life; but measured by the good she did, she lived much longer than many who have bowed beneath the weight of years. Sister Ione discharged faithfully all of the obligations growing out of the varied relationships of life. As a child, she was thoughtful and obedient. Striving to fill a child's true place, she was an unspeakable joy to her mother. Few mothers have been blessed with such a daughter. As a sister, she was kind, gentle and affectionate. By the influence of her loving nature, she made herself the sun of her home, around whom her sisters and brothers moved in joyful harmony. Being entirely void of partiality and selfishness, she drew all of her brothers and sisters equally close to her loving heart.

On January 2, 1890, she became the happy bride of Rev. J. V. Penn. And no man ever won the love of a purer, truer heart. To him she was light in darkness, comfort in sorrow, joy in sadness, cheer in despondency, life in the midst of decaying hopes; a power ever drawing him nearer to God. She possessed, in a large degree, the elements requisite to a Methodist preacher's wife. She was wise in counsel, strong in faith, fervent in prayer, prudent in conversation, winsome in manners, and holy in life. In the Summer of 1886 she was happily converted under the ministry of P. A. Johnston, and joined the Methodist Church, in which she lived until transferred to the church above. The first months of her married life were spent in the home of the writer in Bolton, Miss. Here she won all hearts—making everyone feel the influence of her Christly life. A more lovable, beautiful Christian character I have never met. In her Christian character she was faultless and spotless. Astronomers have discovered spots in the sun; but with an acquaintance of nearly two years, none of our family ever discovered any faults in her character.

She was a woman of strong and unwavering faith. Hers was a faith that ever brought into her soul a deep, joyous rest; a faith that always enabled her to lay all of her cares upon him who said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

She was eminently pious; and being much in prayer and steadfast in faith, she was always ready to suffer and to do for Christ. She was always cheerful, and when her husband would seem sad, she would say, "Never mind, dear; God will make it all right." With her sunny nature shining through the mists of her prayerful tears, she arched his sky with the bright bow of hope. Sister Penn was ambitious to be good and to do good, and when the end came, she had but one regret, and that was, she had not lived long enough to do as much for her Lord as she desired. She loved souls and sought earnestly to lead them to the Savior of men. Of her it may truly be said: "She lived for the good that she could do, and for the heaven that smiled above her, too."

In December, 1890, her health began to fail. All was done for the restoration of her health that loving hearts could do; but all remedies failed. At last the end came. As she lived, so she died. It was a glorious privilege to be with her during her last hours. On Tuesday night, June 16, she thought she heard the voice of God calling her away from earth to the beautiful mansions in the sky.

After talking awhile to her weeping loved ones, she said, "Sing 'Rock of Ages.'" While we were singing the last stanza, her spirit seemed to float away to the home of the soul. This finished, she said, "Sing 'Jesus, lover of my soul;'" and when that was sung, said, as if feeling the security of her refuge, "Now sing, 'How firm a foundation.'" But the end was not yet. She lived till 12:30 P. M. the next day, when she breathed her last as gently as an infant asleep in its mother's arms. "O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord." May God comfort the sorrowing loved ones left behind!

L. S. JONES.

Sardis District Conference.

The twenty-first session of the Sardis District Conference was held in Como, Miss., July 2 and 5, 1891. The presiding elder, Rev. J. J. Wheat, D. D., held the reins and guided the meeting with an even hand from the opening to the close.

R. G. Porter held the pen, and jotted down the minutes as they came. Thursday, the first day, was spent in a Sunday-school Conference, which developed the fact that this part of church work is in a fairly prosperous condition in our bounds. Friday was spent in reading, hearing and discussing essays on living subjects connected with the office of the ministry and the work of the church in this, our day. This was a new and profitable departure from the routine way of holding a District Conference. It was regretted that the condition of the farms in this country made the attendance so small.

When the matter of books and reading suitable for our people was under discussion, a brother, somewhat given to "cranky" notions and ways, intimated that the reading of some novels and works of fiction ought to be encouraged among our young people. Thereupon the whole Conference, both clerical and lay, fell upon him like an avalanche, and smote him hip and thigh. It was refreshing and encouraging to see how quickly and strongly they rallied to the rescue of the ark from the touch of infidel hands. Our people are still true to the cardinal principles and practices of old Methodism.

Half the preachers of the district had been requested to furnish a list of the ten books most helpful to them in the preparation of sermons. In the main, our preachers get the most help from nearly the same books. This may, in part, account for the unity and uniformity of the doctrinal preaching and teaching of our preachers. Some of these lists indicated a painfully contracted course of reading and study. This ought not so to be. Saturday the status of the work in the several charges of the district passed under review, and it was found to be both healthful and hopeful along all lines.

The hour of eleven o'clock was given to the subject of education, in order that this part of our work might be magnified in the hearing of the largest number of our people.

A resolution was adopted expressing satisfaction at the location, great hopefulness over the present prospects of, and pledging the support of our people to Millsaps College. Time is working a change and bringing a better sentiment along this line. An encouraging report was made as to the present condition and future prospects of the Grenada Collegiate Institute; and this school was heartily and strongly commended to our people. The president, Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., then made an interesting and eloquent address on the subject of education in general, Christian education in particular, and as to the special claims of this school upon the patronage and hearty support of our people.

The work done at Grenada is equal to the best done in any school in the land. The splendid building is being thoroughly renovated and put in condition for larger and still better work. This is the only institution of learning the North Mississippi Conference has under its care, and it ought to have the support of all our people.

Prof. L. B. Abell, president of North Mississippi Female College at Verona, presented the claims of that school in a brief speech. These school men were the only visitors to look in on this meeting.

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, our Conference organ, was endorsed heartily and strongly in its editorial conduct and business management. It is a matter of general regret that it does not have a larger circulation in our bounds.

G. D. Shands, Dr. J. W. Sharp, Rev. W. H. Eckles and P. T. Callicutt were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and Dr. A. A. Young and J. D. Baker, alternates.

The hospitality of Como abounded.

The next District Conference will be held in Batesville.

We were sorry that the editor of the ADVOCATE was not with us.

As a Conference host, Rev. J. M. Wyatt is entitled to the palm.

Things Seem Confused.

Some things seem confused in my mind, and I find myself asking the questions over and over again: What are our camp meetings doing? What are the evangelists doing? What are we doing?

We attend the camp meetings, we hear the eloquent sermons, and we see the ministers numbering the conversions. But we hear and see some things that make our hearts sad. We hear the noise of the Sunday excursion trains and the cries of the hack-men, and we see members of the church buying and selling on the Lord's day. We do not wish to judge harshly; but the words of Holy Writ come into our minds: "What meaneth this bleating of the sheep," etc. The week at the camp meeting is ended, and the Sabbath comes again. A little city lad says to his mother: "Mama, may I go round the corner and get a glass of soda water?" "No, no," replies the mother; "it is the Sabbath day." "Well, that isn't anything," answers the boy; "did I not buy ice cream out at the camp ground last Sunday evening? What is the difference?" The mother pushes him aside, and goes on with her reading; she does not explain the difference.

We hear glorious reports of the work done by an evangelist in a neighboring town; but a Christian lady who attended the meeting said to me: "I felt a little ashamed last Sunday when our crowd went on the train, and a traveler asked, 'Where is this excursion going, and what is the occasion?'" It is said that the whole Sunday excursion system in New England sprang from a single "church train." "After long and persistent efforts, certain well-to-do church members who had moved out from Boston to Brookline, but desired to attend their old churches in Boston, induced the manager of the Boston and Worcester to put on a train on Sunday between the two places, beginning in November, 1860." What has been the outcome of this Sunday excursion system? Has it advanced the kingdom of our Lord, or has God been robbed of his honor? Is the will of the Lord being done, or is the sweet Sabbath of rest fast becoming a thing of the past.

How often are we accused of being righteous over-much when we refuse to travel on the Sabbath. These accusers are often kind and sincere friends, and they give us a long list of names of ministers and Christian people who are frequently seen going to and coming from the trains on the Lord's day. But do the children of these Christian people realize that the Sabbath is the brightest day of all the seven? Do they feel that holy calm, that sacred nearness to God, which their parents once felt on this blessed day?

Our Savior's words are: "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." How well I remember when but a child with what joy I looked forward to the coming of the Sabbath! It was indeed to me,

"The emblem of rapture immortal,
The foretaste of pleasure in heaven."

I had a perfect horror of desecrating the day, and these were favorite lines:

"A Sabbath well spent brings a week of content,
And strength for the day of to-morrow;
But a Sabbath profaned, whatsoever be gained,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow."

Memory recalls the first time I ever knew one of my parents to do anything which I considered a violation of the Fourth Commandment. I grieved and wept, and for a while refused to be comforted. But how my little heart rejoiced when my father made me to understand that he had performed a work of mercy! How bright and beautiful the whole world seemed at that moment! But many days have come and gone since then. The great weight often comes upon my heart and tears blind my vision when I see the example that is set for the children.

How I wish some father in Israel would explain it all to me, for I confess it is a mystery, and things seem confused.

L.

FROM THE WORK.

LAKE PROVIDENCE, LA.

It affords me great pleasure to state that, under the pastorate of Bro. Isbell and his excellent wife, there has been, under the blessing of the good Lord, a marked improvement in everything appertaining to the charge. The parsonage property left us last year by a good lady of this town, now deceased, has, under the skillful management and manipulation of our pastor, been wonderfully improved and beautified. When we got it, it was terribly dilapidated; now it is a real gem of a place—one of the most attractive and comfortable in our town. We now, very justly, claim to have one of the most beautiful churches and parsonages within the bounds of our Conference.

So much for the outside. Now we come to speak of the most important part of the work—the spiritual condition of the church—for fine houses will avail but little without the indwelling presence of the blessed Spirit. In this respect, the change for the better has been signally marked. Our pastor has entrenched himself in the affections of the whole church and in the opinion of outsiders. We have had some accessions, our Sunday-school has been almost doubled in number, and I do not think I exaggerate when I say quadrupled in the interest manifested by both teachers and pupils. Sister Isbell has charge of the Bible class, and in her earnest, quiet, consecrated way is a powerful auxiliary and assistant to her husband. The improvement in numbers attendant and interest manifested in our weekly prayer meeting is fully as marked as that manifested in the Sunday-school.

Under the blessing of the good Lord we can safely say that we are onward and up-grade, and hoping and praying for a more blessed time in the near future. To our gracious Master would we ascribe all the praise for the blessings we enjoy.

F. H. G. TAYLOR.

TANGIPAHOA, LA.

I have just closed my second protracted meeting at Tangipahoa, which resulted in nine accessions, and the church powerfully revived; assisted by Bro. Howard and R. W. Tucker.

We held our first meeting the last March, and although there were but few accessions and conversions, the meeting was a grand success. The good accomplished is perceptible in all lines of church work. Assisted in this meeting by Bros. I. W. Cox, W. W. Simmons, N. J. Roberts, and L. S. Jones.

Our worthy presiding elder was with us in our meeting at Tangipahoa, and did valiant service for the Master. Bro. Mack is dead in love with the work, and success attends his labors throughout the district. I thought when he was appointed to this district that he would need a high-topped buggy and a two-horse buggy; but he is getting through without them.

Prayer meeting and Sunday-school work in a flourishing condition.

We have bought a nice bell for the church at this place, and expect soon to make some improvement on the parsonage.

Bro. F. M. Kean, my predecessor, who was here for three years, did much in laying the foundation for success in work at this place. He has no enemies save the whisky and Lottery men.

We have been well cared for by the good people of this place. I have never served a more appreciable people. The ladies spare no pains in making the preacher and family comfortable.

We are getting in line to fight the Lottery.

MIRIAM HETH—A TALE OF THE TIMES OF THE CHRIST. By Rev. A. J. Holt. J. B. Alden, New York.

This tale is well told in pleasing verse.

THE GOSPEL OF SPIRITUAL INSIGHT. Being studies in the Gospel of St. John. By Charles F. Deems, D. D., LL.D. 12mo cloth, 377 pp. Price, $1.50, postpaid. Wilbur B. Ketcham, publisher, 2 Cooper Union, New York.

We are pleased to notice this book which is a companion volume to "The Gospel of Common Sense," which was issued some time ago. Its lucid and pointed style, its earnest application to practical lessons, make it a book of rare excellence and value. The twenty-four chapters are exceedingly rich in spiritual truth. There is no portion of the New Testament which so sets forth the effects of spiritual insight and the study of which so cultivates that great endowment, as the Gospel of St. John. As a help in the preparation of the lessons for the last half of the year, it will be unequalled by any publication. Some of our ablest preachers and most accurate scholars speak of it in unequalled praise. The book will be popular. It is broad and deep, radical and conservative.

CHRIST'S FIRST MIRACLE.

John ii, 1-11.

Golden text: "This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee and manifested forth his glory" (v. 11). Here we see that Christ's glory, his divine nature, was shown in his wonderful deeds. It was displayed, 1. In his teaching; in his extraordinary character; in his death upon the cross, and in his resurrection.

The joyous opening of the Savior's public career. Vs. 1, 2. His baptism had taken place a few days before, and at the same time Christ had received the gift of the Holy Spirit, by which, as a man, he was fully qualified for his life-work. Five men of the common people had found peace in believing in him, and had joined themselves to him as his professed disciples. Now, in a day or two, we find Jesus and these new friends and followers present at a marriage celebration joining in its merriment. Here we have a beautiful example of what Christianity is for those who truly embrace it and are controlled and blessed in all things by it. It gives mirth and song and life; of course, with these in their hearts come sorrow and lamentation. But Christ to our lives is intended to make us happy. Heaven itself is described as a place from which sorrow and tears shall be forever absent; and the garments which wedding robes shall be worn, and wine quaffed and songs sung! All this was beautifully foreshadowed by the happy, joyous, merry-making company of Cana, of which our Lord and his disciples formed a part (vs. 1, 2).

2. Christ's fellow-feeling with man. A marriage festivities were in progress. All were enjoying the happy occasion. Any circumstance that would interrupt the merry flow of soul would be a calamity, at least, to the "ruler of the feast," and to the bridegroom as well. Such a circumstance was at hand—the wine had given out. This moved Jesus so that he performed a miracle in order to supply the needy want of the feast. The primary purpose of this wonderful act was to relieve from embarrassment the steward and save the feelings of the newly-married couple. This consideration of Christ, as to the happiness of others, is one of the grandest qualities we behold in his wonderful character. He was moved having compassion for people—a fellow-feeling with man. So shall we, if Christ lives in us by faith.

3. Christ's wine the best. V. 10. No doubt the steward had provided the very best wine for this marriage. That was inferior, however, to that provided by Jesus. This is always the case. No joy that the world can give is as good as that which comes to us as we serve and love the Lord Jesus Christ. No peace that man can obtain is equal to that which Jesus gives. Some say that wealth and genius can obtain half so good as a home upon which Christ bestows his daily blessing. Whatever we have, let it only be from Christ, then will our possessions be of a divine quality.

4. Christ's abundant supply. Vs. 6, 7. The pot was equal to seven and a half gallons. Supposing each water pot to contain two firkins, there would be about 30 gallons of wine—more than sufficient for the company. This is like Christ. He always provides an all-sufficiency (Ps. cxxx, 7; Luke xv, 17; Hnb. iv, 16; Rev. xxii, 2).

5. Christ's wine not intoxicating. (1) In ancient times, as now, there were intoxicating and uninebriating wines. Clearly as Homer's day the latter was called "drugged wine," and it was condemned. (2) In the Bible both are both mentioned, the one as a blessing and the other a curse (Prov. xxiii, 29-32). (3) During all ages intoxicating wine has been an abomination (1 Thes. v, 22). In view of these facts there is but one conclusion as to the wine that Jesus made at the Cana marriage—it was not inebriating.

6. The wine made was a product of miraculous power. V. 11. It manifested Christ's glory or Godhood.—The Treasury.

Waiting for the doctor is an incident that comes to every household. If it does not come one time, it comes another. There are almost as many varieties of physicians as there are medicines, and while Dr. A. may do well in some cases, Dr. B. may altogether surpass him in some other class of diseases. It is a wise man who can pick the best doctor for his case; but greater wisdom is shown by whoever is so fortunate as to be prepared in the dubious hour of affliction by having at hand some reliable remedy that can be depended upon. Such a remedy is Mansfield Magic Pain Liniment, a generic pain destroyer—one of the most valuable additions to the catalogue of healing agencies known to modern times. It is peculiarly unique, relieving instantaneously all suffering of either man or animal. No house should be without it. Never fails. Send for a bottle. Mansfield Drug Company, Memphis, Tenn.

Personal Commendation.

The following short article on this subject is so pertinent and just and opportune that we give it to our readers without note or comment." The New York Christian Advocate says:

"To the attention of the church been recently directed to the manner in which many presiding elders praised some the ministers of their districts in elaborate and carefully prepared papers which are now presented? We submit whether the very best work often done under such conditions is not possible to describe it in full? Whether a reduction in the number of members is not often a better proof of fidelity and of ability than, under all the circumstances, a numerical increase could be in that particular case? Whether even a disturbance in some cases does not deserve higher commendation than peace? Whether the payment of a debt does not show more honesty and perseverance than the erection of a church or a parsonage in some other circumstances? Is it, indeed, to merely survive and keep the church together in some communities does not prove a pastor to be more of a man than would be necessarily shown by a crowded house in some other situations? And finally, whether a collection of $80 for the cause of missions reported from some churches does not show more missionary spirit, zeal, and wise management of men than a thousand from some other places?

Tradition reports that Bishop Soule, when a certain pastor reported having successfully raised the money to pay for horse-sheds, exclaimed: "Glory be to God, brother; you deserve the thanks of the whole church! Any man who could induce the people of Brick Hollow to build horse-sheds must have the wisdom of a serpent, the harmlessness of a dove, the song of a nightingale, and the eloquence of a Whitefield." The impossibility of portraying all the conditions justifies the full recounting of facts as far as possible, and the publication of the names of pastors. The church can be trusted to draw proper inferences and give praise where it is due.

It is upon this principle that the Christian Advocate endeavors to collate and display church news, giving facts with warmth and fullness, and, as far as possible, with accuracy; but dispensing with words of praise. Our correspondents will oblige us by observing this rule as far as possible.

The Westlake machine shop has just received a new 30-horse-power engine and other machinery.

We generally expect a slack time in the building way during the Summer months; but the building of the K. C., W. & G. and the Central Sugar Factory and other enterprises, seems to make booming things considerable.—Lake Charles American.

The Echo says that the crop prospects of St. Helena parish were never more flattering at this season of the year than they are to-day. A large yield of corn is almost assured, while the young cotton is in fine condition and growing nicely.

The Opelousas Courier says that Judge T. Falk has contracted with the John M. Ware Well Company, of St. Landry parish, to bore for coal oil and coal on his property, the discovery of which was made some days ago. Each of the parties to the contract are to share the proceeds equally, while the well company defrays all expenses. Work will begin with steam machinery in about two weeks.

Reports from many sections of the parish indicate that the present corn prospect is as good as our farmers have had to gladden their hearts in many years. In the swamp it is immense. In the Oak Ridge country the corn crop is exceedingly fine. And the acreage all over the parish is increased over previous years. We congratulate the busy farmer on the outlook for hog and hominy.—Bastrop Appeal.

Capt. B. W. Marston, of Red river, is in Massachusetts, arranging for the manufacture of an improved cotton huller and gin stand that he has just received a patent for. The Coushatta Citizen says the Captain's "improvement will effectively clean the cotton of all dirt, trash, etc., before the cotton reaches the saws." While the Item hopes there is "a fortune in it" for the inventor, it is regretted that his manufacturn of his machine is not to be carried on in the South.—City Item.

I, A. C. Hafflefinger, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

A correspondent of the Meridian News says: "The Baptist State Convention meets at Natchez about July 23, and there will be a resolution introduced into that body authorizing the Board of Trustees of Mississippi College to remove that institution from Clinton. "Sunday Travel."

An article with the above heading appears in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of June 25, in which, from a quotation made, I suppose the author alludes to a communication of mine appearing June 11. He charges me with endorsing Sunday railroad travel. I meant to endorse no such thing, and intended exactly the contrary. I am sure if you had understood me, Mr. Editor, as that correspondent seems to have done, you would never have given my article a place in the columns of the ADVOCATE. I am sure those who are familiar with my past record never understood me as endorsing Sunday railroad travel. I meant to have been brief, but was sure I would be understood by the thoughtful reader.

In my article, above the quotation Dr. E. B. Partin makes from me, I try to show that the preacher who travels on the train on Sunday actually takes stock in running Sunday trains. Though the train might run on Sunday without him, yet it would not run for him unless he paid his fare, as any business man of the world would. I thought the inference was plain that the preacher bargained and bought, in securing his passage, on the very same principle in which he might bargain and purchase in shop or market. If I was not understood so in my previous article, I wish to be understood now as holding to the fact that all Sunday travelers, others as preachers, if not as fully, they as certainly take part in the sin of running passenger trains on that holy day in which God has said, "Thou shalt do no manner of servile (servileable or profitable) work."

In the quotation referred to: "There are preachers who see nothing peculiar in this transaction to the sacred calling of the minister nor to the sanctity of the holy Sabbath day."

A little further on I say: "It is worthy of remark that there are saintly men whose godly bearing, whose Christly lives, whose spiritual-mindedness and whose heavenly temper exemplify and commend the gospel they preach." Perhaps I ought to have added that these men never bought the privilege of traveling on the railroad on Sunday. I suppose that would have been understood by what had gone before. I wish now to be understood as representing these men whose moral and religious lives are without reproach as holding that there is nothing in the sacred calling of the preacher, or to the sanctity of the holy Sabbath day, creating any difference in the business feature of preachers buying and trading with the railroad company for the privilege of traveling on that day, and business and pleasure-seeking men and women at the same time and place with no difference in the business features of the transaction in purchasing tickets. Certainly if one is permitted, the other is allowable.

I wish here to put myself on record as holding that if the Christian ministers of our land would set themselves without compromise against Sunday trains and Sunday travel, they would soon cease upon our public highways. I am sure the church with its following is able to accomplish this. If it should be discovered by all railroad companies that on a given day in each week they lost money on every train running that day, very soon no trains would run on that day of the week. Make this to occur every Sunday, and almost at once there would be no Sunday trains. J. D. NEWSOM.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Mild but thorough in operation, these pills are the best of all remedies for constipation, biliousness, heartburn, indigestion, flatulency, loss of appetite, liver complaint, and sick headache. They break up colds, fevers, and malaria, relieve rheumatism and neuralgia, and are indispensable to travelers, either by land or sea. Sugar-coated and compounded of the purest vegetable cathartics, they may be taken with impunity by old and young. Physicians recommend these pills in preference to any other. H. W. Hersh, Judsonia, Ark., says: "In 1853, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fevers, and colds. They served me better than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since."

THE LAST DAYS!

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 35 verses. It seems to have fallen in Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and in doing so he has done a great service to the Christian world.

This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

Briefs.

For the eleven months ending May 31 of the present year, the immigrants landed were of the following nationalities: Great Britain and Ireland, 108,831; Germany, 84,630; Austria and Hungary, 50,656; Italy, 45,837; Russia and Poland, 39,626; Sweden and Norway, 35,340, and all other nations, 36,689. Thus only about one-fourth of the grand total (401,609) were English-speaking, and Great Britain, Germany and France together sent less than one-half of all the immigrants.

Dr. Warneck, of Germany, computes the revenues of the missionary societies of the world for 1889 at the following amounts, when reduced to Federal money: Eighteen societies in Germany, $750,000; the Danish Missionary Society, $35,000; three societies in Norway, Sweden and Finland, $167,000; eighteen Dutch societies, $134,000; the French Evangelical Missionary Society, $89,000; twenty-nine societies in Great Britain, $6,125,000; and thirty societies in the United States and Canada, $4,250,000; total for Protestant societies of Europe and America, $11,325,000.

The statistics of the Wesleyans of England, just published, give a total membership in Great Britain of 424,303, which shows a net increase of 688 in the year, with 28,095 on trial for church membership, and 62,416 young persons meeting in junior society classes. Last year the increase was 2,633, and in 1889, 5,161. The Methodist Recorder gives a diagram which shows that the increase in British Methodism for the past forty years is 143,020, or just over fifty per cent., and that during the past thirty-five years, in which there has been no secession, the increase has been 163,445, or a little over fifty-two per cent.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor seems to be growing at a rapid pace. Last year the local societies numbered 11,013; this year they number 16,274; an increase of 5,261 local societies in one year. In 1881 there were only two societies, so that in ten years there has been a gain of 16,272 societies. These societies now contain a membership of 1,008,980. These societies are distributed among the denominations as follows: Presbyterians, 4,019; Congregationalists, 3,545; Baptists, 2,381; Methodists, 2,860; Christian (Disciples), 801. Of the members of these societies 82,500 joined churches last year.

A candidate for priest's orders preaching his extempore trial sermon before the late Archbishop Tait and Dean Stanley, in his nervousness began stammering: "I will divide my congregation into two—the converted and the unconverted." This proved too much for the Primate's sense of humor, and he exclaimed: "I think, sir, as there are only two of us, you had better say which is which."

Arcadia District Conference.

A few years have made a wonderful change in the distance between places. The telegraph has long since outstripped time, and the railroads are putting forth efforts to do the same. From the Crescent City to Vicksburg, by the popular Mississippi Valley Route, days have been reduced to hours. You leave at 5 P. M. from the Poydras street depot, and at 1 A. M. you are in the splendid new hotel, Piazza, at Vicksburg. We hail this new hotel with delight. We have never been more fretted about hotels than heretofore with those in the Hill City. But our days of fretting on that score are ended, because we get comfortable quarters, good beds, good meals and polite attention at this new house.

But a day in Vicksburg in midsummer is something to swelter over. The very memory of it almost starts the perspiration. It reminded us more of Dickens' description of a hot day in Marseilles than anything we have experienced. Besides this, it is a positive outrage for the railroads to arrange their schedules so as to compel passengers from New Orleans going to North Louisiana to stop over twelve hours at Jackson or Vicksburg. How the business men of the country have stood this so long is a mystery!

We leave Vicksburg under the conduct of our old friend, Conductor Bob Chapman, and pass rapidly through a district of country of the richest soil and containing some of the best people, and made forever memorable to us by a three years' term of presiding eldering up and down and in and out and through every part of it. Our old-time co-laborer, Rev. H. O. White, is now going through the same country, doing the same work and, according to report, doing it much better. On time we arrive at Arcadia, the seat of the Conference, and find that the brethren, under the leadership of one of our new presiding elders, Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, have already done a good day's work.

This is one of the largest District Conferences we have visited. All the preachers were present except two, and a large number of laymen. President Sheppard "conducts the business with dispatch, but thoroughly." He is in no haste, but does not suffer time to be wasted in long-winded harangues. He holds the book in his hand and holds the brethren to the points laid down in the book, and so the work moves right along. The representations given by the pastors of the general state of the church work, while not indicating that things are on a boom, showed it to be in a healthy and hopeful condition. The season of protracted meetings not having come around, there have been but few revivals.

Sunday-schools are in good condition and doing important work in the development of young minds and lives in the direction of religion. Finances are at a low ebb. One brother said he "had no financial system," and when asked how he got his money, replied that he "did not get any." The financial pressure has operated heavily all through North Louisiana, and the church and her work and her preachers are always the first and the last to feel that pressure. There is plenty of cotton all about, but, as an old darkey said, "Cotton is very cheap," and is held with the hope of realizing better prices.

President Sheppard introduced a good feature into the daily business of the Conference. He appointed brethren to speak on various subjects, and after the short speech five-minute speeches on the same subject were called for. This had a very fine effect. It relieved the tedium of routine business and gave the audience something to think of and to carry home. We had fine discussions of Sunday-school work, church extension work, missionary work and temperance work. Besides this there was preaching every day and every night, and it was good and did good. The Conference passed strong anti-Lottery resolutions by a unanimous and rising vote. There is no mistaking the temper of the North Louisiana people on the subject of the Lottery, and they are not in the mood to be fooled with on that subject.

The following brethren were elected on the first ballot as delegates to the next session of the Louisiana Conference: W. F. Moreland, W. A. J. Lewis, L. R. Lay and S. D. Rinehart. The alternates are: D. T. Lane and J. W. Dawson.

The attendance of the people on the daily sessions was good, and the attendance on preaching was very fine. The hospitality of Arcadia drew from the Conference an enthusiastic resolution of thanks. It was really superb in its genuine Christian character. The next session will be held at Gibsland, and we know from experience that that is a good place to hold a Conference. Altogether, Bro. Sheppard's District Conference was a success.

Monday morning we bid adieu to kind friends and started back to the dust and dirt of our great city. On the way back we met up with Bishop Galloway returning from a short, working trip into Texas. He had been from home twelve days and had held three District Conferences, preached and spoke twelve times, raised $2,000 for Georgetown University and traveled about 1,000 miles. Who can pack more work into twelve days than that?

The crops in the section through which we passed are very promising, and the general rain on Sunday night assures a fair crop of corn. So endeth this chapter.

Can't It Be Cured?

There is an evil in our churches in towns and cities which has been pointed out time after time, but which still continues. While it is plainly seen and fully recognized, it has not been abated. It continues to-day and, perhaps, has grown in proportions. To our mind it is one of the gravest evils, and if it is not corrected, it will entail immense loss on the church of the future.

We refer to the fact that the Sunday-school has so far taken the place of the church, that the scholars appear to have no sense of the obligation to attend the preaching of the gospel. In our towns and cities, as far as our observation extends, very few of the Sunday-school scholars attend the regular morning service. Numbers of them never attend any of the preaching services. To scores of these scholars the preaching service would be a strange service. They would not understand it at all.

Many of our pastors see this evil and have perplexed their brains to find the remedy. Some have tried to hold the children at church by preaching a five-minute sermon to them before the regular sermon. This may work for a short time, but eventually fails. Various other plans have been tried, but the evil continues. We have thought over this matter a good deal, and yet we are not clear that we have anything definite to propose which might work a cure. We give the question to our readers, lay and cleric, and ask for views on this subject. It is important—much more so than some other things which consume so much of time and thought. Who will answer?

A Good Meeting at Shubuta, Miss.

After the impressive and delightful service of dedication, we began a meeting for revival in our new church here. This, let me say, was built at a cost of two thousand dollars, all raised at home, and without the aid of any kind of "entertainment." Its erection without a dime of debt represents real self-sacrifice on the part of a majority of the membership. Some have done specially well. Their record is on high. A lay brother promises to write you of this good preparation for revival, and of the eminently grand and suitable discourse of our Bishop Galloway. He and all of us prayed earnestly that the glory of the Lord might descend and fill his earthly temple. We were strengthened and filled with inspiring hope. Continued to hold prayer meetings till Thursday. On that afternoon Rev. John Boring, of Johnson City, Tenn., with his deep-toned and sweet-spirited singer, L. R. Gilreath, came down from their successful meeting at Enterprise.

It is impossible rightly to characterize or adequately to depict the style of this gospel preacher. His knowledge of the exact language and position of hundreds of important Scripture texts is a marvel to all his hearers. In this lies his special power to awaken thought and quicken the conscience. True, he has a perfect, because perfectly natural, dramatic gift. He has also the finest command of homely and harmless wit we have ever listened to. Again, his voice and vigor of body and mind seem unfailing. Yet the secret of his great influence for good lies along the path his Master trod—reasoning out of the Scriptures, illustrating by the commonest and plainest things about us; with humility, looking to God for results, he wields the sword of the Spirit like a flashing Damascus blade of heavenly temper keen. Often in future will the "bells of conscience" ring in our ears, "Thus saith the Lord." "There it is in the Book. Go and read it for yourself."

A little prolixity and carelessness of language go for no more than spots on the sun! Long may he burn and shine! The general voice of our people declares this to be the best meeting ever had in the place, though only four united with the church. The work was within its pales chiefly. Few were left outside.

A large proportion of our Christian people professed to be greatly blessed. The attendance was unusually good from the beginning, growing all the while to the last and best day, Sunday, July 5.

"Brother, come again," is the universal cry. We owe many thanks to Bro. Chambers for counsel and substantial help. To God we render praise and take courage to go forward.

J. P. DRAKE.

A New Way.

It has long bothered our pastors to find a way to help mothers who have young children and no servants to get to church on Sunday mornings. There are many such who would attend service regularly, if they could have their children properly cared for. This matter has apparently been solved by a pastor out West. We give the following description of his plan from the Mid-Continent:

The Rev. G. L. McNult, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, East Oakland, Cal., while making his round of visitation among the people, after assuming his pastoral duties, which he did some time ago, discovered among them a number of mothers with small children, too young to take with them to church, and with no one in whose care to leave them, but who expressed a desire to attend the services, provided some way of leaving their children could be devised. This set him to thinking, and prompted him to have a conference with his officers, which resulted in the opening in one of the rooms of the church of a kindergarten, continuing during the time of public worship on Sabbath morning, where all young children of persons desiring to attend the services could be placed, and where they were taken care of until called for when the exercises were over. The instruction is of a religious character, illustrated with stereopticon pictures thrown on canvass by means of sunlight, representing largely Bible scenes, and is in charge of a regularly trained kindergarten teacher, who takes great interest in her work, and who is much encouraged by the success with which her efforts so far have been attended. The school began three months ago, with only three or four little ones as pupils, but as it has become known and its value has been made apparent, it has increased in popularity and, as a consequence, in attendance, so that the number present is now sometimes more than thirty, with a prospect of still further increase.

The results of the experiment have proved more gratifying than was anticipated when it was first undertaken, and the officers and members of the church are well satisfied with them. Still they seem determined to do more in this direction than they have yet done, with the hope that the other churches will be prompted by the example and encouraged by its good results to undertake a similar work themselves.

Meridian District Conference.

Our District Conference convened at State Line, Miss., July 2, 1891. We did not have a full attendance, yet the meeting was interesting. The brethren seemed to be in the Spirit. Pastoral reports were an average, but not as encouraging as they might have been. We had a number of good sermons, among which Bro. Yoshioka preached two very striking sermons. They brought Japan very near us, and gave us a love for those people and for God and his kingdom in that benighted land that we never had before. It inspired the pastor to organize a children's prayer meeting, which has made a beautiful and promising beginning. God grant that the time may speedily come when every soul shall be brought to a full knowledge of a life hid with God in Christ Jesus in our beloved land, and when God shall claim the heathen for his heritage! Our District Conference, upon the whole, was edifying. Bro. Mellen presided with his usual warmth and gravity. The Conference closed Saturday, but we continued the meeting. Some of the brethren left Saturday night, or, rather, Sunday A. M.; others Monday A. M.

Bro. John W. Chambers came to my assistance Monday A. M., and conducted the meeting until last night, July 9. There has been much good done; the church revived and seven accessions. Interest increased every day. While we had clouds and rain we had also the presence of the Holy Spirit. Bro. Chambers has gained a name for himself among my people, and his labors have left a savor of life. Pray God that the tidal song may roll on until it is caught up by every soul and lisped by every tongue!

"Jesus, name so dear to me,
How precious to my soul!
The power and goodness of that name
Can never all be told."

PASTOR.

Letter from our Mexican Missionary.

After la grippe I had a very acute attack of pneumonia, and by order of Bishop Haygood and of Dr. Lawson, who attended me, I left the republic for my native home with the hope of regaining my health. I am now at Livingston, Ala., visiting friends and drinking this wonderful water in the hope that it will benefit me. I am improving slowly, and hope to be able to return to Mexico next month. I am putting in a word for our work and cause in Mexico as opportunity affords, and hope the time lost from the field may bear some fruit in the church at home. J. M. WEEMS.

Personal and Otherwise.

The great camp meeting at Seashore began yesterday. We hope to give a full account in our next issue.

The M. E. Church is to have a week of self-denial for missions, beginning Sept. 27.

The same church is supporting, in whole or in part, in its domestic missions 3,526 missionaries with $477,492.

According to the last census there are 6,250,000 Roman Catholics over fifteen years of age in the United States.

Louisiana gets $31,000 from the National Government for her agricultural colleges; $15,000 for 1890 and $16,000 for 1891.

Whitworth's new catalogue, have you seen it? Send to President Fitzhugh and get one and learn something of that fine college.

Rev. T. J. Newell obliges us by sending a catalogue of his flourishing Institute at Grenada. He has had a prosperous session, and is looking for an increase in prosperity next session.

This is a gratifying personal from the Alabama Advocate:

We are glad to learn that Dr. McCoy is improving, and that the physicians entertain strong hopes of his final recovery.

Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, accompanied by his wife, passed through the city last Wednesday en route to San Antonio, Texas, to visit his son, H. B. Magruder, who is in a low state of health.

George Francis Train has made another trip around the world to beat the record. He accomplished the journey in sixty-two and one-half days, which beats Nellie Bly's time by ten days.

It is said that in that part of the Mississippi river from eight miles below to five miles above Baton Rouge no less than fifty steamboats have been wrecked by storms during the last twenty-five years.

The ninth annual report of the Board of Church Extension of our church has come to hand and is an instructive document. Send to Dr. Morton and get a copy and learn what we are doing in building churches.

Dr. Hunnicutt spent several days of last week in our city. He is working "wisely and well" for his college, and is succeeding and getting more hopeful all the time. Let everybody help him, and thus help the cause of Christian education.

On account of the illness of Mrs. Key, Bishops Key and Duncan have exchanged Western Conferences. Bishop Duncan will hold the Montana, East Columbia and Columbia Conferences, and Bishop Key will hold the Denver and New Mexico Conferences.

Rev. W. P. Lovejoy, president of the North Georgia Conference Board of Missions, has suggested that the second week in August be observed as a week of prayer and self-denial by the Methodists of North Georgia. A good suggestion! What do the presidents of our Boards say in regard to the matter?

Our young friend, McKendree M. Black, of Jackson, Miss., has secured the agency for Yaggy's Charts (geographical, physiological and astronomical) designed for use in public and private schools and colleges. He expects to visit all the leading towns in Mississippi during July and August, and we bespeak for him a careful consideration of his mission and his goods.

Juvenile Paper.

At the recent meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions, at Fort Worth, Texas, it was decided to adopt the Little Worker as our juvenile organ. It has hitherto been published under the auspices of the North Georgia Conference Society. Now, with its 3,000 subscribers, it becomes the property of our Woman's Board. Our North Mississippi Conference Society thought it would be best for each auxiliary to appoint an agent from among its juveniles to work for it. Let all subscriptions be sent to the following address: Agent Little Worker, care Publishing House, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.

Miss Annie Maria Barnes, the editor, and also editor of Leaflets, is well known as a writer throughout our church. Her address is Duluth, Ga. Let us see how large a list North Mississippi can send in.

—Rev. T. W. Dyo writes: "In my late report of the Grenada commencement, the type or my pen played truant. Miss Sallie G. Starks (a name destined to fame), and not 'Storks,' was in charge of the art department of Grenada Collegiate Institute."

—Rev. S. H. Whatley writes: "Dr. A. D. McVoy, of Mansfield College, dedicated the new Caddo Church, nine miles west of Shreveport, La. Keatchie had preaching from Wednesday to Saturday night by Rev. W. F. Henderson. Splendid rain, Sunday night and Monday. Crops fine; health good."

—Rev. H. H. Ahrens writes from Franklin, La.: "Our meeting at Franklin lasted ten days, resulting in nine conversions and seven additions. We were ably supported by Rev. F. S. Parker, of New Iberia. Our Quarterly Conference, held July 4, was a means of blessing to officials and pastors. Our six o'clock Friday morning prayer meeting is attended by an average of fifteen persons; the special object of which is to invoke the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon the Sabbath services. Expect shortly to begin a meeting in Jeanerette."

—Rev. T. L. Mellen writes: "At the recent session of the Meridian District Conference the following were elected delegates to the Mississippi Annual Conference: John S. Turner, President C. W. Anderson, L. P. Brown and Rev. R. C. Gavin; with Hon. Jesse Byrd and Thomas C. Harmon as alternates. The session was harmonious, spiritual, with preaching from such veterans as W. B. Hines, C. G. Andrews, D. C. Langford and L. P. Meador, as well as from the younger brethren, that was in the demonstration of the Spirit. Our Japanese brother, Rev. Y. Yoshioka, made a fine impression."

—Rev. W. D. Bass writes as follows: "Have just closed a good meeting of eight days' duration in Poutotoc, in which we were ably assisted by Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Blue Springs, Miss., whose sermons were so full of logic, metaphorical illustrations and divine truths, that they became the topic of discussion on the streets by all denominations, and we are serving a people whose intelligence renders them fully competent to judge what a sermon is. Six joined the church by certificates; congregations and singing good; the church greatly blessed. Eternity alone will reveal the good accomplished. Will also add that our people will be glad to have Bro. McKeown to come and hold another meeting some time in the future. Pray for us."

—Rev. F. H. G. Taylor writes from Lake Providence, La: "Although I have recently written to the ADVOCATE, giving an account of the workings of the good Lord, through Bro. Isbell, on this charge, I can not refrain from giving you an additional item happening since I wrote. After the sermon, at Bro. Isbell's last country appointment, Transylvania, he opened the doors of the church, and six adults and two bright little girls of twelve years old joined the church, and next morning another adult, by a written communication to our pastor, added himself to this list, making nine in all, and they are among the first people in the community. Such a thing in that neighborhood has never occurred in the history of this parish before. To our blessed Master be all the praise."

Meridian District.

Dear Brethren: Our recent District Conference showed you how far all the pastoral charges, excepting Enterprise and Stonewall station and Shuhuta circuit, were in the matter of Conference collections and even subscriptions. I need not urge you, brethren, to make such earnest efforts, such persistent efforts, that the third round of Quarterly Conferences will show a better condition of affairs. The needs are urgent. Read the address of the Bishops and go ahead with your collections.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A LEGEND.

BY LILLIAN GREY.

For back in the Middle Ages
A wonderful story was told,
Which thrilled the hearts of the hearers,
And this is the legend old:

"Go," said a king to his servants,
"Out in the morning's sun,
Go, find me a gem for my royal crown,
And bring it when day is done.
There are jewels rare and precious
That wait for the gathering in,
And he who shall bring the fairest
A seat at my side shall win.
All jewels that ye bring me
Shall for some purpose suffice,
But the chosen gem for my crown must hold
The light of the morning skies,
Must be without flaw or blemish,
Unstained with the dust of earth;
Go, search the wide land over
For this jewel of priceless worth."

And the servants bowed, and vanished
From the presence of their king;
With hearts so loyal and tender,
All eager the prize to bring:
"Now, where shall we go?" they questioned;
"To the mountains craggy and steep?
To the fair and blooming meadows,
Or the mines so gloomy and deep?
Shall we search in the traveled highways,
In the marts of traffic and gain?
Or out in secluded by-ways,
Or far on the dusty plain?
Perchance by the pebbled edges
Of streams swift-flowing they lie—
The precious stones that we covet;
We fear lest we pass them by!"

Then widely the seekers scattered,
For they were of many minds:
Some went to high rocky ledges,
And some where the river winds
Down through secluded valleys,
And others to caverns deep,—
And some to the shore of the ocean,
And others where toilers reap
The wealth of the golden harvest;
And so to the east and west,
The north and the south, they journeyed,
Intent on their high behest.
And the day grew older and older,
And hotter the burning sun,
But they wavered not, for thinking
Of the treasure that must be won.

And one with heart high-beating,
Sped through a city street,
Crossing dim lanes and alleys
With footsteps eager and fleet;
The morning sun was behind him,
And the unsearched country before;
Far out of the beaten highways,
He fain would seek and explore.
But lo! in a dank, foul alley,
Straight in his pathway there lay
A little child, half-fainting,
Ragged, and pinched and gray
With hunger and fear and sorrow,
With pleading, pathetic eyes
That moved the soul of the traveler,
Who halted in grieved surprise.

And then he stooped, and lifted
The waif to his sturdy breast,
And turning back to his humble room,
Forgetting his earnest quest,
He fed the famishing creature,
And stayed the pitiful tears,
And bathed and newly clothed him,
And soothed his tremulous fears.
And all day long he served him,
Half-fancying that he dreamed,
For the wretched child in the alley found
Like a fairy changeling seemed;
Such sweetness and grace were on him,
Such love in his wondrous eyes,
That the man stayed spell-bound by his side
As if held with the tenderest ties.

But when it drew toward evening,
And slanting the sunset light,
"I must go," said he, "to the palace gate
For a little while to-night;
For the king I have no jewel,
Save the love of my loyal heart,
But that I'll offer, and gladly lose
In the day's reward my part."
Then the child unclasped his fingers,
Which had been close-shut all day,
"Now here is a gift I give to thee,
Take that to thy king, I pray!"
And he held his small hand outward,
And there in the fair, pink palm
Lay a jewel of wonderful brightness,
Like the sun's rays pure and calm.

"Nay, child, keep thy wondrous treasure!"
"Nay, take it!" the child replied,
"It is thine!" and the man all meekly,
And as in a dream complied:
And up to the door of the palace,
In the gloaming still and dim,
He went all filled with wonder
At the miracle wrought with him.
And one by one the seekers,
Some, weary and travel-stained,
Came up to the king's high presence,
To show what their toil had gained:
To lay at their master's feet,
But of all of the jewels no single one
For the diadem was meet.

Then tremblingly came the servant
Who had tarried at home that day,
Who had given up high resolves to do
The duty that nearest lay.
He came and held his jewel
High up for the king to see,
And the dome of the palace was all alight
With its marvelous brilliancy:
And the king reached down and took it,
And turned it o'er and o'er;
No other gem was so pure and rare
In all that goodly store:
Then said the king, kind smiling,
"This jewel all undefiled,
For the royal crown is meet, and shows
The worth of a little child!"

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking some time about writing to you. I am a constant reader of the children's department, and have never noticed any letters from this part of the country. I am a little girl twelve years old. I have five little sisters and one little brother. We have service once a month in the Presbyterian Church. We have no Methodist Church. We are trying to organize a Sunday-school, and hope we will succeed. Hoping this will escape the waste-basket, I remain,

Very respectfully,

ELLA E. BOOKSH.

Rosedale, La.

MR. EDITOR: I have never written to your paper before, but I hope you will publish this. I want to surprise my grandfather (Mr. B. F. Bonney), who lives in Waterproof, where you, Mr. Editor, have preached a good many times, my mama says. I have two sisters, one older and one younger than myself, and a little brother dead. I have two horses, Topsy and her colt. I will be nine years old in December. Yours truly,

MAC HOPKINS.

Outdone by a Boy.

A lad in Boston, rather small for his years, works in an office as an errand boy for four gentlemen who do business there. One day the gentlemen were chaffing him a little about being so small, and said to him:

"You never will amount to much, you never can do much business, you are too small."

The little fellow looked at them.

"Well," said he, "small as I am, I can do something which none of you four men can do."

"Ah, what is that?" they asked.

"I don't know as I ought to tell you," he replied. But they were anxious to know, and urged him to tell what he could do that none of them were able to do.

"I can keep from swearing!" said the little fellow. There were some blushes on four manly faces, and there seemed to be very little anxiety for further information on the point.—The Sign.

Mother looked over the shoulder of her little girl, who was groaning over the map of Africa, and exclaimed: "Why, how that map has changed since I was a child! Then it had only a few towns about the coast, and all the middle was a blank. We didn't have to learn much about Africa in those days." "I know it," cried the little girl, almost in tears, "and it's all the fault of that dreadful Mr. Stanley!"

Warm weather often causes extreme tired feeling and debility, and in the weakened condition of the system, diseases arising from impure blood are liable to appear. To gain strength, to overcome disease, and to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

THE ANT'S SUSPENSION BRIDGE.—You have heard of the suspension bridges made by men. Now let me tell you of a curious one made by some of the smallest creatures that live.

Men use wire ropes, very strong; but here are the driver ants of Africa, so small that you can hardly see them. Yet they do wonderful work at making bridges without any rope.

This is the way they go about it. One of the largest ants takes hold of the branch of a tree with its fore legs, letting its body hang. Another climbs down over the first one, and clings to his hind-legs, letting his body hang down, Thus they keep on until these bright little fellows form a chain.

Then away they go, swinging until the end ant can get hold of something, usually some tree or shrub—and the bridge is done!

A regiment of ants go over this live suspension bridge. When all are over, the ant on the first tree lets go the branch and climbs over the string. The next one follows this example, and pretty soon they all take their places at the rear end of the marching company. These ants have big heads, and they must have a good deal of brain to help them.—Mrs. G. Hall, in Our Little Ones.

HOUSEHOLD.

Implicit Obedience.

I spoke to a lady the other day of her sister-in-law, who is one of my esteemed neighbors. "How well she is managing her four children without any nurse!" I exclaimed. "She looks calm and untroubled, and yet I know she is delicate."

"She is a woman of great decision of character," was the answer. "She has a system about the children. She never allows them to question what she says, and you know that saves a great deal of fret and worry."

The next morning I made a short call on the subject of our remarks. The lady came into the parlor, and, after shaking hands with me, turned to take a chair, and found that the two-year-old baby had followed her. "Why, baby, I did not know you were here. Run out to brother." "No, me don't want to!" "Oh, yes!" was the smiling answer. "Brother will play school with you."

The baby retreated slowly, till she reached the middle of the room, and there she stood with her finger in her mouth eyeing her mother closely. The mother had turned in her chair away from me, and was watching the baby smilingly. It was evident that the caller was entirely forgotten for the moment; it was of the first importance that the baby should mind. I made a little note of the fact, too, that there was no "prunes and persimmons" expression on the mother's pretty face. She had simply spoken, and now expected the baby to do as she said.

"No," burst from the baby.

"Oh, yes," smiled mamma. "Brother is all ready to play with you."

The baby stood a moment longer, finger in her mouth, studying her mother's face, and then ran out of the room. Then, and not until then, did the mother give me her attention.

The incident made such an impression on me that I want to write it for young mothers. I began with the theory that the best way to bring up a child was to reason with him, and in that way teach him obedience. I abandoned that theory long ago, and wish now that I had never held it for a day. When "implicit obedience" was brought to my mind, I rejected it, largely because, under my new responsibility, I was newly conscious of my own fallibility.

"How can I," I would say to myself, "always know the right command to enforce?" Now I say to myself, "Be as nearly right as you can, but go ahead." Implicit obedience, lovingly enforced, is the only way to bring up a child, and "eternal vigilance" is its price.—Methodist Recorder.

Doing Another's Duty.

Unconscious self-betrayal is the most powerful of witnesses in determining social rank. The true lady shows her training in every word and gesture, but the pretender is to often found napping. A little girl, shopping with her mother one day, was sitting contentedly on a counter stool, and watching the people as they came and went.

Presently she saw a lady elegantly dressed, who stopped at their counter and handed a waterproof and umbrella to the young girl in charge.

"Take care of these things till I call for them," she said in an autocratic tone, and sailed away.

The bright eyes of the child followed her. The little face wore a look of distress.

"Why, mamma," she whispered, "she didn't even say 'please.'"

Sooner than she had expected, the lady returned.

"I will take my things," she said.

There was some little delay in finding them.

"I hope you have not lost or misplaced them," she said to the young girl, in a severe tone.

Neither misfortune had happened; the articles were found, and taking them without a word, the lady walked away. This was more than the child could bear. Leaning over so that her sweet face came close to that of the clerk, she said, graciously, "Thank you!"—Detroit Free Press.

SCIENTIFIC.

Wonderful Sights on the Sun.

The ancients who believed that the sun was as smooth and spotless as a golden mirror would be unspeakably astonished if they could see it as it has appeared when viewed with telescopes during the past few days. Two large groups, or rather rows, of spots, which are yet visible near the centre of the disk, have exhibited to a wonderful degree the terrific effects of the explosive and cyclonic forces that are now, month by month, gathering greater energy upon the sun. Holes large enough to swallow up the earth, with plenty of room to spare, have been formed there in the sight of the astronomer; shining bars have been shot across the dark chasms like bridges of fire; the twisted forms of the great flame-like phenomena which project hundreds of miles over the edges of the seemingly black and bottomless pits, have given evidence of the operation of a mighty whirling power, and the puncturing of the bright disk with crowds of comparatively small black holes in the neighborhood of the greater spots, has shown that over hundreds of thousands of square miles of the solar surface a tremendous rain of ejected matter is falling back upon the blazing photosphere.

Yet the change that these outbursts are able to effect in the solar light and heat bear so small a proportion to the whole radiative energy of the sun that it is still an open question whether the earth feels them to a perceptible degree or not. It is only when a sun bursts out with such overwhelming might as was exhibited by the famous star in Cassiopea in 1572, or by a star in Cygnus in 1876, or by a star in Andromeda in 1885, that the planets circling around it are swept with fire. There is no known reason to believe that our sun will behave in that manner, at least in our time, and so everybody can enjoy the marvellous spectacle of the sunspots without apprehension for their consequences.—New York Sun.

The Phosphorescence of Diamonds.

In the New York Sun, Mr. G. F. Kunz, the well-known expert in gems, has recently called attention to a property of the diamond which may serve as a means of distinguishing it from other substances. Referring to the paper of Robert Boyle "On a Remarkable Diamond that Shines in the Dark," published in the transactions of the Royal Society in 1663, Mr. Kunz remarks that this paper has been indirectly alluded to by a number of authors, but never read. Among a quantity of facts Boyle mentions one diamond that phosphoresced simply by the heat of the hand, absorbed light by being held near a candle, and emitted light on being rubbed. He stated that many diamonds emitted light by being rubbed in the dark. The experiments made by Mr. Kunz shows conclusively not only that Boyle's statement that some diamonds phosphoresce in the dark after exposure to the sunlight or an arc of electric light, is true, but also that all diamonds emit light by rubbing them on wood, cloth, or metal, a property which will probably prove of great value in distinguishing between the diamond and other hard stones, as well as paste, none of which exhibit this phenomenon, and will be welcomed by the general public who do not possess the experience of the dealer in diamonds. The property is evidently not electric, or it would not be visible on being rubbed on metal.—Scientific American.

THE BREATHING OF A LOCOMOTIVE.—The "breathing" of a locomotive—that is to say, the number of puffs given by a railway engine during its journey—depends upon the circumference of its driving wheels and their speed. No matter what the rate of speed may be, for every one round of the driving wheels a locomotive will give four puffs—two out of each cylinder, the cylinders being double. The sizes of driving wheels vary, some being 18, 19, 20, and even 22 feet in circumference, although they are generally made of about 20 feet. The express speed varies from 54 to 58 miles an hour. Taking the average circumference of the driving wheel to be 20 feet, and the speed per hour 50 miles, a locomotive will give, going at express speed, 880 puffs per minute, or 52,800 puffs per hour, the wheel revolving 13,200 times in 60 minutes, giving 1,056 puffs per mile—Scientific American.

An Extraordinary Case!

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 22, 1890.

Last April I was attacked with Chagres Fever in Spanish Honduras and was given up to die by two physicians. During that spell and since I have used a pound of quinine and quantities of other medicines without any benefit. From three to four days out of every week I have been down and have suffered untold agonies. Between these spells I could scarcely walk more than two blocks at a time. I did not expect to live through the coming winter. Ten days ago I commenced using Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. I have had no fever since. All the symptoms have entirely disappeared. I have no pain or trouble of any kind. Am gaining strength very fast. Can walk miles at a time. My sudden and rapid improvement is simply wonderful. Germetuer has been a God-send to me. I can not say too much in its praise. Any who wish to do so may call on me. DANIEL PAFFON, 481 Jersey Street.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1891.

My improvement continued, and soon after writing the above statement I was able to go to work and have been working ever since. My health is now perfect. I never felt better in my life. I give this testimony gladly, because I know that Germetuer saved my life. DANIEL PAFFON.

Chagres Fever is known to be not only a most dangerous form of sickness, but also very difficult to cure. Germetuer has been tried on a number of cases. In every known instance it has cured quickly and completely. It has a similar record as a remedy for Swamp Fever and Malarial troubles of all kinds. Properly used, it is the quickest and most unfailing remedy for Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Debility, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Dysentery and all diseases of the blood and Skin.

These claims are sustained by evidences from thousands of the best people in the country, and the evidences multiply in our midst every day.

For sale by druggists and country merchants, and at the Germetuer office, 202 Canal St., New Orleans. For full information, circulars, etc., call on or address Kit Williams, Agent, 202 Canal St. $1 bottle; six bottles for $5.

OBITUARIES.

BARNES—At half-past eight o'clock A. M., Sunday, May 31, 1891, HENRY PINKNEY BARNES passed away from earth to heaven. Bro. Barnes was a native of North Carolina, and was in his eighty-third year when he died. He was married, in his native State, to Miss Mary Ann Thompson in 1829, and removed to Carroll county, Miss., in 1839. His residence in Crystal Springs began in January, 1861. For thirty years he was a faithful and useful member of the M. E. Church, South, in this place. He will be kindly und affectionately remembered by many pastors and other ministers who have met him at Henington Camp Meeting.

Bro. Barnes was his pastor's friend. He loved his society. He was always, when able to be present, in his place in the sanctuary. He enjoyed the services of God's house. He loved his prayer meeting. He was a uniform Christian. At home, in the family, in the business circles—everywhere he was a Christian. He was a consistent Christian. He believed; therefore spoke. He had convictions and acted them out. He was an intelligent Christian. He knew why he was a Methodist, and why he was not something else. He was posted on the living religious issues of the day. He was a reading, thinking man. He was a man of prayer. He believed in the efficacy of prayer. He prayed for sinners and was much concerned for them. He carried on his heart the members of his household. Though feeble and in extreme age, he retained to the last his strong, active mental powers. His widow, two daughters and one son remain. But he is at home. May they follow on!

R. D. NORSWORTHY.

KING—MRS. CLARA ANN KING (nee Scale) passed peacefully to rest Jan. 19, 1891, at her old home of dear memories, near Hamburg, Franklin county, Miss.

Sister King was born Dec. 18, 1836, near Zion Hill, Amite county. When six years old her father moved to Franklin county, where she spent the remainder of her life. Feb. 23, 1850, she was converted, and joined Spring Hill Baptist Church, Aug. 7, 1853. She moved her membership by letter, Feb. 26, 1859, to Union Baptist Church. In the fall of 1872 she united with the Methodist Church, and died in that faith.

Sister King was twice married. Her first marriage was on Dec. 18, 1856, to Mr. Geo. P. Lazarus with whom she lived happily until his death, Feb. 22, 1863. By this union God blessed her home with two little girls. On Jan. 11, 1866, she married Mr. David King. Her second husband died March 5, 1879; leaving her with two little boys to care for.

Sister King was a sweet-spirited Christian, a faithful wife, a kind sympathizing friend, and a devoted mother. Her four children are all members of the church. The last year of her life was spent near the mercy seat of Christ. She delighted in talking on religion and contemplating the precious promises of Jesus. The last sermon she heard was Rev. xx, 12; the last chapter read John xiv. "Let not your heart be troubled." She sleeps in peace, having lived a long and useful life. God bless and comfort her sorrowing loved ones, is the prayer of

Her pastor, CHAS. W. CUISLER.

PEMBLE—LEONORA G. PEMBLE (nee Rowley) died June 28, 1891. She was a sufferer; consumption licked up her blood. The mother's heart yearned for her children—she was loth to leave them; but grace triumphed, and she began in the agonies of death the pean of a noble victory. Human nature shrinks from death, but Christian nature can exclaim: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

She is not dead; she has only begun to live. The eye that looked upon loved ones, the lips that breathed their names, are closed; but she has not ceased to be. Her body is buried out of sight; but her spirit has returned to God who gave it. Friends sorrow, but not as those without hope. Their hearts are broken; but in accents sweet as music they hear the precious words, "Let not your hearts be troubled." "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." He "shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." "Because I live, ye shall live also."

PASTOR.

McDONALD—WILLIAM PURIFOY, son of W. D. and Julia McDonald, was born at Union Church, Jefferson county, Miss., Sep. 7, 1887, and died in Russum, Claiborne county, Miss., on June 19, 1891. His sweet little spirit took its departure from this earthly house to that "house not made with hands, but eternal in the heavens." He was taken with congestion, and despite the efforts of physicians to restore to health, that infectious hand of death seized him and claimed him for its own.

This little one, only three years nine months and twelve days old, occupied one of the tenderest spots in the affections of kind and gentle parents, for, 'tis said, he was a child of no mean intellect—in fact, was above the average in intelligence, and always looked forward to the Lord's day with delight. J. M. COWAN.

WEBB—Died May 28, 1891, at her home in Amite county, Miss., Sister L. C. WEBB. She was born in Georgia, April 23, 1830; was joined in marriage to Bro. Pleasant Webb, September, 1850, which union was a happy one for forty long years.

Truly a mother in Israel has gone. The Methodist Church of which she was a devout member has lost a strong stay, the community a friend, and the family their all and in all, humanly speaking.

Sister Webb was of a noble family, and hence she leaves some noble sons and daughters to mourn their loss. May God bless and comfort the husband and children! J. H. LANE.

TURPIN—MINNIE OFELIA TURPIN was born Oct. 13, 1890, and departed this life May 18, 1891, aged seven months and five days. Minnie was a lovely child, the charm of the home, and loved and petted by all who knew her; but that flower was too pure for this sinful world, and God, who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," has taken it to himself, where it will bloom in eternal springs.

BELLE BESSON.

WILLIAMS—SISTER LOUVICY WILLIAMS was born in South Carolina, March 23, 1798, and departed this life in Claiborne parish, La., near Mt. Moriah Church, June 20, 1891, aged ninety-three years two months and twenty-seven days.

For seventy years Sister Williams lived a most exemplary life in the Methodist Church, relying upon the promises of God, and defending his Word whenevur assailed in her presence. She kept her Bible near at hand, and had read it through seven times since the war between the States, and with but little trouble could locate any Scripture repeated in her hearing; and altogether, she was the most interesting person of her age that I ever met. For five months and twenty days she lay on the bed of affliction rejoicing in the hope of a blessed immortality. She leaves a host of descendants and friends to take up her abode in the realms of eternal rest. May God bless the bereaved ones. J. M. MANLEY.

MARTIN—FINANCE ADELLA, daughter of F. P. and Clementine Welch, was born in Vernon parish, La., Jun. 14, 1868, and was married, at the age of fifteen, to Mr. Henry Martin, and died in the same country on June 19, 1891, in the full triumphs of faith in Christ. Her last hours were simply grand. She saw the angels and heard their music and talked with Jesus, and died asking her dear ones and friends to meet her in heaven.

She was a member of the Baptist Church at Mount Olive, in Vernon parish, and was a shining light for Jesus. No lady of her community was more humble and pure; no one bore trials and underwent hardships with more resignation than Finance Adelia Martin.

May our dear Savior graciously keep the dear ones—especially the five little children left to the hands of others! R. M. BLOCKER.

HUNT—GUSSIE, only daughter of David King and Clara Hunt, of Vidalia, Concordia parish, La., passed away at 2:30 P. M., on June 29, 1891, after forty-six days of intense agony caused by that dread scourge, diphtheria.

Few are the words necessary to announce the above; yet how much is contained in them, not only to the parents who have lost their darling, but to the many who knew and loved little Gussie Hunt. During all those long forty-six days, when her sufferings were so intense and heart-rending to those who saw them, not a complaint escaped her lips; only a look of unutterable suffering and resignation, which, in one so young, was most remarkable, and shows the comfort that religion is to children. Gussie had been a member of the Sunday-school, of which her father is superintendent, since she was old enough to walk, and during intervals when no Sunday-school was held, service was conducted by her father at home; but it was only at a protracted meeting held this year that she joined the church and became a member of Christ's visible kingdom on earth, and the parents are comforted and supported in their affliction by the knowledge that their darling is now another "jewel in the Redeemer's crown." Gussie's example did much good during her life; it will live now that she has gone. Her last word, a whisper, was, "Heaven."

May God comfort and console the parents, and may the remembrance that she awaits them at the "pearly gates" abide with them! Parents, pray for them. WALTER DUNSTAN.

COLEMAN—Sister MARTHA FRANCES COLEMAN was born Sept. 31, 1848; was married Nov. 27, 1866, and died June 16, 1891.

Sister Coleman went in "full assurance of faith." Having been converted to God and joined the church when a girl, she lived a consistent Christian life until she was removed from this life. Her family, which is large, consisting of husband and ten children, will sadly miss her care and Christian example; the community, a "good Samaritan" in all save that she was a follower of Christ, and the church one of its most consistent and devoted members.

K. S. ENOCHS, P. C.

We're not waiting for the hats and moles, but for men and women who have eyes and use them, who have brains and reason! There's a new world for them—suffering and sickly as they are—a new world created from the brain of a skillful physician—a discovery—the "Golden Medical Discovery."

Years ago Dr. Pierce found out that the secret of all scrofula, bronchial, throat and lung trouble lay—in the beginning, at least—in impure blood and the weak tone of the system; that the way to cure these effects was to remove the cause; that human nature being the same, the same results might be looked for in nearly all cases. So confident was he that the exceptions were uncommon that he took the risk of giving the medicine to those it didn't benefit for nothing, and the results have proved that he was right.

And "Golden Medical Discovery" is the remedy for the million! The only guaranteed Liver, Blood and Lung remedy. Your money back if it doesn't help you.

Centenary Female College.

The following are some extracts from letters endorsing Centenary Female College.

"There is no college to which I would commit my daughter with more confidence than to Centenary. Your curriculum is thorough, your faculty complete, and, above all, the home comforts given our daughters there commend the college to the young ladies themselves."—Rev. Sam P. Jones (Evangelist).

"In Centenary, our daughters of the South will find one of the best colleges in America. I have been among you, and remained with you, and I know whereof I affirm."—T. T. Fishburn (Banker), Roanoke, Va.

"The place may justly be called a well-appointed home for those sheltered within its walls. The rule of work is thoroughness. Having been a patron of the college, I can cordially testify of its high character."—Mrs. M. E. Riggs, McLendon, Texas.

"Indeed, it is the ideal college within the range of my observation."—John B. Boyd, (Merchant), Somerville, Ga."

"It is just such an institution as all sensible parents desire for the education of their daughters."—Henderson H. Henson (Pres. Bank), Chattanooga, Tenn.

"Home comforts unexcelled by any school of my knowledge."—Rev. J. A. Jones, Vicksburg, Miss. (Pastor Pres. Church.)

The purchasing power of twenty cents may seem small, yet it secures economy for the poor; good health in consequence of warm, dry feet to the feeble; pleasure to the rich and fastidious; and comfort to everybody when invested in a bottle of Wolff's Acme Blacking.

You can get blacking for 5c and 10c, which would be dear if Acme Blacking were worth a dollar; and you can get the "just as good 'for 25c and over, which is no better than the 5c and 10c, but put up in showier packages.

It gives us pleasure to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Davis School, Winston, N. C. It is one of the largest military academies in the country, and equipped, as it is, with large new buildings, extensive grounds (35 acres) and a well-selected faculty, it certainly deserves the success it has attained. Its roster this year numbered 241 boys from all parts of the United States. Its discipline is kind, but firm. Colonel A. C. Davis, the well-known educator, is the Superintendent, and all parents would do well to write him for illustrated catalogue before sending their boys elsewhere.

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours truly,

L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.,
Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that can not be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1082 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Vacation Rambles.

This is the time of the year when the thoughts of those in the crowded cities turn to a cool and pleasant retreat. If you are in quest of such a place, the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee, with their high altitudes and refreshing breezes, are as inviting as any place on the continent. The hotels are first-class. Board is reasonable. The fishing is good, and you do not have to spend 24 hours on the road to reach them. A daylight run by the Queen & Crescent Route will land you at any of these prominent resorts. "Summer Tours" will be mailed free to any address on application to D. G. Edwards, G. P. & T. A. Queen & Crescent Route, Cincinnati, O.

A Success.

This can be said of LaGrange Female College. Under the personal supervision of the Smiths, this College has become one of the most important in the South. We heartily commend this institution to those desiring a home and school for their daughters.

Address RUTH W. SMITH, LaGrange, Ga.

Hollins Institute, at Virginia, a school for Young Ladies, is very finely equipped, beautifully located, and enjoys the advantages of mineral waters and a salubrious mountain climate. It enjoys the confidence of the better classes of society of all religious beliefs and teaches the different languages, literature, science, art, music and elocution. We call your attention to their advertisement in another column. Applications can be sent to Chas. H. Cocke, Business M'g'r, Hollins P. O., Va.

Of all the evils and plagues that man has been cursed with, since his appearance on this earth, one of the most disagreeable and dangerous is Catarrh. An advertiser in another column makes a remarkable offer, namely, to send a sample of his medicine free of charge, so sufferers can test it without fear of being humbugged or swindled. Write Dr. Blosser & Co., Dalton, Ga., at once, before it is too late.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Eighteen million feet of lumber, an immense planing mill and eighteen dwellings in Cadillac, Mich., were burned on July 9. Loss, $2,000,000.

An excursion train on the Midland Road, in Colorado, collided with an engine, on July 11, and the escaping steam scalded an entire coach full of passengers.

It is said that Mrs. Jefferson Davis has decided that the remains of the ex-President of the Confederate States shall find their last resting-place in Richmond, Va.

An immense downpour of rain for three hours, on July 11, flooded Sioux City, Iowa, causing an aggregate loss of $100,000. Several buildings were undermined.

Fully ten thousand persons were present at the opening session of Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor in Exposition Hall, Minneapolis, on July 9. A chorus of 1,000 voices sang the opening song.

The Secretary of the Treasury has authorized the acceptance of the offer of the master of the Chilian steamer Itata to pay $500 for the violation of our navigation laws, in having cleared from San Diego without the necessary permit.

An invention of some importance in astronomy has been made in Georgetown College observatory. By means of an instrument called the photochronograph a star is caused to record the time of its own transit across the meridian, thus eliminating all personal errors.

The Southern Educational Association, in session at Chattanooga, Tenn., on July 9, discussed a proposition to establish a Southern university for the higher education of women. A committee was appointed to prepare plans. All Southern States will be invited to co-operate.

The whole number of sugar producers in Louisiana who have applied for licenses is 704. The total amount of sorghum sugar which, it is estimated, will be produced next season is 2,500,000 pounds, all in Kansas. The estimates for beet sugar are as follows by States: Utah, 7,200,000 pounds; California, 16,000,000 pounds; Nebraska, 6,000,000 pounds; Virginia, 10,000 pounds; total, 29,210,000 pounds.

The Secretary of the Interior has certified to the Treasury Department that Louisiana is entitled to $15,000 for 1890 and $16,000 for 1891 on account of the appropriation for agricultural colleges. The money will be paid over to the treasurers of the agricultural colleges designated by the governor, and the fund will be divided on the basis fixed by the Secretary of the Interior—that is, the white and colored school population as ascertained by the State.

During the last Congress a resolution was passed instructing the President to negotiate with Mexico and Great Britain to prevent the entry of Chinese laborers from Mexico and Canada into the United States. It appears that while Great Britain received the proposition favorably and referred it to the Canadian government, the Mexican government was unable to co-operate for the reason that an article in the Mexican Constitution guarantees every man a right to enter and go out of the republic without passports.

The inauguration of the third party movement and the organization of purely farmer factions in a number of States do not appear to have benefited the sub-treasury plan, which but a short time ago was considered the principal national legislation demanded by the farmers. After much public discussion touching its actual merits, there is division of opinion within the ranks of the different State branches of the Farmers' Alliance, and it may be safely stated that as far as the sub-treasury plan is concerned the farmers of the country are no longer a unit.

FOREIGN.

Famine prevails in several cities in Chili.

The Czar and Czarina will welcome the French squadron at Cronstadt on July 23.

An excursion party of Mexican merchants to visit the United States is in contemplation, and promises to be a large one.

It is said that the Guatemalan minister at Washington has been instructed to arrange for a treaty of reciprocity with the United States.

In the election held last week at county Carlow—Parnell's stronghold—the Parnellite candidate was defeated by an immense majority.

Suffering of the people from famine in the Volga region is becoming intense. The provincial assembly Kazan reports 40,000 persons without food.

Excessive drouth and heat prevail throughout Spain. In Seville, on July 11, the thermometer registered 113 degrees in the shade. Extensive damage has been done to vineyards and all springs have dried up.

A statue of Robert Burns was unveiled at Ayr last week, under the auspices of the Free Masons and with masonic honors. The American consul at Leith recited a dedicatory poem composed by himself. Thirty thousand were present.

The German Emperor has had a good time in England. Deputations of soldiers and citizens have visited him and read addresses, to which he listened with much respect. On July 10 he was given a formal welcome by the lord mayor of London, and during the progress of the procession from Buckingham Palace to the Guildhall the royal guest was greeted with much cheering. The courtesy of the Emperor has excited general admiration.

Camp Meetings.

The twentieth annual camp meeting at Crystal Springs, under the management of the Henington Camp Meeting Association, will commence Thursday, Aug. 13, 1891, and continue probably for ten or more days.

In response to the urgent desire of a number of persons of all denominations, the Rev. George S. Iuge has kindly consented to take charge of the services, and will preach every day and at night during the meeting.

Preachers of all denominations are earnestly invited to attend, and will be provided for during the meeting.

The L. C. R. R. will give the usual reduction of fare from all points on the road.

To meet the expenses of the meeting and to avoid the necessity of a public collection, the usual entrance fee of twenty-five cents will be required to be paid only once during the meeting. Tickets not transferable.

The meeting of 1891 promises to be a memorable occasion. "Come with us and we will do thee good." J. W. MCNEIL, Sec.

Sam Jones Camp Meeting will open on Friday, Aug. 14, and continue during ten days, embracing two Sabbaths. The public is cordially invited and earnestly solicited to attend. A commodious hotel is being erected on the ground, and ample accommodation will be provided. We hope to secure the services of able and earnest ministers, who will sow seeds that will ripen into a harvest of eternal glory. C. C. MILLER, Sec.

Shiloh Camp Meeting will begin on Friday night, Sept. 11. All ministers are invited and will be conveyed from Pelahatchie, Miss., to camp ground. R. S. GALE, P. E.

Commencement—Hellmuth College—London, Canada.

The twenty-second annual exercises of this well-known College for young women and girls, held on June 17, were a complete success. The proceedings consisted of an excellent programme of music and recitations, addresses by the Dean of Huron, and the Principal, Rev. E. N. English, and the awarding of the Diplomas and Honors by the Dean.

The exhibition of art work in the studios was very fine, consisting of painting in oil and water color, pastel, etching, crayon, china decoration, wood carving, modeling, etc. The College roll includes students from all parts of America. The next term begins Sept. 9.

The Christian and His Graces—No. 5.

BY AN OLD MINISTER.

"And to knowledge, temperance."

Knowledge is a form of power, and, not fortified and guided by temperance, is a dangerous power. Some of the worst characters in history have been men eminent for their large and varied knowledge of nature, history and the arts of civilized life. Knowledge often puffs up and incites men to think more highly of themselves than they ought to think. It excites to pride and contempt for those less highly cultivated. Some of the most highly civilized communities, intellectually considered, are among the most immoral. Mere knowledge will not restrain men from wrong, but if not properly controlled, only fits and makes them capable of greater wrong than the uncultivated men. The wisdom and appropriateness of the command, "Add to your knowledge, temperance," is obvious.

The great evil of intemperance is the use of intoxicants, and the great efforts of temperance people to arrest the stupendous evil has, to many minds, given a restricted and narrow apprehension of the import of the term. It means, of course, abstinence from the use, as a beverage, of all sorts of poisonous drinks, but it means a great deal more. The evils of gluttony are not so great as the evils of the alcohol habit, because gluttony does not often make men insane, violent and dangerous to others; but gluttony destroys health, usefulness, intellectual development and causes unutterable suffering and premature death.

Temperance means far more than the control of physical appetites—it means in all things self-restraint and self-control. Our strong appetites and violent passions are illustrated in Scripture by allusions to the inferior, irrational animals, our ingratitude and proud folly in prosperity to the horse—"Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked against God." David admonishes us not to be "as the horse, or the mule, which have no understanding; whose mouth must be held with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto you." How many, alas! of these brutish and violent men have we seen—how degraded and disagreeable for want of restraint and self-control!

Ours is a commercial age—an age of material improvements. The facilities for money-getting and wealth-gathering are without parallel in all the past, and the thirst for gain was never so keen and so insatiable as now.

Along this line there is great need that we "add to our knowledge, temperance." There is with many such an excessive devotion to gain-gathering that all other interests and duties are ignored. The claims of God are either omitted altogether or indefinitely postponed—money first, money last and money altogether—too busy to seek or serve God. Little thought is given, little time is devoted and little effort is put forth to promote the highest interests of the home and the children. The improvement of the mind and the health of the body are often sacrificed to this excessive devotion to the claims of gain. They that are thus intemperately making haste to be rich fall into many hurtful temptations that drown the soul in perdition. Many, in their intemperate eagerness to be rich, rashly run into schemes and investments that involve themselves and others in financial ruin, and leave on them an indelible stain of dishonor. Worldliness seems to be the drift and peril of our times. All good men should seek to let their "moderation," in this regard, be known to all men.

Intemperance in pleasures is a source of great evil to the bodies and souls of men. Excessive indulgence in any species of pleasure soon exhausts its interest as a source or means of enjoyment. Then something more sensational must be sought—and thus, step by step, the devotee of mere personal pleasure proceeds until he exhausts health, money and sometimes character, and helps others, by his example, towards the same unfortunate doom.

We are exhorted to be sober-minded; but those who refuse to regard these temperate restraints often rush into the wildest and most intemperate speculations in regard to revelation and religion, and become the authors and propagators of the most dangerous opinions and theories. This intemperate love of sensational pleasures leads many to impure and corrupting reading, to the round dances, to cards and gambling, and to the impure sentiments and indecent exposures of the stage.

A Wesleyan Arminian Confession of Faith.

Professor Tillett, of Vanderbilt University, writes an able article for the July number of the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review, under the above caption, which I heartily approve.

That we need a concise, plain and explicit statement of our doctrines in a form accessible to our people and the outside world will not be questioned. The General Rules and Twenty-five Articles, prepared by Mr. Wesley, for his American followers, give expression, as far as they go, to the doctrines of Wesleyan Methodism. But there are some important doctrines by which the Methodist Church is differentiated from other evangelical churches that are not, even by implication, found in these articles. It is true, the "Standards," consisting of Wesley's Works and Watson's Institutes, contain all that is important and peculiar to Methodism. But the labor of searching through a dozen or more volumes to ascertain what our "Standards" teach, deters most men from attempting the task. Besides, these "Standards" contain some things that are not received as true by all of Mr. Wesley's followers. The fathers, in order to insure the perpetuation of Wesleyan doctrine, adopted the first restrictive article that prohibits the alteration of our articles of religion or the establishing of any new standards of doctrine contrary to our present established standards.

I suppose the fathers intended, by this restrictive article, to make it impossible for the General Conference to alter, revise or amend our doctrines by adding thereto or subtracting therefrom.

There are other restrictive articles which limit the power of the General Conference, that may be removed by three-fourths of the members of the Annual Conferences voting for such removal, followed by two-thirds of the members of the succeeding General Conference approving the measure. The way is provided for the removal of all the restrictive articles except the first, and that is made, not to say difficult, but impossible, according to the intention of the fathers.

Dr. Tillett seems to see his way out of this difficulty, but it is by violating the plain letter of the constitution while assuming to obey its spirit. He holds that formulating a creed that does not in any of its provisions antagonize the articles of religion and the established standards of doctrine, would not be violative of the first restrictive article in so far as its spirit is concerned. By its spirit I suppose we are to understand its real true meaning in contradistinction to its apparent meaning. And if the intention of the fathers who framed, adopted and entailed this restriction upon the Methodist Church for all time subsequent to its adoption be its true real meaning, then its spirit as well as the letter would be violated by any alteration even in the form in which these articles are set forth. We may declaim against the absurdity and inconsistency of the procedure, but that does not alter the facts in the case. The fathers intended to make these articles of religion binding for all time to come. Those who originated the first restrictive article intended to curb the spirit of innovation and prevent tampering with doctrines which they regarded as of divine authority. Whether wise or otherwise, they intended to fasten the doctrines set forth in the Twenty-five Articles of religion and advocated in the established "standards" upon the church for all time to come. I agree with Prof. Tillett in the desirableness of a creed more in accord with the requirements of the times, but yet I do not see that we can gain the result without revolution. The gains to the cause of Christ may, perhaps, justify the hazards of revolution, but of this I am not sure. The project of restating our doctrine, even if the restriction was out of the way, is fraught with danger. There are differences of opinion as to the doctrine of sanctification and the condition of membership in the church, and other minor points among our leading ministers and laymen that would make it exceedingly difficult to formulate a creed acceptable to all parties. Failing to compose these differences by subscription to a common creed, there would necessarily ensue dissensions and strife terminating in the organization of half a dozen new sects to the detriment of Christianity. These are dangers that attend all revolutions, whether of Church or State, and should be well considered before provoking them. Our knowledge of human nature gained from history and observation does not warrant the hope of a peaceful revolution.

"Prohibition."

A short article in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of July 2, which we are sorry to see over the signature of our honored brother, J. W. Honnoll, of Holly Springs, joins others who have spoken in attacking the W. C. T. U. without attempting to disprove their position that local option is "ineffectual as a temperance measure, false in principle and a compromise with the liquor traffic." It does them injustice, like the other articles, to assert that "they so far forget themselves as to make war on other conscientious temperance workers." Will not our brother name the individuals on whom we have made war, as there has been no personal reference that we have seen, either in the objectionable resolution or elsewhere? Still less can we see that this resolution was "abusive language." Please be definite and give us names, for we thought we spoke of local option, one of the methods of temperance people for getting rid of the saloon.

It looks to us as if all the "abuse" there is in the matter is of W. C. T. U. enduring, because it has an opinion on the subject, and because its opinion is that this long-tested measure has accomplished less than was hoped from it, and because it has stated the reason why, in its judgment, local option has been ineffectual. Instead of harshly "abusing" the W. C. T. U. for its opinion of an abstract principle, a showing up of the fallacy or absurdity of its arguments would be a more logical and Christian way for opponents to handle W. C. T. U. "unreasonableness." Neither Bro. Honnoll or anybody else has attempted to do this, but all have tried to create a prejudice against the W. C. T. U. by shifting the whole question to the false base that we are making war on other temperance workers.

The W. C. T. U. did not "forget itself," but expressed a cold-blooded judgment in its resolution, after six years, nearly, of observation and work under local option. So long as the State continues its partnership with the liquor traffic, as we maintain it does under local option in issuing license at the order of a majority vote, just so long must we protest and abide in the shadow of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which says license is a sin. Local option, as a prohibition measure, holds the same relation to the State that a prohibitionist does to society who rents his property for a saloon.

Until prohibitionists, priest and layman, make their politics as religious as their prayers, little positively effective will be accomplished against the liquor traffic, for "the political powers of the saloon must be crushed before any remedy can be applied" for this sore burt of the people. Bro. Honnoll says he has been "ready for thirty years to vote prohibition in the Nation, State," etc. There has been two splendid opportunities in the last two years in this State to vote for it. Did he, or the "nine-tenths of the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference" he mentions, or anybody else, do so? Judge Chrisman pleaded, as for his life, that they would, and the women prayed—they could do nothing else, with strong crying that they would; but we did not hear that anybody else thought it was the time to vote for prohibition.

Come, brother, prove that our arguments won't hold water, or stop "abusing" the W. C. T. U., which, for conscience sake, abides with the church that sent you to stand, in Christ's stead, to break the Bread for the hungry people. Don't hurl stones at us, for women never could "throw straight," and are "more than likely" to smash windows round the corner when they try to throw back.

The resolutions of the W. C. T. U. express principles, as all resolutions should; they are not discussions of questions of expediency. Though with Bro. Honnoll we have had to "take what we could get," we have believed that sometimes we could have gotten more if we had asked more; certain it is we will never get more or better till prohibitionists ask for it, and come with a thunderous knock that lets the State know they intend to get in.

The women will not show a flag of truce or sound a retreat, though it does look as if the brethren have pushed them to the front to lead a forlorn hope. There was never so much life in their ranks in Mississippi as to-day, or so many sympathizers among women, waiting to be organized. We are "falling off daily" "from a cart-load to a wagon-load."

H. B. KELLS.

"Bill Arp," the Country Philosopher.

Some few years since a Frenchman wrote a book, and called it, "Man Who Laughs." Another author has told us, "Man is a pendulum 'twixt a smile and a tear." So, in the economy of life, humor must have a place. I have no doubt but that it is part of the divine plan, and as essential to real, joyous life as any other element, save, perhaps, love alone. Real humor is as pure sunshine. It is not boisterous, harsh and discordant, but gentle as falling dew, and as refreshing to the wayfarer here as a grove of forest trees, whereon Spring had left its magic trace, and answering bird calls greeted the ear.

The world learns to do few things aright; it has not yet learned to laugh aright. There are no fields that yield more chaff and less wheat than those wherefrom men gather humor. It may sound paradoxical, but real humor has in it no small essence of thought and seriousness. Happy is the man who can make us laugh, and thereby do us good! Thrice blessed is he who, through these sun-kissed, babbling channels of brightest humor, can lead into the soul those things which are pure, just, lovely, and of good report!

I think our Georgia sage more nearly combines these essential qualities of real humor as any one man now before the public. In the two lectures recently given by him on the Louisiana Chautauqua grounds, near Ruston, he charmed many and delighted not a few. In personal appearance, Col. Smith is about medium height, will weigh about 180 pounds, and has a well-rounded, rather full, what he calls "oleaginous corporosity." The biting winds of adversity, Winter's frosts and ardent Summer's suns have thinned his locks and silvered the few remaining. He stands full and erect on his feet. Time has not bowed his frame nor quenched his spirit. In the swift race with the fleeting days he has undergone many vicissitudes, and, from large experiences and close observation, gathered wit and wisdom. These he now gives to the world for the good of this fickle generation. He creates the impression of a man who has gotten as much, or even more, out of the world than the world has taken from him. One of the grandest elements in his character, as I see it, is his loyalty to the truth. The vacillating hosannas of a changeful age are evidently not what he seeks. While he talked, I saw incredulity and even slight contempt on the countenances of some who, in the eager search for things intellectual, either had forgotten or slighted the loftier spiritual faculties. Mind is great, but spirit is greater. So thought and so spoke "Bill Arp," the country philosopher. Some one intimated that his arraignment of Massachusetts, on the scores of education, without correspondent spiritual and moral advancement, was fallacious. Whether Col. Smith was exactly correct, or not, in his charges against the system of popular education now obtaining in the Bay State, the fact still remains, perhaps the weightiest problem of our times, that where educational advantages increase, crime and immorality do not diminish. We are then forced to the conclusion that no system of education, per se, makes our race better and purer. Would to God that we had more men who, as lecturers, as editors, as teachers, by and through any of great means for disseminating truth, might convince the American people that the grand old gospel of redemption and salvation in Christ Jesus is the only bulwark of our commonwealth; the only lever that uplifts and holds by its power, in the realms of light and love, a fallen race!

New Church at Shubuta, Miss.

The Methodists of our little town, which is situated in the southern part of Clarke county, Miss., have recently built a new church. The old church needed repairing, and besides was inconveniently located in the eastern portion of the town. Instead of spending money in repairing it, our people determined to purchase a lot near the center of the town and erect a church which would be a credit to the community as well as to the membership of the church. Very soon after this determination was reached the requisite funds were secured by direct contributions given almost exclusively by the members of the church. The building is now completed, and, including the price of the lot, cost nearly $2,100. When seated and furnished the total cost will be about $2,500. It is a frame structure, and was built according to the modern plan of architecture and out of the best material. Outside of the city of Meridian, it is the prettiest, as well as the best church, Methodist or Baptist, in this presiding elder's district. Though the Methodist Churches in Meridian and Jackson, Miss., are much larger and more imposing, yet I do not think they excel ours in beauty. On the third Sunday of June the church was dedicated by Bishop Galloway; his sermon on that occasion being one of much power and eloquence, and was delivered in the presence of a large and attentive audience. There is no pulpit or political orator in Mississippi so eloquent as Bishop Galloway. There is no other Mississippian so universally loved and admired. The members of our church are also advancing spiritually, which is due, in a large measure, to our faithful pastor, Rev. J. P. Drake, whose life comes as near reaching the standard of a perfect Christian as anyone whom it has been my good fortune to meet.

D. W. HEIDELBERG.

Meridian District Conference.

The Meridian District Conference was held at State Line, Miss., July 2-5, 1891, with Rev. T. L. Mellen, P. E., as its presiding officer during the entire session. Although at an extreme end of the district, the attendance was large. Boundary changes at last Annual Conference made district one-quarter smaller and reduced its membership about 1,000, but assessments and collections to date aggregate more than paid on entire work to about same date last year. Accessions since last District Conference, 806. New church buildings, Methodist Sunday-schools (not union), clear title to church property, accuracy in statistics and a business trend all along the line give evidence of an aggressive, painstaking presiding elder, and reflect credit upon the preachers in charge. That only 309 religious papers are taken and but 273 family altars are reported out of a membership of 5,000, should prove an incentive for redoubled energy on part of pulpit and pew. By a unanimous vote the following was adopted:

Resolved, That each and every pastor be counseled to enforce the Discipline on the subject of worldly amusements, judiciously and kindly, but firmly and consistently.

Resolved, That we try diligently to get our people back to the old scriptural injunction of kneeling in prayer at public worship. That our preachers in calling to prayer, do not say "Let us bow in prayer," but "Let us kneel on our knees in prayer."

Rev. Yoshioka, native missionary from Japan, preached twice; demonstrating that Holy Ghost-religion is the same everywhere, and giving proof, by his very manner and presence among us, that the heathen call to Southern Methodism is direct from God and is for positive, practical help.

Upon Christian education, a part of the committee report is as follows:

Your committee takes pleasure in appending the following extract from report of committee on state of East Mississippi Female College to the Board of Trustees, at their recent session, June 16, 1891:

"The standard of scholarship has been elevated and very thorough work done in the literary department. The religious influence has been good, the best, doubtless, in the history of the institution. The Bible has had a recognized place in the curriculum. We feel assured the coming session will be the best or most prosperous in the history of the college.

"President Anderson is thorough and competent. We commend him to the church and people."

This extract, personal knowledge, and assurances from other trustworthy sources make us to heartily commend Mr. C. W. Anderson as a Christian gentleman, scholar and teacher.

He is assisted by a corps of able teachers; and the belief is that no female college, South, offers better advantages for Christian education than does this one.

The following were elected by ballot as delegates to Annual Conference: J. S. Turner, C. W. Anderson, L. P. Brown, R. C. Gavin. Alternates: Jesse Byrd, T. C. Harmon.

State Line's hospitality was just what was expected from such a generous, well-to-do community.

Business dispatch, earnest scriptural preaching three times daily, entire absence of personalities and acrimony in every discussion, and carefully weighed consecration service made it not only a profitable, but a phenomenal District Conference.

L. P. BROWN, Secretary.

A Month's Work.

I am at home, sweet home, for a few days' rest, after thirty-two days of field service. During this time I attended two District Conferences, visited twelve churches, delivered more than a dozen sermons and Sunday-school addresses, and sold no small amount of good books and papers.

The District Conferences at Iuka and Amory were occasions of much interest; especially so were the Sunday-school Conferences held in connection with each.

These District Sunday-school Conferences are of incalculable worth to the cause. No presiding elder should fail to hold one in his district each year, either in connection with the District Conference, or at some other suitable time and place. There is no department of our church work that needs more attention and culture just now than this.

At Chesterville, Shannon circuit, June 20, we had a Children's Day service that will long be remembered with pleasure by old and young; and the day following I preached to a large and appreciative audience on "The Use We Should Make of the Bible."

At Liberty, Blue Springs circuit, July 7 and 8, and at Wesley Chapel, Fulton and Smithville circuit, July 11 and 12, we had profitable services, which, we trust, will bring forth a rich harvest of good for the Sunday-school and other features of church work.

At Okolona, Verona, Tupelo, Booneville, Corinth and Aberdeen, I had very pleasant fellowship with the preachers and people, and opportunities of doing work that will evidently abide for good.

Notwithstanding the political ferment and the general cry of hard times, the outlook for the church is hopeful. Pastors and people are cheerful and sanguine. All are praying and laboring for the prosperity of Zion and the salvation of souls.

Christmas Offerings to Millsaps College.

I suggested recently to friends in Texas the plan of raising funds for the Southwestern University — Christmas offerings by families. This suggestion I make also to the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences in behalf of Millsaps College. The thought is, that on Christmas morning each member of the family shall make some offering to the college. Notice is given thus early that it may be considered and discussed. The plan in detail will be set forth later.

THE LAND OF USED TO BE.

BY JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

Beyond the purple, lazy trees
Of summer's utmost boundaries;
Beyond the sands, beyond the seas,
Beyond the range of eyes like these,
And only in the reach of the
Unaquired gaze of memory,
There lies a land long lost to me,
The land of Used-to-be.

A land enchanted such as swung
In golden seas when sirens rung
Along their dripping banks and sung
To Jason in that mystic tongue
That dazed men with its melody,
Oh, such a land, with such a sea
Kissing its shores eternally,
Is the fair Used-to-be!

A land where music ever girds
The air with belts of singing birds,
And sows all sounds with such sweet words
That even in the lower herds
A meaning lives so sweet to me,
Lost laughter ripples limpidly
From lips brimmed o'er with all the glee
Of rare old Used-to-be.

Lost laughter and the whistled tunes
Of lady-hood's mouth of crescent runes
That rounded through long afternoons,
To serenading plenilunes,
When starlight fell so mistily
That, peering up from bended knee,
I dreamed 'twas bridal drapery
Hung over Used-to-be.

Oh, land of love and dreamy thoughts,
And shining fields and shady spots,
Of coolest, greenest grassy plots,
Embossed with wild forget-me-nots
And all the blooms that cunningly
Lift their faces up to me
Out of the past I kiss in thee
The lips of Used-to-be!

I love ye all, and with wet eyes
Turned glimmeringly on the skies,
My blessings like your perfumes rise,
Till o'er my soul a silence lies
Sweeter than any song to me,
Sweeter than any melody
Or its sweet echo, yea, all three!
My dream of Used-to-be!

Inaccurate and Misleading Language.

I saw in your paper, some time ago, an answer to the question, "What is the object of Sunday-school work?" which answer began on this wise: "It is to educate the children and youth in the sacred Scriptures, that they may learn from them that all are born sinners."

This language may follow a loose, blundering, ecclesiastical fashion, but is very incorrect, and against which I beg leave to state two objections:

First, a young child is not a sinner. A sinner is a person who has sinned, and willfully refuses or neglects to repent of it. What sin did a new-born child commit? Sins have names. Did he take the name of God in vain? Or which command did he violate?

The simple and, I am not afraid to add, unquestionable truth is, that children are born innocent. The common and natural trouble is not guilt; it is a tendency to evil. A tendency, nothing more; and which tendency, if not cured in the way directed in the Bible—there being no other way—the child will most surely soon become a sinner of no mean type. But if brought up according to the Bible, he will continue to live as he ought to live; and when he grows old, he will not depart from the religious way.

The plain Bible direction as to children is uniformly neglected, and when the natural consequences appear, we saddle our negligence on the defenseless children, and try to excuse ourselves with the great common falsehood that God gave us very bad children, and we could do no better—a plain and palpable contradiction of Scripture sufficiently repeated!

I would answer the question, "The object of Sunday-school work?" on this wise: The first, most essential and all-important Sunday-school work should be to impress upon the mind and heart of all children the great necessity of parental obedience. This is absolutely indispensable far above all other considerations. With this neglected, nothing else does or can come right. And parental obedience must be defined for the benefit of both parents and children, as well as for Sunday-school teachers. Obedience to parents must be prompt, cheerful and ready. Doing after twice or three times telling is not obedience. It must be affectionate, quick, and without hesitation.

The Bible tells us exactly how to begin life. Any other beginning is a bad beginning, and never can come out exactly right—that is, a life begun contrary to the Bible teaching never can be as good as if we begin in the Bible and keep in it. The one great duty of all living people is to obey God. That is the only right way to begin, continue, and close life; and the only way that young children can obey God is to obey the parents. They stand to the child in the place of God. They are the divine representatives to the child. That is all a young child can do, and that any child can do, however young. Impossibilities are not required. It, therefore, follows that all living persons can fulfill all the commandments of the Bible. If too young to do this in a theological form, he can do it truly, really and virtually in a representative form, as is plainly taught in the Bible. Children, obey your parents, is the only thing young children are, or can be, required to do. This any child can do, however young. After a while, but not at first, a child will get old enough to pray and do other religious duties; but he can be a full Bible Christian from the very first. The teaching that a child lives some years before he is accountable for his conduct, is an old heretical blunder that has been damaging the church long enough. A child at first is responsible for obedience to the parents, and for this he is answerable; and it is the duty of the parent to hold the child to account for this Bible duty. After a while he will get old enough to begin in rudimental theology.

Any child can be easily brought under ready subjection to parental authority long before he is capable of appreciating much, if any, of its moral qualities. This is the Bible method, and the natural method as well. Childhood education does not, can not begin with theology in its technical presentation. Obedience, submission first; theology after a while.

Woman's Work.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference was held in the town of Winona. It was opened with a delightful praise service, a fitting preparation for the duties of the holy Sabbath.

Instead of the usual Sunday-school exercises, the audience was entertained by interesting and instructive talks from Judge Foot, of Macon, and Mrs. McElroy, of Columbus, the successful teacher of an infant class numbering one hundred and fifty.

The church was densely crowded before the hour for the annual sermon. The subject, "The Leaven of the Gospel," was handled by Dr. W. B. Murrah in a manner appropriate, scholarly, convincing. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to a very large number.

The afternoon was given to the children. Song, prayer, Scripture reading and a most telling speech from our inimitable Sister Hargrove. At night we had the usual preliminary addresses.

A bright young lady of Winona, Miss Annie Baily, in a sweet, thrilling voice, assured the society of a warm welcome; and right royally was that welcome fulfilled. The church was beautifully and tastefully decorated. Real, living, blooming flowers charmed from day to day. Upon entering the door the word "Welcome" met the eye, giving pleasure, while above the pulpit, inside a beautiful design, the words, "Rescue the Perishing," seemed to rouse to greater diligence in the work before us. The response to the welcome address by Mrs. J. W. Malone, of Cold Water, deserves more than passing notice—well written and clearly enunciated as it was.

Monday morning, after devotional exercises, the business meetings began. There was a goodly representation from auxiliaries, and the number of juvenile delegates was thought to argue progress and development in the right direction. Reports from the work quite encouraging.

During the day a telegram of sisterly greeting was received from the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, then also in session. As a token of our appreciation and our Christian love, our secretary was requested (by a rising vote) to send a suitable response.

Monday night essays and recitations; also Sister Stone was requested to read again her excellent report of the year's work. Tuesday morning religious service took the form of a voluntary experience meeting. The Lord was, indeed, in our midst. Truly we felt as Jacob said, "This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven," for verily the Spirit of God seemed to fill the house and to prepare each heart for the duties of the day. The afternoon was given to committee reports and election of officers.

Tuesday night an essay on the "History of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference" was read by Mrs. Paine, and a most interesting report from the meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions by our gifted corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. B. Stone. Then the collection speech, "A Little Red Box," by a little girl who tripped along the aisles and into pews, holding her little box in a most tempting manner.

After the benediction followed tearful good-byes; new-found friends separated with loving words of kind remembrance.

I would like to tell definitely of all that was done, of some good talks from some of our faithful workers, of our dear Sister Word, who is ever ready for the Master's bidding. I can not tell you, Mr. Editor; but just come up to our next meeting at Aberdeen, and see if you do not agree with me in pronouncing it a success.

The training-school must not be overlooked. Our Conference society accepts a scholarship in the Scarritt Bible and Training School, naming it the "Helen Finlay," for a most estimable lady who lived in Greenville. Pledges for quite a nice sum were assumed by auxiliaries represented.

From first to last the citizens of Winona seemed interested. A good attendance in the day, and each night the church was literally crowded. Many expressed pleasure in words of commendation. Bro. Thames, our presiding elder, and Dr. Cameron, pastor of Winona, were unremitting in services of various kinds. And really they seemed to enjoy waiting on the ladies, attending trains, looking after checks, tickets, etc. Our fast friend, Col. Moore, was always at hand to do anything useful to the missionary interest.

At last it was all over. A religious feast had been enjoyed by each attendant; new zeal for our special work had been enkindled. When that well-trained choir rendered with such emphasis, such melody, the closing hymn, "Watchman, tell us of the night," our hearts respouded with renewed energy. There is no time for waiting; but quickly let us hasten, watchmen, to the rescue of the perishing millions.

MRS. J. F. E.

Vicksburg District Conference.

The Vicksburg District Conference was held in the town of Fayette, July 2-4; Rev. J. A. Ellis, P. E., in the chair. Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Vicksburg, preached the opening sermon. About thirty-two members were present at the first session, and others came in during the day. Everything betokened a pleasant and profitable meeting, and so it was. Great prominence was given to religious services, there being three sermons each day. The pure gospel was divided out to us by able hands, and we all enjoyed a spiritual feast. An elegant dinner was served at the church each day, prepared not by the Methodist ladies alone, but also by those of other denominations. From the very first, the citizens of Fayette did all in their power to make us feel at home among them, and their kind hospitality will long be remembered by all present.

Our Conference was honored by quite a number of visitors. Rev. J. W. Chambers was with us the first day, and explained a plan recommended by the Joint Board of Finance for collecting the Conference Claimants' Fund, by which the widows and superannuated preachers would receive two hundred and fifty dollars per annum, payable quarterly. As far as could be ascertained, the Conference approved the plan.

Rev. W. D. Dominick was present, and spoke in the interest of the depository at Jackson. It was the opinion of the Conference that Bro. Dominick should be patronized by the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. A. F. Watkins was on hand for a day or two, representing Millsaps College, and secured one hundred and one dollars on the "Clara Chrisman Scholarship."

Rev. J. W. McLaurin was present, and gave us a talk on the American Bible Society.

Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, D. D., was with us during the entire session, and made a strong talk on Christian education and in the interest of Centenary College. He received eight hundred dollars in endowment notes and fifteen dollars in cash. Three young ladies of the choir were the donors of the last-named amount. Rev. Mr. Harris, of the Louisiana Conference, was present, and gave us an able sermon Friday night.

On the last day of the Conference Rev. D. L. Mitchel made his appearance, and did earnest work for the ADVOCATE. His sermon on Saturday night was enjoyed.

Committees on the Spiritual State of the Church, Missions, Finance, Sunday-schools, Quarterly Conference Records, Publishing House Interests and Education, were appointed, and their reports were adopted.

Everything seemed to indicate an advance in the church, and the prospects for the future are bright. Friday afternoon was devoted to Sunday-school work. By request of the presiding elder, Bro. W. A. Gunning, of Natchez, occupied the chair. Questions of importance and interest were discussed. Bro. R. F. Reed introduced the discussion on the "Use or Disuse of the Bible in Our Sabbath-schools." The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we urge on the pastors and superintendents of all Sunday-schools in the Vicksburg district, the regular use of the Bible in the Sunday-school class, in connection with the international lessons. And that we use our earnest efforts to place a Bible in the hands of every Sunday-school scholar.

Resolved, That pastors recommend and encourage Sunday-school teachers to require pupils to recite with closed books.

W. D. Brown introduced the discussion on the "Bible Class." "A Model Sunday-school Teacher" was discussed by Rev. W. B. Lewis; and Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt discussed the subject of "Sunday-school Finance."

The following lay delegates were elected: T. A. Holloman, W. D. Brown, R. W. Conway, J. G. Gulce. Alternates: J. W. Nell, W. A. Gunning.

A motion was made that a Committee on District Parsonage be appointed by the presiding elder, consisting of one layman from each charge in the district.

The absence of Bro. W. E. Ballard, on account of continued illness, was the source of much regret to the Conference. On Saturday evening the Conference adjourned to hold its next session at Port Gibson.

W. H. LEWIS.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

Your Committee on Sunday-schools report as follows:

There were reports from eighteen charges, by which it is shown that there are within the several circuits and stations named: Total number of Sunday-school pupils, 2,574; total number of Sunday-school teachers, 293; total number of Methodist Sunday-schools, 50; total number of Union Sunday-schools, 7.

These reports further show that most of the Sunday-school teachers and a large proportion of the pupils were members of the Methodist Church.

In only one Sunday-school—Jefferson Street Church, Natchez—is there a weekly teachers' meeting held, and this also is the only Sunday-school where the pupils all own and use their Bibles. Your committee recommend the meeting of teachers weekly for study, and also that there be a special effort made to induce everyone connected with the Sunday-school to own and use at all times a Bible.

F. REED.

SPIRITUAL STATE OF THE CHURCH.

The Committee on the Spiritual State of the Church beg leave to report as follows:

We find reported in the district 4,640 members. Accessions to the church since last District Conference, 330. This indicates growth. Two hundred and thirty family altars are reported, and 361 who lead in public prayer. It seems to us that these figures ought to be larger.

Only 2,218 are reported as communing regularly, which is not quite half the membership. This seems to us to be a remarkably small proportion. In view of these facts, we recommend that our pastors preach on the subject of the Lord's Supper, and urge upon all our members the duty of celebrating this sacrament of the church. We also think that the duty of family worship needs to be pressed upon the consciences of our people with greater earnestness.

W. B. LEWIS,
T. A. HOLLOMAN,
For Committee.

Jackson District Conference, Mississippi Annual Conference.

This body convened in the hospitable little town of Raymond, July 3, 1891; the presiding elder, Rev. D. A. Little, in the chair. This town, situated on that branch of the L., N. O. and T. R. R., commonly called "The Little J.," is remarkable for the number of its hotels and churches. With a population of only 600—250 whites and 350 blacks—it has three commodious hotels and seven churches—five for the whites and two for the blacks. The famous Cooper's Wells, situated about three miles southeast of the town, are rapidly becoming the great Summer resort for pleasure seekers as well as invalids. The attendance was unusually small. Out of twenty-five itinerant ministers whose names appear on the roll, fifteen were present during the Conference, but not all at once; and out of sixty-five laymen (including local preachers), twelve were present. It was distressing to note that among the clerical absentees, the young ministers were largely in the majority. If our young ministers begin thus early to disregard their obligations to attend upon these church assemblies, what may we expect in the near future?

The reports from the various charges were very gratifying. As a rule, there was an advance over last year along all lines of church work. In only one or two instances did the pastors report a gloomy outlook. Congregations good and improving, Sabbath-school work prospering, collections in many instances up, and the spiritual state of the district is encouraging. Although no protracted services have been held, there have been many marked evidences of the presence of the Holy Spirit at the regular services.

We were no little surprised to hear the business manager of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE report only 300 subscribers in this district, and fifty per cent. of these owing for their paper for from one to four years, the amount due from this district alone aggregating $500.

Brethren, these things ought not to be. Two dollars for one year's subscription, or eight dollars for four years' subscription, may seem a small item to some of us; but these "small items" aggregate five thousand dollars in the New Orleans office. Let us pay up. In connection with these facts, as presented by our ADVOCATE'S representative, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves, as pastors, to make a diligent canvass within our several charges, with a view of collecting all delinquencies to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, and to secure new subscribers.

The Sunday-school Conference was fraught with interest and, we trust, with profit. The leader appointed some time ago to conduct the services, Bro. T. B. Holloman, was seriously sick in Atlanta, Ga., and was neither able to be present or send his carefully prepared programme; hence every address was extempore.

This being the fourth and last year of our presiding elder, Bro. D. A. Little, the Conference unanimously adopted, by a rising vote, its high appreciation of his faithful labors during the past four years, and prayed the blessings of the divine Father upon him for future years' service.

The following delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: R. W. Millsaps, E. C. Postell, D. Bunch, J. T. H. Laird; alternates—Peter James, J. W. Ratcliff.

The next session of the District Conference will be held at First Church, Jackson, Miss. B. F. LEWIS, Sec.

Woman's Missionary Society, Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss.

On Sunday evening, July 12, 1891, the ladies of the Woman's Missionary Society of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., conducted their first public quarterly meeting, as enjoined by the Constitution of the Woman's Missionary Society. Such a meeting had never been held in Capitol Street Church before, and a large congregation waited with attention, to say nothing of curiosity, to see what "those women" could do by way of holding a public service. The program, which had been prepared by the ladies, was eminently instructive and profitable. After preliminary exercises, conducted by the pastor—which consisted in reading a Scripture lesson from Isaiah, descriptive of the coming and universal reign of Christ and his kingdom, songs and prayer—the meeting was given up entirely to the ladies.

The president of the auxiliary, in a short, well-worded paper, described the efforts of the ladies to organize themselves, and spoke feelingly of the benefit she had derived from her attendance upon the annual meeting recently held at Bolton, Miss. The treasurer made an encouraging financial report. The recording secretary read an instructive paper on the "Origin and Growth of the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South," and spoke especially of the organization of the society at Capitol Street. She made grateful allusion to the munificent gift of the late Dr. Scarritt to the Woman's Board of Missions, and stated that on Easter Sunday, Capitol Street Sunday-school raised forty-three dollars as its contribution to the Scarritt Bible and Training-School.

A beautiful poem, entitled "Come Over and Help Us," followed on the program. This poem was composed by the wife of a minister of the M. E. Church, who died on her knees praying in a woman's missionary meeting. The pastor then addressed the society with encouraging words, and stated that the amount raised on Easter Sunday was nearly one-fifth the amount raised by the entire Mississippi Conference for the training-school, according to the statement recently published in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. During the singing of a closing hymn solicitation was made for new members, which added several names to our list. If we could persuade all to join our ranks, what a power our auxiliary would be in Capitol Street Church! But we pray God's blessings on even our feeble efforts.

The Wages of Sin.

Some people get tired of hearing so much said and written about sin. But let us look at it in this way: When the yellow fever is slaying its thousands during an epidemic in our land, we do not get tired of talking about it. It is the most prominent topic of the day, and continues to be as long as the epidemic lasts. Now, sin is abroad in the land, and is slaying its millions, sending them to hell. As in the yellow fever epidemic, the most important topic is the fever and its remedy. So it should be with us in regard to sin. Although physicians have never found a sure cure for yellow fever, thanks be unto God! there is a sure cure for the sin-sick soul.

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

"The wages of sin is death." While sin is doing its fearful work all around us; while it is poisoning the souls of our friends and loved ones, marring their peace and happiness and destroying their usefulness; while we see it bring disease and sorrow, death to those who are bound by Satan and "led captive at his will," should we not talk about it? should we hold our peace? should we not condemn it, and cry aloud and spare not."

We who have been redeemed, not with gold and silver, but by the precious blood of Christ from sin, cannot afford to be silent on this subject. "For Zion's sake, I will not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth."

E. B. PARTIN, M. D.

An Explanation.

In reference to an appeal signed by a friend asking help for me, I wish to say:

1. When I wrote to that friend setting forth my financial condition I was really in very much need of certain matters of comfort, the details of which my sons were uninformed, but afterwards published a card unknown to me, until I saw it in the ADVOCATE.

2. My first intention was to negotiate for a loan of money, but "a friend" thought a more feasible way was to appeal to the generosity of my friends, which he did.

3. Almost immediately after the "Appeal" was published, a kind Providence in several ways brightened the prospect before me.

I was raised up from a serious and almost fatal sickness, and an opportunity was afforded of making a few dimes daily, and an offer made to me to my home in Jackson county, Miss. Things became unexpectedly bright, and though financial needs have not been fully met, there is a sufficiency so that I can wait with patience the meeting of the Board of Finance, when each old superannuate shall receive his portion.

I pray God to abundantly bless those who have taken an interest in my behalf, and that this explanation may set matters right, and give no offense to anyone.

Cyclone at Topisaw.

By request, I will give you some account of the cyclone at Topisaw which destroyed Bro. Barney Alford's place.

As if it had come down right out of the heavens, it pounced upon the dwelling, and with one crash it literally and flew in every direction, lasting all of the family, but one boy, in the debris; bruising all, more or less except the little girl.

Bro. Alford, who was hurt the worst, lifted a section of the house which fell upon him and Sister Alford, so as to let her escape, and then his son lifted it off of him. It swept everything clean from the place. His cribs and stables and other outhouses all went at once. His buggy was torn to pieces and parts of it found a mile away. The axles of his wagon were broken off at the hub. Four horses were in the stables, and only one slightly hurt. It seems a miracle that anything was saved alive. Only one cow killed, and a few chickens and hogs. The dogs were all hurt, more or less.

The family ask the prayers of friends in this great loss and suffering. The crop was greatly damaged. In all, loss not less than $1,500.

McComb City charge is moving quietly and hopefully. We are looking for a good time at the camp meeting.

A Religious Health Resort.

Our town has received a new impetus from the opening of a new, large and commodious hotel at Stafford Springs. These springs are on the south side of the town, in a beautiful hilly wood. The waters are cool and refreshing. They are attracting wide spread attention, and accomplishing some wonderful cures. The waters are specially recommended for the liver, kidneys, indigestion and malarial diseases. On account of the purity of the atmosphere and the marked effects of the waters in building up the wasted system, there is probably no better place for consumptives and others whose systems have run down.

This is the highest point on the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad and one of the most healthful sections in the State. It is one of the finest watering-places under strong moral and religious influences. It is in the hands of a decidedly religious family and in a very religious community.

Parties desiring particulars can address Capt. E. W. Stafford, Vossburg, Miss.

B. S. RAINER.

Petroleum was discovered near the surface at Lafayette, La., recently. Drilling was commenced at once in the hope of tapping a reservoir of the fluid. At a depth of fifty feet a bed of solid coal of fine quality was struck. The oil, which tests fifty-eight per cent. pure kerosene and a small per cent. of lubricating oil, naphtha and vaseline, has, so far, appeared only in limited quantities.—Lake Charles Echo.

Sunday-School Lesson—July 26.

CHRIST AND NICODEMUS.

John III, 1-17.

I. Golden text: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii, 16). (1) This is the greatest text in the Bible, we can compare divine things with themselves. Its theme is: the wonderful love of God for man, a sinner. The love is wonderful: (a) because it is love of the right quality manifested by a gift; (b) because of the kind of gift God bestowed on the world; (c) because of the universal offer of the gift; (d) because of the easy terms upon which the gift can be secured by man.

II. Nicodemus' estimate of Jesus. Vs. 2. He believed him to be a Teacher sent from God, and felt that God was with him. It is, perhaps, the only place in the Bible where we find the expression: "A teacher come from God." It was that in a higher sense than Nicodemus knew, and hence we may safely depend upon the truthfulness of all he taught.

III. Jesus' reply to Nicodemus. Vs. 3-15. Here is the nature and the necessity of regeneration, and how to secure its blessing in the soul. The figure is a radical change; old things must pass away and all things must become new. The necessity of it rests on the following facts: (a) because sin is what he is—a sinner; (b) because God is what he is: just and holy, he can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; (c) because the Bible is what it is—it gives no idea of a place of peace and pardon save through the heart being created anew by the Spirit of God. Knowing all this, Jesus said: "Ye must be born again" (v. 7). Observe that it is not "could," "ought," "might," "may," but "will." It is the unflinching "must." From the absolute necessity of this change of heart we see that a religion without the new birth is worthless. A religion that substitutes ceremony or mere forms of worship for the new birth is worthless. A religion that adds anything to the new birth as a means of salvation is soul-ruining. Jesus said: "He that is born anew shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." "Except a man be born anew, he can not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (vs. 3-5).

IV. How is the new birth secured? (1) The man must feel the need of being saved from his sins. God can do nothing for an indifferent soul. Such are dead and must remain dead until they earnestly desire to be helped out of their lost estate. When this desire is felt then the Spirit, it may be through human agency, seeks to lead the weary, anxious sinner to look to Jesus Christ on the cross as the diseased Israelites of old looked to the brazen serpent (v. 14). When a soul is truly accepted of Jesus as a crucified Savior, the Holy Spirit enters the soul, the door of which being opened by repentance, and works in it the change here spoken of as "being born again."

V. The gospel briefly stated. Vs. 16. Here is the love of God as the foundation of all hope—the incarnation of his Son as the expression of that love—eternal life offered to all on the easy condition of faith in Christ (v. 16). The mission of Jesus here was not to judge or condemn, but to show mercy and to make a free offer of salvation to men, through his own death (v. 17). He that believe not on Jesus Christ, and by faith which secures deep penitence for sin, are condemned already. The great sin of man is rejecting the Son of God, because he is the expression of the Father's love to rebellious hearts.—The Treasury.

The last census showed what a wonderful increase in population has taken place in some of the United States, these gaining nearly a million and a half a million of inhabitants in ten years.

One of the things the census did not show was the number of bald-headed people in the country. They are numbered by the million, for it is estimated that not one man or woman in a hundred has a fine head of hair. Every year the bald-headed population of the United States increases, and it is asserted by competent authorities that the women of the country continue to depend upon artificial means to hide the ravages of time and disease, it only a question of time when a bald-headed race will be evolved.

The greatest remedy of the age for tonic vigor in this important natural bandage is the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, which combines ingredients that have been found by long experience the best adapted to the promotion of the growth of hair, and unfailing to the parasitical diseases which attack the scalp. There is no excuse for baldness with such an excellent remedy at hand. No tonic or restorer equals this admirable preparation, which has the prestige of a multitude of certificates, and has been used by some of the handsomest women in the country with the most satisfactory results. Preaching Defeated By Its Own Success.

Some days ago a number of preachers discussed at length, in my hearing, the methods of a well-known evangelist. The argument between them seemed to turn upon a single matter of fact—viz, was he successful? I do not now care to express an opinion about the evangelist or his methods, but I wish to express a decided dissent from the standard set up by which to judge the matter—mere success. It is a standard which would in many instances approve wise men and bad methods, and condemn good men and good methods. The attendance of multitudes on the preaching of a man, and the profession of conversion by thousands, are facts which in nowise determine the piety of the preacher or the scriptural character of the preaching. The Scriptures present this false standard as the delusion of some even at the final judgment: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out many devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

If these words mean anything, they imply that one may be apparently successful as a preacher, and yet be a worker of iniquity, and be lost at last. Nothing can be worse than making mere success a test of any work or character. To erect such a standard is to tempt men to adopt methods which will secure success at any price. If this practice becomes general with preachers, doctrine will be corrupted and morals defiled. When the preaching of a people has become bad, they have passed the last mile-stone on the way to destruction; the light within them has become darkness, the instrument for their regeneration and instruction has been turned into the means for their misguidance.

I have no attacks to make on any man or class concerning this matter; but I respectfully raise the question if certain methods of preaching which are now more or less prevalent do not defeat the very ends of preaching. Is not reverence an element of religion? If a revival of religion is accomplished, will there not be also a revival of reverence? Can irreverence in the pulpit produce a revival of religion? These questions go to the heart of the matter, and I submit them "to all whom it may concern."—W. A. Candler, in Nashville Advocate.

Asthma can't be cured? Oh! yes it can. Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar will do it. I know it because it gave me relief. Every winter I was troubled with asthma, especially if the weather was damp, suffering severely. I took about six bottles of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and am completely cured. It is the remedy for asthma. CHAS. REINES, 5004½ Chippewa Street, New Orleans, La.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar is a sure and speedy cure for coughs, colds, catarrh, bronchitis and consumption, and gives immediate relief in cases of croup and whooping-cough. Try it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Louisiana Notes.

Cottonwood is the name of a new postoffice in Vernon parish.

A cotton mill is one of the latest acquisitions at Washington.

The Baptist State Convention will convene in Mansfield, July 31.

The Marksville Review says that the crop prospects throughout the parish are very encouraging.

Iberville has made application for hounty on 52,121,000 pounds of sugar, an increase of over 10,000,000 on last year's crop.

The Consolidated Ice Company, of Monroe, has both of its machines running day and night in order to keep up with the increasing demand.

In Rapides parish the corn crop promises to be larger than for any year since the war. Cotton is regarded as 5 per cent. less than last year.

The ladies of Amite City have organized an Anti-Lottery League, with Mrs. E. John Ellis as president, and Mrs. A. Wilhouse as vice-president.

The Welsh Crescent says that Eastern capitalists, after looking the ground over in Southwest Louisiana, selected Welsh as the place to build a big rice mill.

The Shreveport Fire Insurance Company has been dissolved by a vote of the stockholders. It is said that the dissolution was caused by a lack of home patronage.

The police jury of Union parish, at their last meeting, decided on levying a seven-mill tax upon all the assessable property in the parish, the entire amount to be applied to parochial purposes.

The Abbeville Meridional says that Vermilion parish is not only prolific of big crops, but also of large people. Dosire Bandoin, of the Grand Marais settlement, has a son thirteen years old who weighs 170 pounds.

An appropriation of $500 has been made by the police jury of Ascension parish for the purpose of aiding the Mississippi River Improvement Association in urging the claims of the Mississippi Valley before the next Congress.

The Farmerville Gazette says that reliable information from all parts of the parish give glowing reports concerning the crop outlook. In fact, the prospects in our parish for both corn and cotton were never better at this season of the year; but the result depends entirely upon rains.

The assessment rolls of the parish of Lafourche, submitted to the police jury of that parish a few days since, foot up $2,356,925. The pro rata of taxation was fixed at the rates of the previous year, that is to say: To general fund, four and a half mills; to school fund, two and a half mills; to school-house fund, one-quarter of a mill; to drainage fund, one mill—making eight and a quarter mills.

Mississippi Items.

Fernwood is the name of a new postoffice in Pike county.

It is said that the I. C. R. R. Company thinks of building a branch line from Magnolia to Natchez.

Henry Kernaghan succeeds R. C. Kerr, deceased, as register of the United States land office at Jackson.

The town authorities of Summit have contracted with the Sun Vapor Street Light Company, of Canton, Ohio, for lighting the town.

Mr. John D. Warner, tax assessor, has just finished the personal roll, and finds $815,000 worth of personal property in Pike county.

The West Point Forum chronicles the fact that Bro. Kendall has had an interesting and successful protracted meeting. He was assisted by Bro. Robinson.

The Warren County Truckers' Association has been organized at Vicksburg. Its object is to perfect arrangements for shipping fruits and vegetables another year.

The Mississippian thinks that Jackson will soon come to the front in the vegetable and truck industry. It says:

Jackson adds to a soil splendidly adapted to fruit and vegetable culture, superior shipping facilities, and there is no reason why it should not soon lead the State in this line of industry.

The Commercial Herald, of Vicksburg, speaking of the increased value of property in that city, says:

The city real and personal assessment rolls will show an increase of fully half a million dollars over the rolls of last year. This represents a large number of new buildings, as well as a decided "raise" in the valuation.

The demand for ice in Vicksburg is so great that the Consumer's Ice Company has determined to double the capacity of its works. The present plant produces twenty tons a day; but the additional machinery, when put in operation, will more than double the amount turned out.

The mayor and Board of Aldermen have granted for twenty-one years a franchise to the Holly Waterworks Company for establishing waterworks at Port Gibson. One and a half miles of mains will be laid for supplying residences, and seventeen double-plug fire hydrants placed on the streets.

The works will be built by a company to be organized. Nine months from date will be allowed for the completion of the works.

A large meeting of the business men and citizens of Natchez, generally, has been held to promote the building by the Illinois Central Road of a branch line into this city from Brookhaven, Hazelhurst, or some other point on the main stem. Resolutions were adopted setting forth the advantages of Natchez, the desire of our citizens to secure a tap road, and extending an invitation to the president and other officials of the corporation to visit Natchez in the interest of the project.

The Building Committee of the Presbyterian Church have awarded the contract for erecting the new church to Mr. John F. Barnes, of Greenville, for the sum of $14,444, he also agreeing to take the material in the old building at $950.

The new church will be a handsome Gothic structure, built of brick, with slate roof; outside dimensions to be 71 feet, 4 inches, by 67 feet, 8 inches, with full basement story for use by the Sunday-school and other church organizations, divided into three rooms with folding-doors, so that all may, when desired, be thrown into one. The church-room proper will be the second floor, with pulpit on the north side. Work is to begin August 1, with one year to complete.—Clarion-Ledger.

If the hair is falling out, and turning gray, the glands of the skin need stimulating and color-food, and the best remedy and stimulant is Hall's Hair Renewer.

Much time and thought have been devoted to the consideration of the question, "Why do men stay away from church?" One thinks he has found the solution of the problem in the expensive and beautifully decorated and elaborately furnished churches of the day. But why is it, then, that these same people who are repelled by fine churches are attracted by gilded saloons, where every article of furniture is most artistic and costly? The very means by which the saloon draws is said to repel from the church. Another believes that the cost of pew-rents keeps people away from church, and thinks if the churches were free they would be crowded. But the theaters are not free, and they are crowded. Every man who goes to the theater must pay for his sitting cash down, and yet they go. Another says it is because the poor feel uncomfortable in a church where they are so many rich people. But they sit side by side with the rich at the opera; or if they can not afford this, they buy a cheaper seat in an upper gallery, and do not utter a word of complaint about the invidious distinction. The best solution of the perplexing problem is found in the words of the Great Teacher: "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; because narrow is the gate, and strait is the way, that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." "Men love darkness rather than light."

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

THE LAST DAYS!

A Text-Book on the Second Coming of Christ and Events which shall be Hereafter.

Compiled by JOHN E. RODD, New Orleans.

This is a most captivating and wonderfully instructive little work on this glorious coming event. This event is of such great moment that it is mentioned 318 times in the New Testament, or once in every 35 verses. It seems to have fallen to Mr. Rodd's good fortune to classify these passages under proper headings and in an intelligent manner, and to do it so he has done a great service to the Christian world.

This book contains but fourteen short chapters, and they are all Scripture quotations, prefaced by a few lines, only, of introductory remarks; but, as a convenient TEXT BOOK upon this subject, its value and usefulness can hardly be overestimated.

Briefs.

We trust our pastors will make preparation for a rigid keeping of the week of prayer appointed by the Bishops. They have issued a splendid program, and we hope our preachers will follow it to the letter. Brethron, call the people to prayer. A million earnest souls sending up hearty and fervent prayers to heaven for one week ought to bring about a spiritual downpouring such as the church never saw. A million men and women and children on their knees for a week! Just think of it! Remember the time—Aug. 9 16.

It is an excellent sign to see the young men in all parts of Louisiana forming leagues and associations to fight the Lottery. Our young have no idea of living for the next twenty-five years under the rulo of this gambling concern, hence they will do everything consistent with their manhood to defeat it. We trust that everywhere they will rouse themselves and work, as only young and hopeful men can work, to save our State from the threatoned disaster. They will do splendid service, we aro sure. Let everybody encourage them.

The Times-Democrat is making a fuss about the exclusion of non-Protestant tenters from the Seashore Camp Grounds. The grounds are the private property of the Methodist Church, and, of course, the authorities have the right to manage their grounds. To admit tenters who are not Protestants would be to open the way for a subversion of their own authority. Catholic grounds are exclusively for Catholics. Why should not Methodist grounds be occupied exclusively by Methodists? Would the Times-Democrat rent the editor of the New Delta a part of its office? The exclusion refers solely to tent-holders, and not to visitors.

The Briggs controversy, it seems, is likely to affect the Union Theological Seminary in a financial way. There is talk of suits at law to recover certain donations granted the seminary, on the ground that they were given upon the guarantee that the teaching should remain true to the orthodox faith. It is asserted that the election of Dr. Briggs has violated the pledge made to the donors. On the other side, it is asserted that Dr. Briggs was simply transferred from one chair to another, and that his new position has no bearing on the case. If the suits are instituted and pressed, the endowment funds of the institution may be seriously affected, and thus the work of the seminary impaired.

The immigration statistics of the United States from 1820 to 1890 have been made public. Previous to 1820 no official records were kept; but from 1821 to 1890 no less than 15,641,688 foreigners have settled in this country; mostly in the North and West. The following figures give the arrivals of each nationality during the entire period from 1820 to 1890: Germany, 4,551,719; Ireland, 3,501,683; England, 2,460,034; British North American possessions, 1,029,083; Norway and Sweden, 943,330; Austria-Hungary, 464,435; Italy, 414,513; France, 370,162; Russia and Poland, 356,353; Scotland, 329,192, China, 292,578; Switzerland, 174,333; Denmark, 146,237; all other countries, 606,006.

Sam Small turns up again in Atlanta, as the editor of a new prohibition paper, called the Evening Herald. So says a dispatch.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

We spent two pleasant and profitable days at this renowned camp ground. The number of persons in attendance, though large, was not as large as we have seen in other days. The meeting opened at the advertised time, and the congregation at every service was good. Up to the time of leaving, Monday morning, the following brethren had spoken the Word of Life to the people: Mounger, Jones and Watkins, of Mississippi; Bancroft, Keener and Mangham, of Alabama; Pierce, LaPrade, Walker and Wimberly, of Louisiana; G. G. Smith, of Georgia, and Bishop Keener. The preaching was plain and practical and searching. On Saturday hearts began to yield to the influences of the gospel of power. Saturday night, after a plain sermon by Bro. Mangham, which was aptly worded and sent home to the conscience by forcible illustrations, many came to the altar, where six persons professed conversion. At eleven o'clock, on Sunday, Bishop Keener gave a grand discourse on Isaiah lxiii, 1-6, after which there were altar exercises, where several professed to find the peace of God. Bro. LaPrade preached in the evening and Bro. Mangham at night. Both of these services were good to the use of edifying, and much good was accomplished in the name of the Lord. Work in the office, which could not be postponed nor done by another, compelled us to leave the camp ground on the early train, Monday morning.

A good feature of the meeting was the two prayer meetings—one held by the young men and one by the young women—daily. No doubt these added much to the interest and power of the occasion. The music also was much improved on former times. An organ, a piano and a cornet to lead the singing give an inspiriting which was much enjoyed and helped mightily in sounding the "high praises of our God." The orderly conduct on the grounds won words of commendation from those in authority, and was a guarantee of the safety of person and property.

The Board of Trustees have worked earnestly and faithfully for years to build up this camp ground, and they begin to see the fruit of their labors. Quite a number of new, well-built cottages have been erected, and the place begins really to put on the appearance of a handsome village. In the meantime the beautiful trees have grown more stately and extended their branches so as almost to shade the whole ground, and when the soft breeze from the sea plays through the shades it is one of the most delightful places we have ever visited. The Board contemplates other improvements, which will add greatly to the comfort of both tenters and visitors. At an early day an artesian well will be sunk and pipes laid so that the whole camp may have the benefit of clear, cool water. A large hotel or lodging-house is a necessity which will be supplied as soon as the circumstances of the Board will permit of the outlay. It seems to us that the Board will be compelled to erect such a house to protect itself against the boarding-tents. A large, comfortable hotel, with airy sleeping apartments, well furnished, and at a reasonable rate of prices, will attract people from the crowded and uncomfortable tents, and thus add to the revenues of the Board as well as to the comfort of visitors. There really ought to be no boarding-tents on the ground. If tenters desire to entertain their friends, they ought to do it, and nobody will say nay; but for people to go there for no other purpose than to make money out of the visitors, hampers the operations of the association. All the money paid out for board and lodging should be made by the Board and be expended in improving the grounds. That is what we think about it.

A Religion of Helpfulness.

Of all who ever lived on this earth Jesus Christ was the most helpful of others. All that he did was done in the interest and for the benefit of others. The spirit that filled him and inspired all his teaching and energized all his work was the spirit of helpfulness, and this spirit abides with all his true followers. In renouncing themselves and the world they have prepared themselves for the reception of this spirit of helpfulness and have received a large measure of the mind of Christ. They heed the apostle's injunction: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, who being in the form of God thought it no robbery to be equal with God, but made himself of no reputation and was made in the likeness of men and took the form of a servant." "The form of a servant" in the person of Jesus Christ was a new and encouraging revelation of the Divine Being, and the whole life of Jesus demonstrated that the revelation was true, for the religion which he preached and practiced was nothing more nor less than a religion of help to the needy.

When the spirit that was in Christ enters into a man there comes with it a constraining influence that impels him to put forth some sort of effort for the good of those around him. The love of Christ flaming in his soul constrains him to show the genuineness of his profession by the helpfulness of his life and work. Filled with the "mind that was in Christ," and seeing the dire needs of his fellows, he becomes a true helper of the needy in every sphere in which he is called to walk. Always and everywhere a helping influence goes out from him. He lives in an atmosphere laden with healthful power, and carries with him a sunshine which sweetly enters the dark doors of disconsolate souls and brightens them with the light of love. The spirit of God produces the same temper in him that it produced in Jesus, and the blessed fruits of this temper are seen in the blessings which his life bestows upon others, and men everywhere "rise up and call him blessed."

What a great pity it is, and what a hindrance to the progress of Christianity it is, that there is so much selfishness displayed in the religion of professed Christians! Such a spirit is far removed from the spirit of Christ!

Such a religion is a "counterfeit presentment" of the true, and a very poor counterfeit at that! It deceives nobody but its own self-deceived possessor! It is as real a caricature as was ever drawn, and is valueless, except to show how men may spend their lives in professing a religion that in the end will land them in the region of everlasting despair. But the man filled with the mind of Christ exhibits by his helpfulness of others the true religion in all its beauty and attractiveness, and his work for others strengthens his whole nature, and he grows day after day, and develops all Christly qualities, being more and more "conformed to his image." After a life thus spent in good deeds and kindly charities, the Savior, whose religion he has practiced before men, will give him a cordial welcome to a home at God's right hand forever.

Brother, is your religion a religion of helpfulness or is it a religion of hindrance?

Sometimes we receive two or three accounts of the same meeting, but we have never seen the necessity of publishing more than one. We try to select the best and publish that.

Specious Arguments.

It seems clear that Job considered the speeches of his friends as constituting a sort of specious argumentation. He said to them: "How forcible are right words! But what doth your arguing reprove?" "Right words" have a force that is appreciated at once, but plausible and specious reasoning, while it may sound well, will very soon be detected and all its weakness disclosed and declared. Plausibility will rarely stand the test of close examination, and when it is detected great harm is done the cause in which it was used. The mind always resents the effort made to impose upon it. We abhor the man by whom we have been deceived, when we discover that the deception came under the guise of plausibility. This has gone so far that people generally consider, that when the word "plausible" is used, it is equivalent to a word of condemnation. So when we detect speciousness in a course of reasoning, the mind becomes so resentful of this attempt to impose upon its sincerity that that very reasoning is transferred to the opposite side and made to do duty against that in whose favor it apparently speaks.

Many a good cause has suffered just at this point and for this reason. Arguments are used in favor of a good object or cause which can be applied with equal force against some other good object or cause. And, vice versa, arguments are used against a bad thing which will apply with as much force against a good thing. Such arguments are invalid. They are plausible, but fail to convince those who think. No reasoning that is against the truth in one case and in favor of the truth in another case can be valid reasoning. To use an argument against a bad thing that can be used against a good thing is to help the bad and hinder the good.

We believe the temperance cause has suffered much from this sort of argumentation. The foes of temperance have taken these "temperance arguments" and turned them with terrible force against other good things, and we can not deny their force when thus applied. Take, what may be called, the "financial argument," which some are so fond of producing. A man takes three drinks a day, equal to thirty cents. That is thirty cents a day wasted; that is two dollars a week, one hundred dollars a year—in fifty years fifty hundred dollars. That is a good deal of money wasted, it is true, but it is no sound argument in favor of temperance. If the temperance cause is to be pushed because of the money wasted in intemperance, then our enemies will take this reasoning and smite us "hip and thigh" with our own jaw-bone. For the same reasoning will apply against a thousand good things with equal force. Why should a man wear a ten-dollar suit when he can get one for five dollars? Why should he wear five-dollar shoes when there are plenty of good shoes at two dollars? Such arguments are specious and do harm. In the temperance cause let us use the arguments which are founded, irrespective of the money aspect of the question, upon the awful fact that intemperance is a sin which will "destroy both soul and body in hell."

Our Quarterly.

The July number of this valuable periodical is on our table. We do not know that we have seen a number whose contents are so varied, interesting and instructive. Science, literature, verbal criticism, biography, church history, civil history, are all in it. We like especially "Chemical Lucubrations," by T. B. Smith; "The Place of Elocution in Ministerial Education," by James A. Duncan; and Bishop Galloway's sketch of Dr. Marshall. Besides these, Dr. Tillett makes a strong plea for "A Wesleyan Arminian Confession of Faith;" Dr. Hoss writes on "The Beginning of Religious Persecution;" W. J. Scott brings to memory that wonderful man, Cromwell; and N. H. D. Wilson contributes a brief history of "The Rise of Arminianism in Holland." The editor gives his third paper on "Bishop Simpson as a Politician," and also an article on Evangelists and one on Dr. Briggs. Readers of the ADVOCATE will see that Dr. Harrison takes the same view of evangelists as that already given in the columns of this paper. This is a fine number of our Quarterly, published by Barbee and Smith, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $2 50.

Illness of Rev. T. B. Holloman.

Not having seen any notice in the ADVOCATE of the serious illness of our beloved pastor, Rev. T. B. Holloman, I send you this note. Seeing the great need of rest from his work, our church here in May sent him from us, hoping that by entire rest from preaching and all pastoral work his health and strength would be restored. Still following the advice of friends here not to return, though earnestly desiring to do so, feeling, as he said, that "home was the best place for sick folks," he remained away. And now for more than three weeks he has been very sick at the home of Dr. Ben Catchings, in Atlanta, Ga. His wife is with him, and last news heard from him, on July 14, he was better. I write this that his brethren may know of his illness, and that their prayers, too, may be to Him from whom all our help must come for his recovery. Earnestly praying that God, in his infinite mercy and goodness, may yet spare him to his loved ones, his church, the work he found it so hard to lay aside, and to his people here who truly in his affliction are afflicted, and may it yet turn that this affliction may work for us all that "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

The Teacher.

In these days, when so much commendable earnestness in Sunday-school work is manifesting itself, we copy from Zion's Herald, for the benefit of our Sunday-school teachers, this brief note. Though short, it contains enough to study over for some time.

The true office of the teacher is to inspire and guide to fountains of knowledge those under his care. To impart knowledge is not enough. The book may give knowledge often more clearly than the teacher. The true teacher is more than a book. The best things in him can not be set in type. What books can not give are the personal magnetism and the tact in guidance of the electric teacher. He inspires those about him with a measure of his own interest and conducts them to the high grounds whence are discernible the paths into the kingdom of true knowledge. To dispense knowledge to others is less important than to induce them to secure it for themselves. The best teacher is not necessarily the most learned; he is the one who opens the ways of knowledge to his pupils and sends them off in the race with a holy ardor. With such a start and furnishing for the race, they can not fail to reach the goal in good time. The measure of ability in a teacher is not what he knows, but what he is able to make the pupil know. The perfect teacher is one who is able to point to pupils who have traveled beyond himself. "In America," said a German oculist, "I have a pupil who can do all I can do and much which I can not." Socrates projected his pupils far in advance of his own lines.

It is said that the New York Christian Advocate "has the largest subscription of any religious paper in the world." Its list numbers 51,200.

We regret to learn that our Centenary Church, in San Francisco, has been burned—and no insurance. Dr. Hannon, the pastor, saved most of his books and manuscripts, which were in his study, but lost his watch.

It is said that the only survivers of the celebrated General Conference of 184 are Rev. Andrew Hunter, of Arkansas; Rev. J. C. Berryman, of Missouri, and Rev. Mr. Jamison, of California.

Bishop Galloway's article on Dr. Marshall, in the last Quarterly Review, we understand, has been published in pamphlet form. We are glad to note this fact, for there are hundreds of Dr. Marshall's friends who would never see it in the Review. It can be had at the Nashville House for ten cents a copy.

We call attention to the advertisement and cut of Whitworth College in another column. This institution has had fine success in the past, and its present organization of officers and teachers, under the guidance of its wide-awake president, is a full guarantee of successful work in the future.

Rev. Edwin Palmer, writing in the Pacific Methodist Advocate, of "Impressions of the Southland," has this mention which we reproduce:

To hear the amiable Dr. I. W. Cooper preach, and to preach to his appreciative people, to sup with that prince of Bishops, Galloway, and to dine with the "little giant," Joe Nicholson, constituted no small part of the pleasure of our stay.

The pastor of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., Rev. B. F. Lewis, says that his church raised more money on Easter Sunday for the Scarritt Bible and Training-school than any church in Mississippi and Louisiana, except Carondelet Street Church, in this city. We call Bro. Lewis' attention to the fact that Shreveport is far ahead on that list.

We are pained to hear of the illness of several of our preachers—Bros. Norsworthy and Holloman and Ballard, of the Mississippi Conference. A note from Bro. Ellis says: "Bro. Ballard is more comfortable than formerly." We trust the Lord will spare these valuable brethren long to bless the church with their labors and godly examples. A note from Bro. Norsworthy says he is much improved.

Rain has fallen generally over the county, and prospects of a good crop are very flattering. Melons and peaches are coming in now as blackberries go out. We have them in abundance in this country. This is the time of the year when the thoughts of those in the crowded cities turn to a cool and pleasant retreat. If you are in quest of such a place, the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee, with their high altitudes and refreshing breezes, are as inviting as any place on the continent. The hotels are first-class. Board is reasonable. The fishing is good, and you do not have to spend 24 hours on the road to reach them. Facts for Housekeepers.

Manufacturers of standard goods, intended to be handled by retailers, use the columns of the press to make known the merits of their productions. What a contrast between this system and that followed by some producers who, in place of advertising legitimately, send broadcast over the country organized crews of sharp and tricky peddlers, and force their goods into private families, claiming them to be the "same as," or "as good as," the genuine article! In fact, among the ignorant classes, these peddlers assert that their imitation goods are the very article so widely advertised in the papers. Did it ever occur to you, readers, that where such desperate and deceptive means are pursued, that there is bound to be something wrong? The retail merchant is conceded to be the proper person to distribute a manufacturer's productions to consumers. Should he give you the wrong article, it can be exchanged. Not so with the fleeting peddler; you have to keep what you purchase of him, whether it suits you or not.

Be guided, housekeepers, by your family paper, as to what is good and reliable, and buy your goods of your retail merchant. Beware of peddlers. They usually offer you spurious imitations, which fail to give that satisfaction accorded by the genuine article.

THE LITTLE LAD'S ANSWER.

Our little lad came in one day
With dusty shoes and tired feet;
His playtime had been hard and long
Out in the Summer noontide heat.
"I'm glad I'm home," he cried, and hung
His torn straw hat up in the hall,
While in the corner by the door
He put away his bat and ball.

"I wonder why," his aunty said,
"This little lad always comes here
When there are many other homes,
As nice as this and quite as near?"
He stood a moment deep in thought,
Then, with the love-light in his eye,
He pointed where his mother sat,
And said, "She lives here; that is why!"

With beaming face the mother heard;
Her mother-heart was very glad.
A true, sweet answer he had given—
That thoughtful, loving little lad.
And well I know that hosts of lads
Are just as loving, true and dear;
That they would answer as he did;
"'Tis home, for mother's living here."

Will Miss Helen Richardson, whose letter was published in the children's column last week, please send me her postoffice address? I wish to communicate with all the dear little girls who are named in memory of Anna Clara Chrisman.

Respectfully,—

MRS. JULIA T. CHRISMAN.

Beauregard, Miss.

Macaronic Poetry.

Macaronic poetry is not necessarily burlesque in its character. The burlesque is rather a modern invention, and a sort of deterioration from its originally classic nature. The immortal Shakespeare gives us an illustration in "The Taming of the Shrew:"

"Affection is not rated from the heart;
If love have touch'd you, naught remains but so—
Redime te captum quam queas minimo."

In modern times macaronic poetry seems to be confined to the burlesque; for instance:

"Parvus Jacobus Horner
Sedebat in corner,
Edens a Christmas pie;
Inseruit thumb
Extraherit plum,
Clamans, quid sharp puer am I."

Small boys and girls who are reading Latin fables will no doubt rejoice to see little Jack Horner so Latinized.

Again:

"Parvula Bo-peep
Amisit her sheep,
Et neelt where to find 'em.
Desere ulone
Et venient home,
Cum omnibus caudis behind 'em."

And a famous macaronic verse is called "Very Felis-itous," viz:

"Felis sedit by a hole,
Intente she, cum omni soul;
Prendere rats.
Mice cucurrerunt trans the floor,
In numero duo, tres, or more;
Obliti cats."

There are macaronics of letters as well as dialects, and the nineteenth century has deserted the classic form of this famous verse, which filled up the leisure moments of our ancestors, to sport with burlesque and ingenious arrangements of letters. The celebrated Dr. Whewell, who was called at Cambridge "Billy Whistle," because it was so much easier to whistle his name than to pronounce it, wrote a very ingenious rhyme of ciphers in a young lady's album, which has puzzled old heads, but nevertheless is not beyond the ability of a thoughtful boy to unravel. It is short, and may be given here:

"U 0 a 0, but I 0 u;
O 0 no 0, but O 0 me;
O let not my 0 a 0 go;
But give 0 0, I 0 u so!"

which, being deciphered, is this:

"You sigh for a cipher, but I sigh for you;
O sigh for no cipher, but O sigh for me;
O let not my sigh for a cipher go;
But give sigh for sigh, for I sigh for you so!"

It is said to have been one of Victor Hugo's amusements to write macaronics of French and English. The Germans are very fond of it, as many of the student songs prove; and in the days when Italy attracted students from all parts of the world to her universities, the writing of macaronic verse was a prevalent fashion. It was in the famous Propaganda that Cardinal Mezzofanti, whom Byron called the "Briarerus of languages," was tested in his knowledge of all the dialects and languages spoken by the thousands of students attending this famous university. Concealed among the shrubbery of the beautiful grounds which environed the buildings, these speakers of various tongues stepped out of their retirement as the famous linguist passed along, each student accosting the cardinal in his own (the speaker's) mother tongue, and engaging him in conversation. Mezzofanti was quite equal to the test, conversing with each student in his own language. Such a master of tongues might have produced volumes of macaronic verse, one would infer, but his wonderful attainments were never displayed in macaronic poetry.—Exchange.

Boys, Read This.

A gentleman advertised for a boy to assist him in his office, and nearly fifty applicants presented themselves before him.

Out of the whole number he selected one and dismissed the rest. "I should like to know," said a friend, "on what ground you selected that boy without a single recommendation." "You are mistaken," said the gentleman, "he has a great many. He wiped his feet when he came in and closed the door after him, showing that he was careful; gave up his seat to that lame old man, showing that he was kind and thoughtful; he took off his cap when he came in, answered my questions promptly and respectfully, showing that he was polite and gentlemanly; he picked up a book, which I had purposely laid upon the floor, and replaced it on the table, while all the rest stepped over it or shoved it aside; and he waited quietly for his turn, instead of pushing or crowding, showing that he was honest and orderly. When I talked with him I noticed his clothes were carefully brushed, his hair in nice order and his teeth as white as milk; and when he wrote his name, I noticed that his finger nails were clean, instead of being tipped with jet like that handsome little fellow in the blue jacket. Don't you call these things letters of recommendation? I do, and I would give more for what I can tell about a boy by using my eyes ten minutes than for all the letters of recommendation that he can give me."—Manufacturer and Builder.

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to take any other. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a peculiar medicine, possessing, by virtue of its peculiar combination, proportion and preparation, curative power superior to any other article of the kind.

A DOG WITH A MEMORY.—The following, remarkable at all events as a feat of memory, was told me by the owner of an Irish water-spaniel, the only dog I ever knew who would perform tricks and was good to shoot over at the same time. His master was out walking with him at the beginning of the long frost in the year 1885, which set in about the middle of January. He went on a frozen mill-dam, where the water was, of course, very deep, and accidentally dropped his snuff-box through a little round hole in the ice. The dog was dreadfully distressed at not being able to get it, but was obliged to go home with its owner, who thought no more about the matter. Two months afterward, when the frost had gone, he and the dog passed by the same place. The dog paused opposite the spot where the box had disappeared, seemed to think intently for a minute, then plunged in, dived to the bottom, and returned with the snuff-box in his mouth.—Quarterly Review.

THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS.—A man who was sad heard two boys laughing. He asked them: "What makes you so happy?"

"Happy?" said the elder of the two: "why, I makes Jim glad, and gets glad myself!"

This is the true secret of a happy life; to live so that by our example, our kind words and deeds, we may help some one else. It makes life happier here, and the home of the redeemed will be happier for the company of those we have, by God's help, brought there.—Selected.

MAKING HOME A SCHOOL.—Make home an institution of learning. It is the cheapest school you can find. Provide books for the centre-table and for the library of the family. What is learned at home from good books will not have to be learned abroad. See that all the younger children attend the best schools, and interest yourself in their studies. If they have the taste for thorough cultivation, but not the means to pursue it, if possible provide for a higher education. Daniel Webster taught at the intervals of his college course to aid an older brother in the pursuit of a classical education, and a volume of his works is dedicated to the daughters of that brother, who early closed a brilliant career. Feel that an ignorant brother or sister will be a disgrace to your family, and trust not to the casual influence of the press, existing institutions and the kind offices of strangers. If the family becomes, as it may be, an institution of learning, the whole family will be educated.

Do not think of finishing your education. Learn as long as you live. Keep up habits of study, and, above all, remember that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and that the Holy Scriptures are able to make men wise unto salvation—Exchange.

WHAT MOTHERS ARE MADE FOR.—A home is what a woman makes it; a daughter is, in nine cases out of every ten, the reflection of her mother, writes Edward W. Bok in The Ladies' Home Journal. The training of the girl of fifteen is shown in the women of fifty. A son may, by contact with the rough world, sometimes outlive his early home influences—a daughter rarely does. She may make a misstep. Indiscretion may be to her a necessary teacher; but her early domestic training will manifest itself sooner or later. A mother's word, a domestic proverb, told at eventide by the quiet fireside, has been recalled by many a woman years after it was uttered. "I thank God that my mother told me what other women have been taught by the world," said a gentlewoman to me not long ago. This, my friend, is the tribute which your daughter and mine should be able to pay to our memories long after we are gone. The world has a sharp way of teaching its truths to a girl. Is it not far better, then, that her mother should tell her with that sweet and sympathetic grace and gentleness which only a mother knows? The flowers most beautiful to the eye and sweetest to the smell grow in good soil. The world's noblest women have sprung from good homes.

"It took me five years," said a married man, "to become convinced that the cheapest way for me to run my house was to give my wife so much money every month, to spend as she saw fit. I think that I have saved, at least, twenty-five per cent. by this plan. I never have any large bills coming in now at importune times, for my wife pays as she buys. My house is better equipped and better managed than it was under my old system, and, furthermore, my wife has a bank account, to which she adds a little every month. I would advise every man who has a practical wife to try the same scheme. It's an immense relief not to speak of the saving."—New York Tribune.

A WIFE'S INFLUENCE.—The discreet but persuasive power of the Christian wife and mother in her home was displayed in our presence recently with gratifying effect. As we arose from the breakfast table the father said: "We are so pressed with the obligations of the day that we will not take time to read the Bible this morning." "Oh, yes," said the wife, "there is always time to worship. Give us a message from the Bible to help us through the day." And she brought the Bible, opened it, and gave it to her husband to read. The prayer was richer because of the counsel with the Father which was first taken, and the heavy burdens of the day were more easily borne.—Zion's Herald.

Why Oil Calms the Sea.

The action of oil in calming the sea is now so generally recognized that the new rule as to life-saving appliances, to go into effect in England, Nov. 1, requires that every boat of sea-going vessels and all life-boats shall carry "one gallon of oil and a vessel of approved pattern for distributing it on the water in rough weather." The potency of oil in smoothing waves was recently explained by Lord Rayleigh before the Royal Institution in a lucid lecture. The well-known scientist's experiments demonstrate that foam or froth is caused by impurities in liquids.

Thus, on shaking up a bottle containing pure water, we get no appreciable foam; but taking a mixture of water with 5 per cent. of alcohol, there is a much greater tendency to foam. Camphor, glue and gelatine dissolved in water greatly increase its foaming qualities, and soap still more. Lord Rayleigh finds that sea water foams, not on account of its saline matter, but in consequence of the presence of something extracted by wave action from sea weeds. By simply putting his finger in water which was moving vigorously under the influence of a few camphor scrapings, the contamination of the water by the infinitesimal amount of grease sufficed to form an invisible film over it, and to neutralize the foaming action produced by the dissolved camphor.

The effect of oil on waves, as several physicists have proved, is not to subdue the huge swell, but to smooth and tone down its ripples, each of which gives the wind a "point d'appui," thus increasing the force of the breaking waves. "The film of oil," says Lord Rayleigh, "may be compared to an inextensible membrane floating on the surface of the water and hampering its motion." As long as the advancing tumultuous sea water is pure, there is nothing to oppose its periodic contractions and extensions; but when its surface is covered with the oily membrane, the most dangerous contractions and extensions are impossible.

The scientific demonstration of the sea-quelling virtue of oil is worthy of note by all sailors. It is fortunate for them that Lord Rayleigh has accomplished this at a time when ocean storms, and especially tropical hurricanes, are likely soon to tax the seaman's art to the utmost in saving his craft from destruction.—Exchange.

DEEP-SEA CREATURES.—The queerest thing about deep-sea creatures is their arangement for vision. Fish that live at very great depths have either no eyes at all, or enormously big ones. Indeed, there are two ways you may get on in these gloomy abysses: by delicate touch organs, or by sight that collects the few rays of light due to phosphorescence or other accidental sources. Down to the depth of two hundred fathoms the eyes get constantly bigger and bigger. Beyond that depth small-eyed forms, with long feelers, developed to supplement the eyes. Lower still, we find functionless eyes, and in the most confirmed abyssmal species the eyes have disappeared entirely.—Exchange.

ODOR AND FOULNESS.—The odor of the sewer exaggerates its dangers. Dr. E. Duncan, of Glasgow, finds that plumbers are not more liable than other persons to that class of zymotic diseases—including typhoid fever, diphtheria, diarrhœa and sore throat—supposed to be due to exposure to the offensive emanations from choked drains and soil-pipes. There is no gas in the sewer that may not be encountered outside of it, and neither typhoid excreta nor tuberculous sputum give forth more dangerous emanations in decomposing than any other organic substance. The air of a well-ventilated sewer, in fact, is far less unwholesome than that of crowded schools or churches, or even of the houses of half of Glasgow's population.

"Did I understand you right, only 20c a bottle for Wolff's Acme Blacking? My friend, who, on her way to Europe, first called my attention to it, said she paid 35c for it, and would sooner pay 50c than do without it; hence my wonder at your low price."

"I quite agree with your friend, madam; Acme Blacking is very cheap considering its merit. I recommend it to all my customers; to the wealthy, as a matter of pleasure and necessity; to the poor, as a source of pleasure and economy."

A Life Saved!

READ THE TWO STATEMENTS.

An Extraordinary Case!

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Nov. 22, 1890.

Last April I was attacked with Chagres Fever in Spanish Honduras and was given up to die by two physicians. During that spell and since I have used a pound of quinine and quantities of other medicines without any benefit. From three to four days out of every week I have been down and have suffered untold agonies. Between these spells I could scarcely walk more than two blocks at a time. I did not expect to live through the coming winter. Ten days ago I commenced using Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. I have had no fever since. All the symptoms have entirely disappeared. I have no pain or trouble of any kind. My gaining strength very fast. Can walk miles at a time. My sudden and rapid improvement is simply wonderful. Germetuer has been a God-send to me. I can not say too much in its praise. Any who wish to do so may call on me. DANIEL PATTON,
481 Jersey Street.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1891.

My improvement continued, and soon after writing the above statement I was able to go to work and have been working ever since. My health is now perfect. I never felt better in my life. I give this testimony gladly, because I know that Germetuer saved my life.
DANIEL PATTON.

Chagres Fever is known to be not only a most dangerous form of sickness, but also very difficult to cure. Germetuer has been tried on a number of cases. In every known instance it has cured quickly and completely. It has a similar record as a remedy for Swamp Fever and Malarial troubles of all kinds. Properly used, it is the quickest and most unfailing remedy for Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Debility, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Dysentery and all diseases of the Blood and Skin.

These claims are sustained by evidences from thousands of the best people in the country, and the evidences multiply in our midst every day.

For sale by druggists and country merchants, and at the Germetuer office, 502 Canal St., New Orleans. For full information, circulars, etc., call on or address Kit Williams, Agent, 502 Canal St. $1 bottle; six bottles for $5.

OBITUARIES.

WATTS—JOHN WATTS was born at Core Springs, Copiah county, Miss., Nov. 17, 1823, and died June 5, 1891. He was twice married: first in December, 1843, to Miss Amanda Mattingly, who only lived ten days after marriage; was again married to Miss Cyntha Hays, Nov. 21, 1844. To them were born twelve children. Five of these died when small, leaving seven grown children, with their aged mother, to mourn their loss. He was a devoted husband, a kind and affectionate father, and a most excellent neighbor; ever doing unto others as he would have them do unto him. He was kind and gentle in his disposition. To know him was to love him.

Bro. Watts was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at old White Bay Church, in the summer of 1837. His conversion was clear and genuine, and, though quite a boy, he soon began to pray in public, and to take an active part in church work. In a few years he was appointed class leader, and held this office until 1866, when he was licensed to exhort. He was a fine exhorter, and very able in prayer, often moving whole congregations to tears by his warm exhortations and fervent prayers.

Bro. Watts was a great sufferer for years before he died, though he never complained of his afflictions, and often said if it was the Lord's will, he was willing to suffer for Christ's sake. Before he died he called his family and friends around him and exhorted them to live right, and meet him in heaven; and then, turning to his youngest son, said, "Son, I want you to take my place in the church." May God grant that the father's mantle may fall upon the son!

Dear brother, the one who has been the instrument in bringing so many to Christ, we take you and the old home under whose roof we have so often sat, and where the weary servants of God have found comfort and courage to their troubled souls. That home has lost one of its strongest ties; but, by the grace of God, we will meet in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

W. W. SIMMONS.

AUGUSTUS—Mrs. MAHALA AUGUSTUS, relict of Geo. B. Augustus, was born March 12, 1809, died near Macon, Miss., at the home of her only son, Wm. B. Augustus, on July 4, 1891.

The departure of this beloved and venerable woman was as a peaceful autumn sunset, betitling the quiet, saintly beauty of her long, unaffected, consistent Christian walk and conversation.

For more than fifty years she had been a faithful member of our Methodist Zion—indeed, a Methodist of the model type, of deep piety, simple faith and ardent devotion to her church. She was the last of a noteworthy group, who were the founders of Soule Chapel—an interesting and prosperous charge in Noxubee county, Miss.,—to which, until her death-day, she manifested the most loyal adherence, although her age and infirmities for some years had denied her personal participation in its work and services.

In this good woman were harmoniously blended rare modesty, delicacy and refinement, with force of will, judgment and decision of character. Though uncompromising in her Christian integrity, such was the gentle tolerance of her nature that all the young folks were drawn to her, and grandma's room was entered without dread of austere lectures, or unsympathetic greeting. She was fond of reading, and in her latter days her Bible, hymnal and CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE became her daily food. Surrounded by her loving family, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, painlessly and peacefully she entered into life—the life that knows no ending. Loving hands and sorrowful hearts laid her body beneath the green sod in Soule Chapel Cemetery, in certain hope of a blessed resurrection.

A. E. HEARD.

CHRISTIAN—JOHN FRANKLIN CHRISTIAN was born in Bienville parish, La., Sept. 12, 1863, and departed this life near Columbia, La., June 15, 1891.

The subject of this sketch spent the most of his life in and near Pineville, La. He united with the M. E. Church, South, when but a small boy, and no one seemed to doubt his integrity and honesty as a true Christian. He was religiously trained by pious parents, and never departed from their precept and example. The family bore the right name, for they seemed to live truly a Christian life. The death of our young brother having failed so as not to be able to attend to business, he left this place about Jan. 1, last, where he spent his last moment with his youngest sister and other relatives in Caldwell parish, La. He was true to his church, living a consistent life, seeming to have no relish for the wickedness so prevalent around him. His end was peaceful and triumphant.

A short time before his departure he wrote to his brother and two absent sisters, telling them of his future prospect, and requesting them to meet him in glory. The parents and some of the children had preceded him to the glory world, and we trust that the rest of this Christian family will meet him safely on the other side. One by one our loved ones are gathering home.

J. F. WYNN.

FLETCHER—MARTHA J. FLETCHER was born in Jackson county, Miss., near Vancleave, on April 12, 1830, and died June 21, 1891, aged sixty-one years two months and twelve days. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1853. In 1855 she realized her acceptance with God during a meeting held at the Salem Camp Ground. She was happily married to Z. M. Fletcher, a son of Rev. Henry Fletcher, on Feb. 24, 1853, by John Cowart, M. H. S.

Sister Fletcher was a good Christian, a faithful companion, always had respect for the vow made when married. A devoted mother, a true friend, she spent a retired life, very seldom going from home. It was said by those who knew her, that no harm could be said of her. She leaves an aged companion, three daughters and one son to mourn her. It was hard for her loved ones to see her put under the sod; but they are cheered with the fact that they will see her at the last day. Her loved ones are more interested in heaven. Heaven is more attractive unto them. God grant that she, with God's goodness, may attract her children and relatives home to heaven.

HENDERSON—Whereas, The great Ruler of the universe has, in his infinite wisdom, removed from our midst our worthy and esteemed fellow-laborer, JOHN W. HENDERSON; And, whereas, The intimate relation and appreciation held during a long membership by him with the Methodist Sunday-school at Crystal Springs, Miss., makes it fitting that we record our high esteem of him; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the faithfulness manifested by him in our Sunday-school is worthy of our imitation, and will be held in grateful remembrance.

Resolved, That the sudden removal of such a noble young man from among us leaves a vacancy and shadow that will be deeply realized, and prove a grievous loss to us.

Resolved, That with deep sympathy with the afflicted mother and family of the deceased, we express an earnest desire that even so great a bereavement may be overruled for their highest good.

Resolved, That we have a copy of these resolutions recorded in our Sunday-school, one sent to the family, and we send one to the Meteor and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

WALKER—Mrs. MARY E. WALKER, wife of R. D. Walker, of Sturges, Miss., daughter of Rev. W. R. Raney, of the North Mississippi Conference, was born Oct. 12, 1861. She was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1871. She was married to R. D. Walker, March 2, 1881, and died June 2, 1891.

She was the mother of four children, and one having died, she left three little boys (one of them an infant of a few months), with the request that her parents would take them, bring them up, and train them as they had her. She died in the triumphs of a living faith; though this is not strange when we consider that she was the daughter, brought up and trained in the home of the Rev. W. R. Raney and his devoted wife.

A perfect picture of this pure woman, loving wife, tender, cheerful mother, faithful friend, gilded with the sunshine of Christian hope, in the unfading colors of Christian faith, and illustrated by divine inspiration, is to be found in Prov. xxxi, beginning at the tenth verse.

W. A. DOLLAR, P. C.

MOSS—Sister MARTHA A. MOSS was born March 31, 1826, in Rankin county, Miss.; was married in December, 1851, to W. H. Moss, and died in the faith, June 21, 1891.

Sister Moss joined the Christian Church at the age of twelve years. Removing from her old home after her marriage, she united with the M. E. Church, in which she lived a devoted, consistent Christian life. A zealous worker in the Master's vineyard, a devoted wife and mother. She left engraved on the minds of those who knew her the impress of a noble, Christian character. Her place in the church and Sunday-school will be hard to fill. May her loved ones take Christ for their model, as she did, and let us all pray that the Master will raise up others to take the place here of those he calls away from labor to rest, from earth to the skies!

K. S. ESPEDS.

WILSON—Mrs. N. L. WILSON was born in Copiah county, Miss., Feb. 24, 1826, and died in her native county, Jan. 21, 1891.

She leaves four children, who mourn a devoted and pious mother—two daughters and two sons. When she was very young she joined the Methodist Church, and when fifteen years of age she found the Savior precious to her soul. She first joined the church at Old Crystal Springs; but when the church was moved to the town of Crystal Springs, her membership was moved, and she has been a faithful member all these years. As her pastor, I visited her during her illness, and found her full of blessed hope of eternal life. May her children and grandchildren be faithful, and live so that they may meet her in heaven!

Echoes.

The best instrument will worry sensitive nerves if it be out of tune, or if it be used by unskillful hands. Sometimes very good people wound those nearest them, not because they have suddenly grown bad, or mean to be rude, but because of ill health or something that has thrown them out of their normal condition.—Methodist Protestant.

No agnosticism or scheme of mere ethical religion will ever prevail against Christianity, so long as the human heart breaks with anguish and the human understanding falters before the mystery of life. There is one sublime utterance which unlocks the problem of existence—"God is love;" and that utterance is found only in the religion of Jesus Christ.—Zion's Herald.

The oaks used in building ships are not found in cultivated fields, but in the wild forests, and are developed by virgin soil, rain and wind storms, as well as warmth and sunshine. So the grand spirits that are moving the world do not originate in the halls of luxury, but in lowly tenements and cabins of hardship and want—United Presbyterian.

Centenary Female College.

"There is no college to which I would commit my daughter with more confidence than to Centenary. Your enrollment is thorough, your faculty complete, and, above all, the home comforts given our daughters there commend the college to the young ladies themselves."—Rev. Sam P. Jones (Evangelist).

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years ought to know salt from sugar. Read what he says:

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours truly,
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.,
Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that can not be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.
F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props.,
Toledo, O.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Governor Campbell has been nominated by the Democrats of Ohio to succeed himself.

The National Bar Association of America meets at Nantasket Beach, Mass., on Aug. 5, to remain in session for three days. The president of the association is Judge Charles Marshall, of Baltimore.

A sale of 6,000 acres of land in Livingston parish was made on July 17 to a Pennsylvania sugar refiner. On the same day 10,000 acres of land in Grenada county, Miss., were sold to a syndicate with a capital of $150,000,000.

The tenth National Temperance Convention assembled in the First Methodist Church, in Saratoga, N. Y., on July 15. About twenty organizations were represented by 200 delegates from nearly every section of the United States.

A company has been formed in Kansas City to furnish cool air into any business house or residence by the ammonia process. The inventor of the new process claims that he can make ice at one-third the cost of its present production.

A big strike among the anthracite miners in Pennsylvania is possible. The companies are preparing for the trouble by bringing into this section large numbers of laborers fresh from Europe. The grievance of the employees is that the companies will not pay every two weeks, as the card calls for.

Thirty immigrants, all Russian Jews, are in the detention bureau at the Barge Office in New York City awaiting the decision of the Superintendent of Immigration. It is most probable that they will all be sent back, as each one has been "assisted," and the law on assisted immigrants is inexorable.

At the meeting of the Mississippi River Commission, in New York City, representations were made that $3,000,000 would be required to put the levees of Louisiana in a condition to stand a flood like that of last year. The actual allotment made by the Commission is $347,000 for Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas.

The plate mills of the Springfield (Ill.) Iron Company burned on July 19. It was leased to the Carbon Iron Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., and used in making steel plates for the armored cruiser being constructed by the government at San Francisco. The lighter machinery was ruined and the heavier machinery damaged.

The striking miners of Tennessee, who oppose convict labor in the mines, came into Briceville, on July 20, and, capturing the militia stationed there to preserve order, shipped them and the convicts to Knoxville. The mob numbered about 1,400 and the soldiers 107. The entire State militia has been ordered out to protect the convicts at work.

The Federation of Trades, of Chattanooga, Tenn., representing sixteen unions, held an indignation meeting on July 19 to consider the troubles at Coal Creek, when the free miners threaten to drive away convicts. The action of the State authorities was condemned in strong terms, as was the conduct of the mine owners, and the action of the miners indorsed. There is a possibility that the lessees of the State prison will throw up their contract and leave 1,500 men to be cared for.

FOREIGN.

Twenty-four foreign nations have now officially accepted the invitation to participate in the World's Fair.

There is a strike of railroad men in Paris. The police have dispersed the strikers from the railroad depots, where they had congregated, and the troops now guard the depots.

The passports regulations on the Alsace-Lorraine frontier have been so rigidly enforced by the German authorities that French commercial travelers have been seriously inconvenienced.

A meeting of ministers was held in the City Temple, London, on July 17, in support of the formation of a federation of the English-speaking people for international arbitration and universal peace.

The municipal authorities of Amsterdam, Holland, have decided to grant the Standard Oil Company a ten years' lease of sites for the erection of oil tanks, on condition that rent is to be paid in advance.

At the laying of a new corner-stone of a Methodist Church, at Durango, Mexico, last week, the participants were attacked by Catholics, and the officiating minister was struck by a stone and fell senseless. A detachment of police dispersed the crowd.

The city of Santiago, Chili, has been visited with the severest fire ever known in South America. The loss being estimated at over $2,000,000. The British legation was completely consumed, including all of the archives and personal property of the minister.

Since the emancipation of the slaves in Brazil the domestic service, as well as the agricultural labor of the republic, has been greatly demoralized, and many families find themselves entirely without servants, colored people (the former slaves) refusing to work.

The prosecution of the Jews has been somewhat relaxed. The decree for the expulsion of Jewish artisans from St. Petersburg has been indefinitely postponed and renewed orders have been sent to the press to refrain from publishing articles likely to excite animosity against the Jews.

The Bureau of American Republics is informed that the government of Peru has issued a supreme decree, declaring that religious feast days shall no longer interfere with the loading and unloading and the dispatch of vessels in the harbors of the republic. The sailing schedules of the steamships were very much interfered with by the frequency of feast days, on which the custom-houses were closed and the roustabouts refused to work.

Creole Female Tonic for diseases peculiar to the female sex, such as prolapsus uteri, weakness, irregularities, painful menstruation, is a cure provided by nature, and is quick and permanent in its effects.

Hotter the Weather Bigger the Proof.

As the weather grows warm, the sale of James Pyle's Pearline Washing Compound rapidly increases. This proves that many women recognize the fact that PEARLINE makes washing and cleaning very much easier than when done with the ordinary means. Proves also that summer clothing, being of delicate texture and color, will not stand the rough usage necessary when washed with soap, and establishes the fact that PEARLINE, in doing away with the rubbing, lessens the wear and tear and fills a very important place. Delightful for bathing in fresh or salt water. Its ingredients render it harmless to the most delicate skin. Especially during the hot weather it is to your advantage to use PEARLINE, and only humane to supply your servants with it, and thus lighten their labors; besides you insure much better results. Beware of imitations. JAMES PYLE, New York.

The Christian and His Graces—No. 6,

BY AN OLD MINISTER.

"And to temperance, patience."

The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews says, "For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." St. Paul says, "Be patient toward all men." And there is need—some are so slow, some so rash, some so stupid, and some so indifferent, that all make demands on our patience. So St. James says, "Let patience have her perfect work." The Master said to his disciples, in view of the wrongs and outrages bigots and cruel fanatics would inflict on them, "In patience possess ye your souls." Some have regarded patience as a mere passive, and not a heroic, virtue. Such thinkers have forgotten that it is as great, or a greater act of grace, to suffer than it is to do the will of God. To remain inactive under fire is sometimes not only eminently strategic and important, but is a greater proof of devotion to principle and unfaltering courage than the most gallant charge.

Patience has been defined to be the "calm endurance of evil for God's sake." There will, we suppose, be no credit given for patience in enduring the ills we, by our sins and follies, have brought on ourselves; but the patient endurance of evils beyond our control, we shall hear, not of merit, but of grace, the comfortable words, "Well done;" "enter ye into the joy of your Lord."

In our Christian life we find, in all relations, we need patience—as parents, as Sunday-school teachers, and as secular teachers—in our dealings with children so wayward, so thoughtless, so hard to interest and help. We need patience with servants, often so ignorant, so careless, and so idle. We need it with employers—in their worries they are sometimes hasty and hard to please. We need patience with the sick—they often seem so complaining and so fickle, and sometimes so self-willed. We shall find great need of patience in the long delays—our plans move to completion so slowly, and others on whom we are waiting are so tardy or forgetful. Then, sometimes after long waiting and the exercise of much patience, we are called to be patient under the disappointment of some long-cherished hope. In suffering, if long continued, what a tremendous strain on our patience! We should remember we are finite; that we can look over but a fraction of the vast field of providential things. How absurd and petulant was Jonah when he impatiently exclaimed, "I do well to be angry!" His little personal reputation as a prophet seemed in danger of suffering discount. How ridiculous Xerxes made himself for all time by impatiently ordering the sea to be lashed and bound with a great chain for presuming to break his bridge of boats across the Hellespont! I suppose most of us forget, when we repine and complain against Providence, that we are really criticising God, and intimating that we could have done better if we had had our way. The patience of faith saith, "All thou sendest me in mercy given." In the early stages of his great trials, Job exhibited wonderful patience, even after fortune, health and children were gone, saying, "I will trust, although he slay me." Moses, with two recorded exceptions, showed great patience under the perverseness, rebellions and fickleness of the tribes. It requires great patience to work on, even in a good cause, when there seems no success, and almost no hope; but many modern missionaries have done so, and have reaped a bountiful harvest, because they "fainted not." Many Christian writers and commentators, because they have not had patience to wait for "the day and hour of which no man knoweth," have rushed into rash speculations and the wildest guesses, to the hurt of the faith of many.

No men more need patience than the ascetic class. They are always tempted to sourness and uncharitable severity. We are told that the Mohammedans, during their annual monthly fast, eating nothing while the sun is shining, are more than usually quarrelsome and contentious. So also it is said of the devotees and ascetics of India, who practice severe austerities, that they exhibit a general irritability of temper. The gentle grace of patience comes in as an essential element of a well-rounded character, especially in those who are particularly self-restraining. Calvin, Baxter, Andrew Fuller, all showed at times great sternness of character, which nothing less than the grace of patient gentleness could restrain from harshness. But patience is not the apathy of Gallio, nor the stolid indifference of Hindoo ascetics, nor of Simeon Stylites on his pillar, nor the insensibility of the monks of La Trappe. These austere restraints are not Christian patience, but mere painful bodily exercises that profit little. Nor is it the sinful tolerance of Eli. Christian patience well comforts with the zeal of Knox and Wesley in their uncompromising rebukes of sin.

Notes from Japan.

At our last quarterly meeting I had the pleasure of baptizing four and receiving them, together with a son of Rev. C. K. Marshall (Dzan Tsezeh) of our China Mission, who had been baptized in infancy, into the church. Two of the number deserve special mention. One of them, with her husband, who was baptized several months ago, has received considerable persecution because of her profession of Christianity. At first she was stolen from her husband; but, returning to him, she was disinherited, even her clothing being taken from her. Her mother feels that she has disgraced the family, and is exceedingly bitter against her, even going so far as to plead with her idol gods that her daughter may die, and the family disgrace be thus removed. The other is an old lady, seventy years of age; her son and daughter-in-law are both members of the church, and are very faithful. The day before she was baptized she said to me, "For a long time I have known nothing about God; but now that I have heard of him, I intend to serve him the best I can." And I have no doubt but that she will, and that, at last, she will find her way to heaven, and have a higher seat up yonder than many who were reared in Christian lands, and have known of God all their days; for, notwithstanding her old age and extreme infirmities, we have no one who is more faithful or earnest in their church duties.

The remark of this old lady, in regard to her long ignorance of the existence of the true God, touched me deeply. How glad I was that at last she had heard, and that it was my privilege to receive her into the church of God! But what about the millions all around us who have not heard of the true God? Whose fault is it? Certainly not their own! "How shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" And how can they be sent unless they are willing to go, and the church of God is willing to send them? Here is where the fault lies! Men and women have failed in going, and the church has failed in sending. If it were not so, if the church had measured up to its duty, then in this glad day of grace, in the year of our Lord 1891, there would be no gray-haired man or woman in all the world who could say, "I have never heard of the true God." And yet in these lands of the East, there are hundreds of millions who are without a knowledge of God and without hope in the world! And they are dying, dying by thousands every day; going down in dark despair into Christless graves, and into a future unlit by one single ray of hope, and somebody is responsible!

They are marching down the road of death,
A thousand million strong;
A soul is lost at every breath,
Of this tremendous throng.

How long, O Lord, how long! shall these things be? Thy church abundantly able to obey the command of thy Son to "preach the gospel to every creature," and yet allowing the decades and the centuries to hurry by, with their cargo of immortal souls bound for the judgment bar of a righteous God, and scarcely putting forth an effort towards their salvation! Holding in their hands the bread of life, and yet refusing to give it to the starving millions all around them! Wonderful possibilities open to the church of God! Remarkable opportunities presented to her! Wide-open doors everywhere! Scarcely a let or a hindrance to the onward movement of the gospel in any heathen land, and yet the church doing so little towards the salvation of the world as to merit the reproach, from a high authority, that she is but "playing at missions." It has been within the power of the followers of Christ ere this, having a sufficiency of men and money at their command, to have evangelized this world ten times over, had they been faithful to the trust left them by their Master. Aye, with the resources locked up in the coffers of her members today, if laid on the altar of consecration, the church of our Lord could publish the glad tidings of salvation to every son and daughter of earth within the next decade, so that by the beginning of the new century there would be no one who could say, "I have never heard of the true God."

I would repeat and emphasize the statement that somebody is responsible for the fact that there are hundreds of millions on the globe to-day who have never heard of the world's Redeemer. Somebody is responsible! We can not escape the issue by saying, "The church is responsible," for the church has millions of members, and it is too vague and too indefinite to charge the church with the fault. The responsibility involved in this failure of duty is an individual responsibility; for the church is an aggregate of individuals, and the duty of the whole is but the duty of each individual composing that whole. It follows, then, that the fault is the fault of each member of the church, unless, perchance, there be those in the church who have measured up to their full duty in the matter. The thing, then, for you and me to do is to ask ourselves the question: "Have I, as a follower of him who died for the world, and who commanded his disciples to give the glad news to every creature, have I met my duty in this matter?" Not, "Am I interested in foreign missions?" but, "Am I doing everything towards the salvation of the heathen that God requires of me?" Let us remember that we will have to face this question at the judgment, and it would be well to see to it that we can answer it now in such a way as will bring to us the answer, "Well done!"

Rev. S. Shaw and wife have just been added to our mission in Japan. They come from the North Georgia Conference, and have the reputation of being earnest, tireless and successful workers. They have entered upon their labors at Yamaguchi with a zeal and an interest which promise large success.

Bro. and Sister Shaw come under a pledge of support from the Sunday-schools of the Augusta district, North Georgia Conference. Previous to their departure, they visited all these schools and addressed the children, and thus interested them in the missionary cause. In doing this they have started a work which I trust will be the beginning of a movement throughout the church towards the enlisting of our Sunday-schools in work for foreign missions. Why should not the Sunday-school children in every one of the stronger districts in the church be represented by a missionary and his wife in the foreign field? In the weaker Conferences two or three districts might combine in a movement of this kind, or even a whole Conference.

I have been told that the M. E. Church obtains over $300,000 annually for foreign missions from the Sunday-schools. See what the Rose Buds of the Virginia Conference have accomplished under the admirable leadership of the faithful and devoted "Uncle Larry." The writer of this had an illustration in California of what the children of the church can do for missions if only enlisted in the work. At one church on the circuit the children of the Sunday-school paid during the year more than enough to meet the entire assessment on the work for foreign missions, and this on a charge where the collections for that cause had never before been paid in full. Nor did this work, on the part of the children, interfere with the other collections taken from the church, since for the first time in its history all of its assessments were met.

Who can estimate the vast and far-reaching possibilities wrapped up in a movement for missions among the children of the church? If the Sunday-schools of our district can send a man and his wife to the field and promise to support them indefinitely, what could not all the children of our church do if enlisted in this work! Apart from the monetary results which would accrue therefrom, there would be that which would be of greater and more lasting benefit to the cause of missions, an educational benefit which would give the church, in the years to come, a membership alive to their duty on this, the supreme question of the Master's kingdom, having been trained to it from their childhood.

May the Lord of the harvest raise up an "Uncle Larry" from among us who will be able to gather all the children of our Zion into a movement of this kind and to lead them unto victory. Amen!

Letter from China.

During the past six weeks Central China has been greatly agitated over riotous disturbances at various places, rumors of which have, doubtless, already reached you.

I should like to give you some of the details, but limited time renders it impossible. I send instead, by to-day's mail, several copies of a Shanghai daily, containing rather full accounts of some of the disturbances. From these I think you will be able to get a clearer idea of the state of affairs than would be possible in any statement I could give you, personally.

The information contained in the North China Daily News is quite reliable, and I hope you will use it in whatever manner seems best to you. Dr. Parker's letter, which occurs in the issue of June 16, we consider of special value. Some of us are exceedingly desirous that the friends at home who are interested in us and our work in China should have no misapprehensions as to the condition of things. Hence this letter accompanying the papers to which I have just referred.

The situation is, indeed, grave, and we can not know what the outcome will be, but we have much reason for gratitude for the protection which has already been extended to us in these troublous times, and we trust ourselves and work entirely to him who has promised to keep and to deliver.

Those of us stationed at Shanghai have felt that we were in no special danger. In fact, a disturbance at this port has hardly seemed among the probabilities, though preparations have been made in case there should be any difficulty. With our friends in the interior it has been very different. Much threatening has been done, and riotous outbreaks made at many places. In the midst of these trying times our hearts are filled with gratitude to God for having considered the lives of his children "precious in his sight." With the exception of the single instance of the Wusuch tragedy, no life has been lost. Truly we have great cause for gratitude and praise.

We ask that your prayers be offered most earnestly in behalf of God's children in this distant land who are truly living in perilous times. Pardon brevity.

Letter from Japan.

I have just returned from a trip through the Inland Sea, visiting Hiroshima, Oita and Todotsu. Bro. Waters is presiding elder and preacher of his entire district, or was until Bro. Shaw arrived, whose work is in Yamaguchi, over a hundred miles from Hiroshima. He is much encouraged in his work, and I enjoyed spending a Sabbath with our brethren and sisters there, at which time I baptized Bro. and Sister Waters' little boy.

From there I went to Oita, where Bro. Wilson is laboring and doing good work. There is every prospect of a rich ingathering of souls in that place. I wish we had a missionary and his wife to assist Bro. Wilson. There is great need for a lady worker in the church there, and the native Christians are begging us to send a married man and his wife to them. The people are kind and pleasant, and many who are not yet Christians have taken great interest in Bro. Wilson and his work, and were sorry to see him leave Oita, even for a short time. From Oita, in easy reach by steamer, there are many important places where we have work; but Bro. Wilson, being alone, he can not visit these places often. He has now a good house, and on land purchased by the mission. He is in great need of a church-building on the same lot. He thinks if he could get three hundred and fifty dollars in gold, and with what he has been able to collect (some forty or fifty dollars), he would be able to put up a convenient little church at once. Could not some lover of Jesus help in this good work, and give us a church-building in Oita? It would, I am sure, prove a lasting blessing to that people.

From Oita I went to Todotsu, to hold the quarterly meeting there. We had good meetings, and the church there is growing. We hope soon to commence building; are negotiating for the land now.

Had a good deal of rough and unpleasant weather while absent; but the Lord was gracious to me, and I passed through all in safety. Heard, before reaching home, that four members of our mission—Dr. and Mrs. Wainright and Bro. and Sister Utley—had suffered from poisoning, which was for some days very serious; but, we thank God! their lives have been spared to us and to the church. It was from the use of condensed milk which had been opened about two weeks. All are out of danger, and about well again.

We have just had the closing exercises of our school in Kobe, and three young men in the theological department graduated, and are now ready for work. The exercises were very pleasant, and the weather was all that could be asked.

Our greatest need in Japan now is preachers of the gospel, both foreign and native, to go everywhere preaching the Word of God.

Ever your brother in Christ,

There is no country in the world where it is more difficult to get at the causes of things than China. The facts themselves we learn by degrees, and after stripping off a great deal of fanciful accretion; but the causes of the facts, or, in modern terminology, their "true inwardness," it is very difficult to arrive at. There are no purely native newspapers and no public meetings, and the only official explanations that we get of what is going on are found in the memorials in the Peking Gazette, which may or may not represent the true state of things. We get a good deal of our information from the missionaries, who mix with the people much more than the consular or customs officials do, and talk with them on subjects of all kinds, but always with the disadvantage that the Chinese is so courteous by nature, that he will always try to tell you what he thinks you will like to hear, rather than what is the bald, and possibly unpleasant, fact. So it arises that while we have had several explanations of the recent outbreaks, we have not one of which we can say with certainty, "This is the true one." The true one may be, that all the causes have united to bring the sedition to a head. Our correspondent, "Spes," whose letter will be found in another column, goes back to the time of the Taiping rebellion to diagnose the case. The victorious imperial troops disbanded at the close of the rebellion were never re-absorbed into the population as the troops were after the American civil war, but have remained in their idleness a standing menace to order. They have been kept quiet by being placed on the pension list by the viceroys, and in this we have the kernel of the story of Tseng Kuo-chuan's monthly subscription of Tls. 50 000 to the Kolao Hui. On several occasions before Tseng Kuo-chuan died, the Empress-Dowager ordered him to reduce the expenses at Nanking by striking all these pensioners off the pay rolls. Tseng Kuo-chuan always replied that it was impossible, and as a concession to him, personally, the demand was not pressed. When he died it was determined at Peking that the economy should be carried out; but it was felt that only a Hunan man could do it, and accordingly Liu Kun-yi was recalled from his retirement and sent to Nanking. He has been vigorously paring down the pay-list, and this is one of the causes of discontent. There is nothing surprising in nearly all these braves and many of the officials themselves being, or having been, members of the Kolao Hui, for it was originally a military benevolent society, not necessarily political at all, though it has now become so.

Our correspondent mentions as another cause the general discontent in the country with the present dynasty. We have generally been inclined to believe that the Chinese, as a whole, care nothing whether their Emperor is a Manchu or a Chinaman, and that the Chinese have, as ever, so thoroughly assimilated their Manchu conquerors that the latter are really Chinese. We learn, however, that there was very great dissatisfaction at Nanking when rumor was spread there that Tseng Kuo-chuan was to be succeeded by a Tartar. But the discontent of which our correspondent writes is more with the administration than with the nationality of the Emperor. The universal corruption of the official class, which is constantly being testified to in the Peking Gazette, is greatly resented by the "thinking and suffering" millions, and they are disposed to throw the whole into the caldron, in the hope that a better and purer government may possibly emerge.

Then there are the thousands of people who have been thrown out of work for the time by the introduction of foreign improvements, and who do not readily adapt themselves, so conservative are they by nature, to their new environment. The Chinese commercial traveler is penetrating everywhere, not with samples, but with a stock of foreign goods, and he pushes them energetically into consumption. The margin that the Chinese head of the family or housewife has to buy things with, after the barest necessaries of life are provided, is so small that every cash spent on foreign goods is so much withdrawn from some neighboring shopkeeper or artisan, and thus discontent with foreigners and their wares is fomented. It is not a complete truth that the present movement is not directed against foreigners at all: it is, doubtless, to a great extent intended to embroil the government with foreigners; but opportunity is taken at the same time to work off some hatred of foreigners. Our correspondent, "Spectator," showed in the letter which we published on Wednesday that the opposition to the propagation of Christianity can not be called entirely unaccountable; and as long as the printing-presses of Hunan are allowed to pour out their thousands of copies of the "Death-Blow to Corrupt Doctrines," and similar books, so long will the people believe that the missionaries, and the Roman Catholics especially, are really guilty of the crimes of which these books accuse them. Here are all these combustibles lying about ready to the hand of anyone who sees any advantage to himself in setting fire to them, and when they are once ignited, it is not so easy to quench them. "With such a rotten and corrupt officialdom, and with grievances, real or imaginary, that the Chinese suffer from and strive to remedy in such a lawless manner, is it not the duty of foreign nations at once to take far-seeing steps to protect their commercial interests, and the lives of their subjects and citizens?"—North China Daily News.

Note from Rev. T. B. Holleman.

Seeing reference to myself in the last copy of the ADVOCATE, I would say to my brethren that for eight weeks I have been in the hands of the faithful physician and nurses, who have watched me through a lingering fever. One week ago the fever left me, since which time I have been slowly, but steadily gaining. During all this time the interest and kind thoughtfulness of my people at home, as well as my friends in Atlanta, have been very comforting to me. By the blessing of God, I hope to be with my people again by Sept. 1.

LITTLE THINGS.

A good-bye kiss is a little thing,
With your hand on the door to go,
But it takes the venom out of the sting
Of a thoughtless word or a cruel fling
That you made an hour ago.

A kiss of greeting is sweet and rare,
After the toil of the day,
But it smoothed the furrows out of the care,
And lines on the forehead you once called fair,
In the years that have flown away.

'Tis a little thing to say, "You are kind,"
"I love you, my dear," each night,
But it sends a thrill through the heart to find
That love is tender, as love is blind,
As we climb life's rugged height.

We starve each other for love's caress,
We take, but we do not give;
It seems so easy some soul to bless,
But we dole love grudgingly, less and less,
'Till 'tis bitter and hard to live.

Bro. Armstrong's "Two Obstacles."

For the removal of the first one touching the differences about "sanctification," read Rom. xiv, 3-5: "Let not him that eateth, despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not, judge him that eateth" (and let not him that believeth in "sanctification" despise him that believeth not; and let not him which believeth not, judge him that believeth): "for God has received him. Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth: yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand. One man esteemeth one day above another: another man esteemeth every day alike." ("One man esteemeth one 'blessing' above another: another man esteemeth every 'blessing' alike.") "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

Let everybody apply the above admonition of St. Paul to the differences of opinion about the first and "the second blessing," and govern themselves accordingly.

And as to the second "obstacle" mentioned by Bro. Armstrong, let the term, "those professing religion," simply be put in the place of "those professing sanctification," in the language of his own closing paragraph, and see how it reads: "Some" (professing religion) "we have known to stand up publicly and declare themselves free from any inclination to sin" (who that has been "born again" has never felt so, at times, at least?), "never losing temper" (do none of "those professing religion" enjoy uniformly good and even temper?), "etc., when, at the same time, it was known that they" ("those professing religion") "were irritable in temper, and very intolerant toward others holding different views, declaring all such to be on their way to hell, and becoming furiously mad (!) at the thought of it. Instead of having a sweeter temper, and leading a more consistent life, they" ("those professing religion") "seem to become much worse than before!"

Now, is it not evident that this same "bill of indictment" stands equally as true against "those professing religion" simply as against "those professing sanctification"? Bro. A. has arraigned both parties before the world; but both don't seem to be prosecuted with the same spirit exactly. Why not? Would it not be equally as just to pass sweeping judgment upon all "those professing religion" as to pass it upon all "those professing sanctification"? Let everybody "tote fair." It is greatly to be lamented that all "professing religion" and all "professing sanctification" do not "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," and live uniformly consistent with their professions. But, because there is some counterfeit in circulation, will anybody discard all money? And would it be wise or just to conclude that none of "those professing religion have a sweeter temper, and lead a more consistent life," but that "they" (all) "seem to become much worse than before," because some "lose their temper, and become irritable and intolerant toward others holding different views," after "standing up publicly and declaring themselves 'professors of religion'"? If anything is proven by thus arraigning "those professing sanctification," may not too much be proven, on the same principle, to suit those making the arraignment?—for the very same indictment would be, at least, equally true and strong, and could be run with equal propriety and effect against "those professing religion." But what good can be accomplished by brethren scandalizing one another, and that before the world, who will be provoked, by such wrangling strife, to say, "See how they hate one another," instead of being constrained, by "seeing their good works" and "brotherly love," to say, "See how they love one another"? Don't put a stumbling-block in anybody's way of being good; do let everybody be as good as possible. Read Matt. xviii, 6, and ponder it well. Don't "offend one of these little ones," in view of the awful denunciation against it!

Let somebody, who is competent and impartial, put this matter to the experimentum crucis by collecting reliable statistics showing the comparative consistency of "those professing religion" and "those professing sanctification," and if no more inconsistency can be shown against those advocating "holiness" than against those opposing it, everybody had better heed the wise and conservative admonition of "Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people: Refrain from these men" (advocating "holiness"), "and let them alone; for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught; but if it be of God, ye can not overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." For the higher an archer aims, the higher he plants his arrow; and the holier one tries to be, the holier he or she becomes. Then, in the name of God and common sense, let everybody be just as holy as they can possibly be. There must be a great deal more danger of not being holy enough than of being too holy! It is high time for all this crimination and recrimination among brethren to stop, for it is damaging those indulging in the uncharitable bitterness (!), as well as the cause of God, which both parties love.

Let all have that "charity that doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil." Let brethren "agree to disagree"; but let "brotherly love continue."

The First Answer.

In the ADVOCATE, of July 16, there is an article headed with this question, "Can't It Be Cured?" The question is short—four words, each a monosyllable—and the prosperity of the church, in a great measure, is involved in the way in which this question is answered—not by the pen and type, but by action. "If the watchman see the sword coming, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand." To the minister this is a fearful warning. But how shall the trumpet be sounded, for it must give a certain sound? I have been connected with the Sabbath-school for over forty years, as teacher, superintendent, and preacher in charge. All this time I have seen this evil of our children not attending on the preached Word, and the evil is more prevalent in our cities and towns than it is at our country churches. For this evil there is but one remedy which I can see, and it is not directly in the preacher, superintendent, or teacher. There seems to be a tendency too often on the part of parents to relegate all the responsibility of the religious training to the Sabbath-school. They do not go with their children, and often take no interest in teaching them the lesson during the week. Sunday morning comes, parents often lie in bed late, and this one act of the parent gives the little branch a curve of indifference. Add to this, if the child professes the least impatience for fear of being late, there is a scold, and often a threat, after this manner: "Go off; you only want to get off to play with those bad boys and girls, and I want you to come home as soon as Sunday-school is over."

Now, let us reverse the order of procedure on Sabbath morning. I know it is often the case that both parents can not attend the Sabbath-school; but, then, I do think if there was that interest in the salvation of our children that there should be, parents would manifest more interest by a little more self-denial, and go with their children, having shown interest during the week in learning the lesson with them, and then teach both by example and precept.

Now, here is the word which no superintendent, teacher or preacher can give, and the only demand which will, in my humble judgment, cure the evil, and that must be given by the parent: "Now, do you stay and hear the sermon; I will be there; and do you come in and sit by me or your mama." Let this be done and executed, and will not the evil be cured? Parents, will you not help the church to save your children?

Now, as pastors, let us go to work and set this evil before parents in a prayerful spirit around the family fireside, and we think in this way the evil may be to some extent remedied. We know the excuse parents use in this matter, which is about this: "It is too long to keep the children to attend the Sabbath-school, and then to listen to the sermon;" and this talked of in the presence of the children, and that, too, often at the breakfast table. Here is another hard bend given to the natural disposition, which no pastor can hope to straighten, unless divine grace comes to his aid; and the crook is made by papa and mama without thought of the evil which is being done to their children. We think it arises from the want of reflection on the habits of children. A child can rest in five or ten minutes, and there is most always given this length of time between the dismissal of the school and the sermon. So here let parental authority and example come in, and we can have our children to be regular attendants on the preached Word. Parental authority is the only remedy that can cure this evil, in my humble judgment.

Big Cane, La.

Letter from Rev. E. B. Foust.

A communication from me, relative to myself, will, perhaps, be of interest to many readers of the ADVOCATE.

I am living at Rocky Mount, Bossier parish, La. It was my privilege to live and preach the gospel seven years in this parish—three years on the South Bossier circuit and four on the North Bossier. A good friend here furnishes me with a comfortable house, free of rent, and goods at wholesale prices. I find that I have many friends here, some of whom have proved their friendship in a substantial way; for which I am thankful. My health is good. With great difficulty I can walk a little by the aid of crutches. I will never be able to walk with as much ease as I can roll myself in my chair. The money contributed by dear friends last year, during my illness, has enabled me to live and keep out of debt. May the Lord bless them all abundantly! I have been preaching some during the year. I thank God that I am still able to do so. Preaching helps me spiritually. Life would be a burden to me now were it not for the grace of God. The Lord has been very good to me, and his grace sustains me in my helpfulness; and, thank God! I can trust him without murmuring.

E. B. FOUST.

To the Executive Committee of the Ministerial Educational Aid Association.

There will be a meeting of the Executive Committee at Crystal Springs Camp Ground, August 18, 1891. We earnestly request that all the committee, and also as many of the members as can possibly come, be present, as there is business of importance to be looked into, besides the consideration of applications for aid during next session.

M. L. BURTON, Sec.

A WORD.

Referring to the call of Bro. M. L. Burton, secretary of the Ministerial Educational Aid Association of the Mississippi Conference, I wish to emphasize the following points:

1. We have five enrolled beneficiaries.

2. We have three applicants on file, with several others to come.

3. We have only about $300 to meet the demands on us. Let me appeal to my brethren in the ministry and our lay members to help us speedily. Remember the meeting at Hennington Camp Ground, August 18.

R. D. NORSWORTHY,
First Vice-President.

A Correction.

I am requested to state exactly what the Sardis District Conference did in regard to Millsaps College. Here it is: "We are glad to note the continued progress towards the establishment of a male school in the institution of Millsaps College.

"Resolved, That we hereby pledge our hearty support to this institution."

The running report I sent you was written on my own motion, as a correspondent, and not as secretary, and by order of the body. It seems that I inadvertently wrote the word "location," which, it is claimed, enlarged the scope and meaning of the action taken. I mistook the "location" for a part of "the continued progress towards the establishment of a male school in the institution of Millsaps College." I have been requested to correct this, which I now do, by giving, word for word and letter for letter, precisely what was done.

R. G. PORTER,
Sec. Sardis District Conference.

POSTAL CARD REPORTS.

—Rev. B. F. Alexander writes: "I am at Plaquemine Brulee assisting Bro. Blocker in a meeting. The church and the parsonage are built on the exact plot of ground on which we held our great camp meeting in June, 1856, at which more than one hundred souls were converted. I met the congregation last night and preached my first sermon on the occasion; and, indeed, since the war, the first. Though the house was full, there were only three persons present whom I recognized as having ever seen here before. The people are dead and gone. That grand old grove! The very trees are superannuated! And some of them 'are not.' (Read the above four lines to Dr. Walker, and he will tell you a story.) We are looking for a great work of grace here in the next ten days."

—Rev. J. R. Whittington, P. C., writes from Meadville circuit: "The dead is made alive, praise the Lord, and Christ is once more enthroned at old Meadville Church. All are stirred from the great deep of their hearts. Never was a grander work done! All are inquiring the way. Men at the altar never there before. Others talk it on the street—am going to live a better man, a better woman. Young men come to the preacher on street and parsonage weeping, and asking us to pray for them. All of which let God have the glory. Bros. Simmons and Guice were with us, and preached with great power and liberty. Nine accessions. Go to Nebo to-night to dethrone Satan. Pray for us."

—Rev. J. G. Cammack writes from Carthage, Miss.: "Our third Quarterly Conference convened on July 11 and 12, and was attended with much delight. Baptized two infants, received six into the church during the quarter. Bro. A. F. Watkins came with Bro. Johnston, and after making a stirring appeal in behalf of Christian education, took up a collection for Millsaps College, which resulted in a subscription of $236.50. We are moving along reasonably well in these parts. Crops good; health, generally, very good. And now we need a great revival all over the whole country. Brethren, pray for it."

—Rev. R. A. Meek writes from Carrollton, Miss.: "Bishop Galloway was with us yesterday, and preached two masterly sermons to large and appreciative congregations. Eloquent, profound and spiritual, he is, indeed, a power in the pulpit. At the eleven o'clock service he baptized four infants, one of which bore the name of Charles Galloway Bingham. This charge continues in good condition. The attendance upon the ordinances of the church is fair, and collections are well in hand. We have had fourteen accessions up to this date."

—Rev. J. F. Wynn writes from Pineville, La.: "Bro. R. M. Walker has been with me in a meeting, eight miles from Pineville, this week. We had some bright conversions and eight candidates for church membership. We have baptized thirty-eight children up to date, and thirty-nine persons have presented themselves for membership by letter and otherwise. Of course, our people are opposed to the Lottery."

—J. V. Penn writes from Homewood circuit: "I closed a fine meeting last week at Zion Grove Church. Did all the preaching myself. Eight accessions, twenty-odd conversions and reclamations, and the entire church blest. They propose to erect a new and commodious building before Conference. More next week."

FROM THE WORK.

GRENADA CIRCUIT.

This is my first year in this part, having spent all of my Conference life in the Corinth district, which commenced in '74, in the north part of the State. We think the farther south, the lower the lands, the more malaria, hence the more sickly; but so far our health has been as good as ever before. Our circuit owns a parsonage in the enterprising little city of Grenada. A house with rooms and closets enough to accommodate the most numerous family in our bounds. We have four churches and one side appointment. Though our membership is scattered more than any we have served, we have been able to visit all their homes but two. We find this people high-toned, generous-hearted and liberal. Wife says they make her feel on her arrival at their homes as if she had known them all the while. You know this is a pleasant experience for an itinerant's wife. Our assessments, as ordered by the Conference, are well in hand. With the crop prospect in view (which is good) we expect to clear the decks. We greatly need a revival of religion in our hearts, and a revival of church improvements, both of which we hope to have soon. At Spring Hill, hard by, sleeps the dust of our beloved Joseph E. Travis and John F. Markham, both of precious memory; though dead, yet speaketh.

May I say something of Grenada Collegiate Institute, our own Conference school? It has been my privilege and pleasure to visit this school ever and anon since my coming here. I have been forcibly struck with the decorum of the college family, with the grace and ease at the table, going to and from, the prudence observed for health, the care over their morals. The thoroughness in all departments taught will not be surpassed in any of her sister colleges, as was demonstrated at the close of the late session. Brethren, let us rally to our own school, and show our appreciation for it and its valuable prosperity. I don't see how we, as loyal Methodists of North Mississippi Conference, can send elsewhere as long as this institution is ours, and the promise of as faithful work being done as has been done in this school up to the present. The president, Thomas J. Newell, needs no commendation from us to those who know him; but for the benefit of those who are not acquainted with him, let us modestly say he is a Christian gentleman from head to foot. A wide-awake, progressive educator, abreast with the times; associated with a corps of teachers that will do credit to any of our institutions of a similar character.

D. W. BABB.

P. S.—Excuse me; I intended to say the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is growing on the people, and is well circulated in our work. We talk for it.
